SCHEDULE—ENACTMENTS REPEALED.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT, 1872.

ACT NO. 1 OF 1872.

[15th March, 1872.]

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate, define and amend the law of Evidence; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Scope of the Act.—This Act does not contain the whole law of evidence governing this country. Section 2 of the Act saves rules of evidence contained in any Statute, Act or Regulation in force. In Re Radolph Stallman, 15 C. W. N. 1053=39 C. 164=14 C. L. J. 375.

Lex Fori.—"The law of evidence is the lex fori which govern the Courts. Whether a witness is competent or not : whether certain matter requires to be proved by writing or not : whether a certain evidence proves a certain fact or not : that is to be determined by the law of the country where the question arises, where the remedy is sought to be enforced, and where the Court sits to enforce it." Per Lord Brougham in Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Junction Railway Company. 3 H. L. C. I.

English decisions.—The English decisions relating to evidence can be relied upon in India. The rules of evidence are subject to the general principles of jurisprudence. Annaji v. Emperor, 39 M. 449=28 M. L. J. 329. This act has codified the English law of evidence, with few exceptions. Gujju Lal v. Fateh Lal, 6 C. 171 6 C. L. R. 439 ; see also 17 B. 129; 4 B. 576. But the Act is not servile copy of the English Law. 10 B. 439.

History of the Law of Evidence.—"Reasoning, the rational method of settling disputed questions, is the modern substitute for certain formal and mechanical tests which flourished among our ancestors for centuries, and in the midst of which the trial by jury emerged. When two men to-day settle which is the best man by a prize fight we get an accurate notion of the old Germanic trial. Who is it that 'tries' the question? The men themselves. There are referees and rules of the game, but no determination of the dispute on grounds of reason—by the rational method. So it was with 'trial by battle' in our old law ; the issue of right, in a writ of right, including all elements of law and fact, was 'tried' by this physical struggle, and the Judges of the Common Pleas act, like the referee at a prize-fight, simply to administer the procedure, the rules of the game. So of the King's Bench in Criminal Appeals ; and so sat Richard II at the trial of the appeal of treason between Bolingbroke and Norfolk, as Shakespeare represents it in the play. So of the various ordeals ; the accused party 'tried' his own case by undergoing the given requirement as to hot iron, or water, or the crumb. So of the oath ; the question, both law and fact, was 'tried' merely by the oath, with or without fellow swearers. The old 'trial by witness' was a testing of the question in like manner by their mere oath. So a record was said to 'try' itself. And so when out of the midst of these methods first came the trial by jury, it was the jury's oath, or rather their verdict, that tried the case. How this method of trial came to swallow up the others, and then to lose its chief features and become shaped into an instrument of our modern purely rational procedure, is a long story, and is not for this place. But now, when we use the phrase 'trial' and 'trial by jury' we mean a rational ascertainment of facts, and a rational ascertaining and application of rules. What was formerly tried by the method of force or the mechanical following of form is now tried by the method of reason.—Thayer, Cases on Evidence. Mr. Wigmore divides the period of development of the law of evidence into marked periods. According to him the first period is from the primitive time upto the 12th century, thence to the sixteenth, thence to the seventeenth, thence to 1790 A. D., thence to 1830 and thence to the present time. As regards development during the first period no reliable data are available—though certain rules can be traced up to that earliest time. The next three centuries marked the establishment of the trial by jury and the separation of the process of pleading and procedure from that of proof. Between 1500 A. D., and 1700 A. D., the foundation of the present system was laid. During that period we find the regulation of the competency of witnesses, the rules of privileges and privileged communication, the rules for attorneys, the compulsory attendance of witnesses, the privilege against self-criminations the parol evidence rule, and the enactment of the Statute of Frauds. The fourth period of ninety years, saw the final establishment of cross-examination by counsel, the rule for the impeachment and corroboration of witness, the "best evidence" doctrine, and publication of the first treatise on the law of evidence, by chief Baron Gilbert. The next forty years (1790-1830) saw a tremendous increase of the rulings upon evidence there being more than in the preceding two centuries. The thirty years ending with 1860 will ever be associated with the names of Bentham, Brougham and Denham—Burr-Jones, 6. In 1872, the Indian Evidence Act was enacted which is based on English law.

Origin of the Law of Evidence.—In the submission of the facts which constitute the evidence in a, there have been embarrassments, real and imaginary, which have resulted in the development of a set of rules. These rules relate to the use of such facts in Court as evidence, and make up the "law of evidence". The embarrassments referred to above may be attributed, in the early stages of law, mainly to the jury—the one feature of the English judicial system in which it differs from all others. The jury, from the time it began to take on the character of an arbiter of facts, must have been a disturbing element in the work of the Court. It was an uncertain quantity, which into the eyes of the Judge, needed to be guarded against.

When the jury existed merely as body of witnesses, supposed by familiar with the facts, who from their own knowledge stated what the facts were (Bushe's case, Vaughan, 135, 142, 147, 149) the Court could in the application of the law to the facts, exercise a control over the result which was impossible when the character of the jury changed. With the development of the jury into a reasoning, inference-drawing body of men, possessing the power to determine the ultimate facts in issue, and by their verdict to judicially settle the controversy, the situation, to the mind of the Judge, was full of embarrassments. To what conclusions might not those men come; men ignorant of the law and its methods, unfamiliar with the ways of counsel, open to the influence of testimony and arguments presented solely for the purpose of playing upon their sympathy, passion and prejudice. This was a situation to be deplored, and to be relieved of its danger as far as possible.

Accordingly, with the beginning of the use of evidence before juries, we find the beginnings of the law of evidence. Statements to which the Courts might listen with impunity were carefully kept from the jury by excluding rules, established by the Judges.

It must not be supposed that these excluding rules came into existence all at once. The development of the jury into its final shape was a gradual one; and the growth of rules governing the use of evidence before the jury was equally gradual. It is immaterial to enquire here as to the kind of evidence was excluded; that is to be found in any English treatise on the Law of Evidence. It is sufficient to say that, in general, everything except what was actually within the personal knowledge of the witness was considered unsafe to put before the jury. Thus hearsay and opinion were both objectionable. In this way the susceptibility of the jury played its parts in moulding the law of evidence into its modern form.

The supposed ignorance of the average jury was also an important factor in the evolution of the rules of evidence. Things likely to complicate the case, to confirm the mind, or mislead as to the real facts in issue were accordingly excluded.

With the expansion of the work of the Courts and the ever increasing volume of business brought before them a necessity arose for shortening of trials and the expediting of the work in every possible way. This influence was a powerful one in its effect upon the admission of evidence. Much that was logically relevant, and indeed worthy of consideration, if minute enquiry was possible, became inadmissible, upon the theory that it was too remote, or of slight importance. Collateral matters these were in the main,—matters likely to lead to prolonged collateral inquiry with a meager result in the way of inference compelling proof when finished.

Other things operated to make it easy and natural for the Courts to establish rules relating to the use of evidence. The policy of the law in respect to persons charged with wrongs which extends to them the extreme limit of fairness, is responsible for the growth of an important class of excluding rules. Such rules shut out from the consideration of the jury any facts bearing upon character or habit ; and thus, although in many instances previous character would be logically a most important piece of evidence from which to infer the truth as to facts in issue.

We may thus get some idea of the elements which have for centuries been at work moulding forms into which matters of evidence for judicial tribunals must be cast, building barriers within which they must be confined, and wearing grooves along which the wheels of judicial enquiry must run. McKelveys' Laws and Evidence pp. 9, 10.

PART 1.

Relevancy of Facts.

CHAPTER I.

"Not proved"

A fact is said not to be proved when it is neither proved nor disproved.

Court.—The definition of "Court" is framed only for the purposes of the Act itself, and should not be extended beyond its legitimate scope. 12 B. 36. The word "Court" in the above section means and includes, in a trial by jury, both, Judge and jury. 4C. 483=3 C. L. R. 270 (F. B). A sub-registrar is a Court as defined in this Act. 13 B. L. R. App. 10=22 W. R. Cr. 10. The Court means all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorized to take evidence. 15 M. 138=2 M. L. J. 64 (F. B) ; see also 16 M. 421 ; 17 Cr. L. J. 491=36 Ind. Cas. 171.

Fact.—"Ordinarily, a fact is something done or which has come to pass ; an act or deed or event, an effect produced or a result achieved ; anything regarded as strictly true or actually existent, whether material or mental ; reality ; actuality. In legal use includes the fact that any mental condition of which any person is conscious exists. The legal meaning is not limited to what is tangible or visible or in any way the object of sense. Things invisible, mere thoughts, intentions, fancies of the mind, when conceived of as existing or being true, are conceived of as facts. For the student to evolve his own idea of what a legal fact is in its relation to evidence, the first step in process of ratiocination must be the recognition that the signification of the term "evidence" is not self-contained, and that it presents no complete idea to the mind, unless in connection with the object to which it necessarily relates. That object is fact or matter of fact."—Burr. Jones Ev. 66. The word "fact" is not restricted to something which can be exhibited as a material object. It also includes psychological fact or mental condition of which any person is conscious. A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 528 (F. B.)

Relevant.—"The relevant facts are facts other than facts in issue which are in the eye of the law so connected with or related to the facts in issue that they render the latter probable or improbable, or roughly throw light upon them. Relevancy may indeed be considered as synonymous with "connection" a word which frequently appears in discussions on the subject. Of course both words must be taken in their legal meaning, which is generally restricted. Common sense or logical relevancy is, as a rule, wider than legal relevancy. A Judge might, in ordinary transactions take one fact as evidence of another, and act upon it himself, when, in Court, he would rule that it was legally irrelevant. And he may exclude facts, although relevant, if they appear to him too remote to be really material to the issue." Cockle Cas. 56. The first conditions which a fact, proof of which as an evidentiary fact is offered, must fulfil, is that it must be evidential of the main fact. It must furnish a basis from which the main fact can be inferred. The first duty of the Court is to apply the underlying principle of the law of evidence, namely, logical relevancy for the purpose of determining whether or not the fact offered can be evidence. If the fact meet this test, it may or may not be admitted. For flanked round the general principle on the law of evidence that what is logically relevant is admissible, are numerous excluding rules, which say that this or that fact though logically relevant, is inadmissible. The jury, as a feature of the English judicial system, is responsible for the existence of many of these rules, though each has its own peculiar principle upon which it is founded. These rules, and their application form a large portion of the bar of evidence.—McKelvey's Law of Evidence p. 13. The word "relevant" in this Act means admissible. Per Lord Hobhouse in Lala Lakhmi Chand v. Haidar Shah 3 C. W. N. 268 (notes).

Facts in issue.—Facts in issue are those which are alleged by one party and denied by the other on the pleading in a civil case; or alleged in the indictment and denied by the plea of "not guilty," in a criminal case, so far as they are in either case material. There is, therefore, little difficulty in ascertaining what are the facts in issue. Cockle Cas. 56. Facts in issue are those facts which are necessary by law to establish the claim liability, or defence, forming the subject matter of the proceedings; and which, either by the pleadings or by implication, are in dispute between the parties. Facts in issue are determinable primarily by the substantive law, and secondly by the pleadings. Phip. Ev. 43.

Documents.—The term "document" is one of difficult definition, many so-called documents being more properly classed under the head of real evidence. Best. defines "document" as including "all material substance, on which the thoughts of men are represented by writing, or any other species of conventional mark or symbol," and expressly includes milkmen's score, exchequer tallies, and the like (Best. § 215). Wharton defines documents as an instrument on which are recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, matters which may be evidentially used." (1 Whart. Ev. § 614). Stephen's definition is similar, though more restricted. "Any substance having any matter expressed or described upon it by mark capable of being read." (Dig. Law, Ev. art 1). Within those definitions, a ring or banner with an inscription, a musical composition, and a savage tattooed with words intelligible to himself, would all be documents. Photographs caricatures wooden tallies, and the like, would probably be excluded under Stephen's definition; not apparently under the others. Best. 213. The definition given in this Act is wider than the definition mentioned in Stephen's Digest. This definition seems to include all those things mentioned above. Where a draft petition was prepared with the intention of being used as evidence of a matter, it was held that it fell within the terms of the section. 10 W. R. 61 Cr.=2 B. L. R. 12. An agreement in which some of the executant signed is a document. 41 M. 589=43 Ind. Cas. 593=19 Cr. L. J. 177. Letter or marks imprinted on trees and intended to be used as evidence that the trees had been passed for removal by the Ranger are documents. A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 327=27 Bom. L. R. 599=26 Cr. L. J. 1014=87 Ind. Cas. 839. The definition of the word "document" in this section applies to the word as used in s. 2 (6) of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931 A. I. R. 1934 All 1031.

Evidence.—This definition is open to the criticism that it does not include those facts which in judicial proceedings may be addressed directly to the sense of the Court or jury. (Bur. Jones, Ev. S. 3). Says. Profess of Greenleaf: "Evidence in legal acceptation includes all the means by which alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved." (1. Green. Ev. s. 1). It includes "all the legal means, exclusive of mere argument, which tend to prove or disprove any matter of fact the truth of which is submitted to judicial investigation" (Taylor 1 § 1; Powell, 1). The term "evidence" in its ordinary sense signifies that which makes apparent the truth of a matter in question. It is no doubt more frequently applied to proof before a judicial tribunal, but it is not necessarily confined to this sense, it applies with equal correctness to information, intimation acquired by any person, who undertakes an enquiry on any matter in question. 4 M. 393. The demeanour of a witness is evidence. 21 W. R. Cr. 13 F. B.; 21 C. 279. The best and simplest definition of the word 'evidence' is that it is any matter of fact from which an inference may be drawn as to another matter of fact. Bentham in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence (vol. I p. 17) states that evidence includes "any matter of fact the effect, tendency, or design of which, when presented to the mind, is to produce a persuasion either affirmative or disaffirmative of its existence." Prof Thayer substantially follows Bentham's idea, but narrows the scope of the word to "any matter of fact which is furnished to a legal tribunal otherwise than by reasoning or a reference to which is noticed without proof as the basis of inference in ascertaining some other matter of fact." (3) Harv Law Rev. 143.). The word "evidence" in this Act signifies only the instruments by means of which relevant facts are brought before the court, viz, witnesses and documents, and by means of which court is convinced of these facts. 26 N. L. R. 229=125 Ind. Cas. 673=31 Cr. L. J. 881=A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 242 (F. B.). The word "evidence" as defined in this Act does not include the whole material of the judges belief; for instance a Magistrate or a Judge may question the prisoner and the prisoner's answer to the Magistrate may be used against him; but they are not "evidence" under the definition. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 338. Confession made by one prisoner affecting himself and others jointly under trial for the same offence, is evidence although the Act has not called it so. 4 C. 492 (F. B.); see also 10 B. 326; but see 15 B. 66; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 311; 2 L. B. 272. A statement made by an accused person during a police investigation, on soleman affirmation before a Magistrate is evidence. 11 B. 702. This definition must be read with "proved". Vide 9 C. 363; 16 C. W. N. 426; 1 C. W. N. 682.

Proved.—A fact is said to be proved, when after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. A much stricter degree of proof is required in criminal proceedings than in civil ones, and in criminal proceedings the persuasion of guilt must amount to such a moral certainty as convinces the mind of the tribunal as reasonable men, beyond all reasonable doubt. It is the business of the prosecution to bring guilt home to the accused, to the satisfaction of the minds of the jury, but the doubt, to the benefit of which the accused is entitled, must be such as a rational, thinking, sensible man may fairly and reasonably entertain, not the doubt of a vacillating mind, that has not the moral courage to decide, "but shelters in a vain and idle scepticism." There must be no doubts which a man may honestly and conscientiously entertain. 3 L. B. R. 216=4 Cr. L. J. 382. A prima facie case is not the same thing as proof. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 607. "There is a strong and marked difference as to the effect of evidence in civil and criminal proceedings. In the former a mere preponderance of probability, due regard being had to the burden of proof is a sufficient basis of decision; but in the latter, especially when the offence charged amounts to treason or felony, a much higher degree of assurance is required. The serious consequences of an erroneous condemnation, both to the accused and society, the immeasurably greater evils which flow from it than from an erroneous acquittal have induced the laws of every wise and civilised nation to lay down the principle, though often lost sight of in practice, that the persuasion of guilt ought to amount to a moral certainty; or as an eminent judge expressed it, 'such a moral certainty' as convinces the minds of the tribunal, as reasonable men beyond all reasonable doubt. The expression 'moral certainty' is here used in contra-distinction to physical certainty, or certainty properly so called; for the physical possibility of the innocence of any accused person can never be excluded. Best § 95. See also 5 W. R. Cr. 28; 21 W. R. Cr. 13; 4 W. R. Cr. 19; 7 W. R. Cr. 14; 11 W. R. Cr. 20; 11 C. 642; 22 C. 323; 8 C. W. N. 828; A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 689.

Matters before it.—"It would appear, that the Legislature intentionally refrained from using the word "evidence" in this definition but used instead the words 'matters before it.' For instance a fact may be orally admitted in Court. The admission would not come within the definition of the word evidence as given in this Act but still it is a matter which the Court before whom the admission was made would have to take into consideration in order to determine whether the particular fact was proved or not." Per Mitter J. in 9 C. 363=12 Cr. L. R. 490; see also 16 C. W. N. 426. Therefore in determining what is evidence other than "evidence" in the phraseology of the Act, the definition of "evidence" must be read with that of "proved." Thus though the result of the enquiry instituted by the Munsif is not evidence according to the definition in the Evidence Act, it is a matter before the Court, which the Court can take into consideration Ibid. But a judge without giving evidence can not impart his own knowledge into a case. 3 I. A. 287; 11 M. I. A. 213; 22 W. R. 9; 24 W. R. 81; 24 W. R. Cr. 28.

Distinction between proof and evidence.—The word evidence in legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact the truth of which is submitted to investigation is established or disproved. This term, and the word proof are often used indifferently, as synonymous with each other; but the latter is applied by the most accurate logicians to the effect of evidence, and not to the medium by which truth is established. None but mathematical truth is susceptible of that high degree of evidence called demonstration which excludes all possibility of error, and which, therefore, may reasonably be required in support of every mathematical deduction. Matters of fact are proved by moral evidence alone; by which is meant not only that kind of evidence which is employed on subjects connected with moral conduct but all the evidence which is not obtained either from intention or from demonstration. In the ordinary affairs of life, we do not require demonstrative evidence, because it is not inconsistent with the nature of the subject and to insist upon it would be unreasonable and absurd. The most that can be affirmed of such things is, that there is no reasonable doubt concerning them. The true question, therefore, in trials of facts, is not whether it is possible that the testimony may be false, but whether there is sufficient possibility of its truth; that is whether the facts are shown by competent and satisfactory evidence. Things established by competent and satisfactory evidence are said to be proved.—Greenleaf on the Law of Evidence p. 4.

4. Whenever it is provided by this Act that the Court may presume a fact, it may either regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it;

"May presume."

Whenever it is directed by this Act that the Court shall presume a fact, it shall regard such fact as proved unless and until it is disproved.

"Shall presume."

When one fact is declared by this Act to be conclusive proof of another, the Court shall, on proof of one fact, regard the other as proved, and shall not allow evidence to be given for the purpose of disproving it.

"Conclusive proof."

Presumption.—"A presumption is an inference as to a matter of fact which a Judge draws, or directs a jury to draw, as a matter of law."—Powell, 387. "Presumption are aids to reasoning and argumentation, which assume the truth of certain matters for the purpose of some inquiry. They may be grounded on general experience, or probability of any kind; or merely on policy and convenience. On whatever basis they rest, they operate in advance of argument or evidence or irrespective of it, by taking something for granted; by assuming its existence: when the term is legitimately applied it designates a rule or a proposition which still lives open to further inquiry the matter thus assumed. The exact scope and operation of those prima facie assumptions are to cast upon the party against whom they operate, the duty of going forward, in argument or evidence, on the particular point to which they relate.....Presumptions are not in themselves either argument or evidence, although for the time being they accomplish the result of both...Presumption, assumption, taking for granted, are simply so many names for an act or process which aids or shortens inquiry and argument." Thayer Cas. 38.

Division of presumption.—English text writers divides presumptions into three classes ;—(1) Presumption of fact (2) Rebuttable presumption of law and (3) Irrebuttable presumption of law ; see also A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 343.

May presume.—The first class of presumption, mentioned by English text writers comes under this definition. It is nothing more than an argument more or less cogent ; it is an inference of one fact drawn from other facts. (Vide Powell, 386). The Court where it may presume a fact has the discretion to presume it as proved or to call for proof of it, as it thinks best. 1 A. L. J. 121 ; see also 26 A. 581 (586)=31 I. A. 21=7 O. C. 290. The presumption mentioned in this clause is hard and fast presumption incapable of rebuttal a presumptio iuriei et de jure. 7 Bom. L. R. 969=3 Cr. L. J. 32. The word "may presume" in s. 90 ought generally to be construed in more rigorous of the sum allowed by s. 4. 110 P. L. R. 1902 ; 7 O. C. 290 (P. C.) ; 11 M. L. T. 69.

Shall presume.—A presumption of law must be distinguished from prima facie evidence of fact. The latter no doubt seems to shift the burden of proof. A presumption of law can also be rebutted. But until it is rebutted, the presumption stands good and the judge must give effect to it, without calling further proof of the same. (Vide Powell, 388). This presumption derives, its force from jurisprudence as distinguished from logic. More strictly speaking it is an "assumption" of the law rather than a presumption. Presumptions of fact are obviously of varying weight. The law, for its own purposes segregates certain of the stronger presumptions of fact, and assumes that the inference is the correct one, unless and until evidence is introduced to prove that it is not. Such a presumption may be created either by Statute or by Judicial legislation." Best 304. The definition of the word "shall presume" given in the section can not be extended to other statutes except by express legislation to that effect. 33 A. 799 (808) F. B. In the Indian Evidence Act the words "shall presume" indicate that the presumption mentioned therein is rebuttable presumption. Ibid ; see also 32 A 427 (F. B.) under s. 90 of the Evidence Act read with s. 4 of the same, the court has a discretion to call for proof of a document although it be more than 30 years old and purports to come from proper custody. 7 O. C. 290 ; 11 M. L. T. 69=(1912) 1 M. W. N. 117.

Conclusive proof.—On the other hand and an irrebuttable presumption of law is not presumption at all ; it is simply an indisputable proposition of law. For example, the rule that a child under seven cannot commit a crime is a rigid rule of law—in fact, part of the definition of crime. (Powell 386). As regards "conclusive proof" vide 66 Ind. Cas. 600=48 C. 496. The definition of "conclusive proof" given in this section, though refers only to the Evidence Act yet it may properly be applied to the expression "conclusive proof" in the Oath Act (X of 1873). 8 Bom. L. R. 19(22). In case of conclusive proof evidence in rebuttal is disallowed. 1931 A. L. J. 360=A. I. R. 1932 All. 35.

Origin of the rules.—These rules it is likely, all had their beginnings in logical inference, however independent of it they may have become in their final shape. Now, the basis of inference is experience. The judge and the Jury go into Court with the experience of ordinary human beings, and in the process of drawing inferences, constantly call upon such experience. Coupled with the facts introduced as evidence at the trial, it forms the basis of the inferences necessary to arrive at a determination of the facts in issue. It happens that in the almost innumerable cases that are tried, certain facts or groups of facts have been repeatedly presented to Courts as foundations for inferences ; and the inferences being reasonable ones, judged by experience of the Court and Jury, have been repeatedly drawn until a rule has crystalized. It is not difficult to see why these rules developed so early, and were so readily adopted by the Courts. Judges have always been suspicious of Juries and have seized every opportunity to establish rules for their guidance, and to control their conclusions from the evidence introduced. The mind of the Judge was supposedly nothing if not logical, while the untrained minds of the Jury were open to influences of prejudice, sympathy, and a thousand other things. Logical inference was therefore made a basis of a vast number of such rules which the Judges established and which they called "presumptions"—rules relating to the manner of proving cases, and in the sense having to do with the law of evidence ; fixing for example when sufficient evidence was introduced, or when a party must introduce further evidence if he would win his case.—McKelvey's Law of Evidence p. 80.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE RELEVANCY OF FACTS.

5. Evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are hereinafter declared to be relevant, and of no others.

Explanation.—This section shall not enable any person to give evidence of a fact which he is disentitled to prove by any provision of the law for the time being in force relating to Civil Procedure.

Illustrations.

(a) A is tried for the murder of B by beating him with a club with the intention of causing his death.

At A's trial the following facts are in issue :—

- A's beating B with the club ;
- A's causing B's death by such beating ;
- A's intention to cause B's death.

(b) A suitor does not bring with him, and have in readiness for production at the first hearing of the case, a bond on which he relies. This section does not enable him to produce the bond or prove its contents at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, otherwise than in accordance with the conditions prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

Scope of the Law of Evidence—"The question therefore of what propositions may evidence be offered is not answered by the law of evidence, except in a subordinate way. The answer to it is made in four parts. Evidence may be offered of such propositions of fact as (a) are material by the substantive law to any right or duty, claim or defence ; (b) are issuable in the case at bar by the terms of the pleadings under the rules of pleading ; (c) are effective to relieve a party from the establishment of one of the preceding propositions ; (d) Are admissible by the law of evidence as evidentiary facts and thus may become in turn propositions to be proved. The first and the second of these classes clearly do not involve the law of evidence. The third class is concerned with judicial admissions and their congeners ; such are really equivalent to a pleading, because they formally waive proof ; they are therefore no part of the law of evidence except for the necessity of distinguishing them from other things miscalled admission. The fourth class alone concerns intrinsically with the law of evidence." Wigmore Cas. 3. Thus the law of evidence relates to the use of evidence before judicial tribunals, and, in its proper significance, consists of (a) certain rules as to the exclusion of evidence, and (b) the rules which prescribe the manner of presenting evidence in the Courts.—McKelvey's Law of Evidence. p. 6.

What facts may be presented as evidence.—Evidence can only be given of facts in issue or relevant facts. What are facts in issue are ascertained by the substantive law and the law of procedure. What facts are relevant or admissible in evidence is answered by the law of evidence. This Chapter contains the law of relevancy. There is still a further restriction. Evidence the production of which is barred by some provisions Civil Procedure is not admitted in evidence even if they be relevant. This restriction is put by the explanation at the end of the section.

Facts in issue—Facts in issue are those facts about which there is a question in issue between the parties and although all relevant facts are not necessarily facts in issue, the fact that are in issue cannot be other than relevant to the determination of the suit. Facts must be either relevant or irrelevant and there is no separate third class of facts in issue. 34 Ind. Cas. 875. Evidence may be given of a fact in issue or of a fact which by this Act is declared to be relevant. 9 C. W. N. 402.

And of no others—This section excludes everything which is not covered by the purview of some other section which follows in the statute. 12 A. I. (43) F. B ; see also 12 A. L. J. 285 = 24 Ind. Cas. 165 ; but see 7 A. 385 (401) ; 24 C. W. N.

50. So one who wants to give evidence on a particular fact must show that it is admissible under some one or other of the following sections. 9 C. W. N. 402 (406) ; 7 I. A. 70. The words "and of no others" impliedly impose a duty on the court to exclude evidence of irrelevant facts, irrespective of objection by the parties. Whitley Stokes. Vol II, p. 854. Even when there is moral conviction of guilt the rules of evidence cannot be disregarded. 37 C. 91 ; 25 W. R. Cr. 43 ; 5 W. R. Cr. 28 ; 5 Con. C. C. 210. But though a document may not be legal evidence of fact within the provisions of the Evidence Act, yet it may be a document which is prove the fact by consent of parties. 20 B. 99 (103).

Legal relevancy.—The testimony offered must be logically "probative of the matter to be proved, and if it is legally relevant. While this proposition, of course, includes direct evidence, it does not exclude, as irrelevant, evidence of facts not directly in issue but which create a presumption of the fact in issue. The qualification to the general rule is that it does not always follow merely because a fact is logically relevant that it is always relevant. Certain evidence though not logically incompetent, may be excluded on the ground of its unimportance, when compared with an abundance of better evidence easily available ; on the ground that it has no slight or remote a bearing on the case either in point of time or value, that it would be unjust and unreasonable to prolong and complicate a trial by its investigation ; on the ground of public policy. (Bur Jones § 135). In this connection it must be borne in mind that the whole law of evidence has evolved from trial by jury system. "Legal relevancy, which is essential to admissible evidence, requires a higher standard of evidentiary force. It includes logical relevancy and for reasons of practical convenience, demands a close connection between, the facts to be proved and the fact offered to prove it. All evidence must be logically relevant ; that is absolutely essential. The fact, however, that it is logically relevant does not ensure admissibility. It must also be legally relevant. A fact which "in connection with other facts, renders probable the existence of a fact in issue, may still be rejected, if, in the opinion of the Judge, and under the circumstances of the case, it is considered essentially misleading or too remote."—Best Evidence (Camp) § 251. Stephen defines the word "relevant" as meaning that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other, that, according to the common course of events, one either renders probable the past present or future existence or non-existence of the other. Stephen's Dig. Ev. art. This is a definition of logical relevancy. Logical relevancy plays a certain important part in the law of evidence, in that no evidence is admissible unless it is relevant. It does not follow that all evidence which is logically relevant is admissible and in fact much that is logically relevant is excluded. Certain rules are laid down, founded on various considerations, by which many matters which are logically relevant are declared inadmissible. Legal relevancy is not different in its nature from logical relevancy. The only distinction is in its field of application. Legal relevancy is the attribute of all those logically relevant matters which are not declared inadmissible by one or more of an excluding rules. Stephen proceeds upon the theory that logical relevancy is the main condition of admissibility, and that all rules excluding evidence which is logically relevant are, therefore, exceptions to the general rule. Other writers such as Best have distinguished between logical and legal relevancy, finding the latter to apply to all those facts which are not excluded by any of the excluding rules of evidence. But if what is legally relevant can only be determined by this exclusionary method, it is of little use to retain the term. In general, it may be said, that what is logically relevant is admissible, unless it comes within the terms of one or more of the rules of exclusion. McKelvey's Law of Evidence p. 166 ; see also 1914 M. W. N. 931.

Exclusion of evidence.—Under the Evidence Act, admissibility is the rule and exclusion is the exception, and circumstances, which under other system, might operate to exclude are under the Act, to be taken into consideration only in judging of the value to be allowed to evidence when admitted. 16 B. 661 ; See also 11 B. H. C. R. 121 ; 8 W. R. 169 ; 15 W. R. 49 ; but see 6 C. 193 ; 22 W. R. 355, 356, 357. Question as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. II, 376 ; 13 C. L. J. 18 ; 86 Ind. Cas. 817 ; 50 Ind. Cas. 481 ; 82 Ind. Cas. 974 ; 9 W. R. 587 ; 1 A. L. J. Diary 24 ; 2 C. W. N. 188 (190) ; but see 30 C. W. N. 559. Where a Judge in doubt as to the admissibility of a particular piece of evidence he should declare in favour of admissibility rather than of non-admissibility. 12 A. 1 ; 21 B. 698. The admission of hearsay evidence is prohibited. 7 W. R. Cr. 2 ; 7 W. R. Cr. 25 ; 13 O. C. 309=8 Ind. Cas. 379 ; 2 W. R. 252 ; 10 W. R. 75 ; 24 W. R. Cr. 77 ; 21 C. W. N. 345, (P. C.).

6. Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, are relevant, whether they occurred at the same time and place or at different times and places.

Relevancy of facts forming part of same transaction.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of the murder of B by beating him. Whatever was said or done by A or B or the by-standers at the beating, or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction is a relevant fact.

(b) A is accused of waging war against the Queen by taking part of an armed insurrection in which property is destroyed, troops are attacked, and goals are broken open. The occurrence of these facts is relevant, as forming part of the general transaction, though A may not have been present at all of them.

(c) A sues B for a libel contained in a letter forming part of a correspondence. Letters between the parties relating to the subject out of which the libel arose, and forming part of the correspondence in which it is contained, are relevant facts, though they do not contain the libel itself.

(d) The question is, whether certain goods ordered from B were delivered to A. The goods were delivered to several intermediate persons successively. Each delivery is a relevant fact.

Scope.—All facts which are parts of the same transaction are relevant to each other, so that, when one of such facts is in issue, the others are admissible. Such facts which are thus parts of the transaction in issue are generally known as "res gestae" (R. v. Ellis, 6 B. and. C. 145). This rule as to "res gestae" is one of the clearest illustrations of relevancy, the connection between the facts being that they are all parts of the same "transaction". Once established that they are all parts of the same transaction, then each of such facts is relevant to the others, so that if any of them be in issue the others are admissible as relevant facts. The real and very substantial difficulty is to determine the limits of the transaction, and what facts are really part of it. (Cochle Cas. 64). Principles of the sections relating to relevancy of facts are mere rules of logic. (1914) M. W. N. 931.

Basis of the theory.—Every act which is done, every event which happens is set in a frame of surrounding circumstances which serve to make it stand out and appear strong and clear. These circumstances may consist of declarations, made at the time by participants in the act, of other acts done, of the position, condition, and appearance of inanimate objects, and of other elements which serve to illustrate the main act or event. Subject to reasonable and proper limitations such surrounding circumstances may be proved in evidence as a part of thing done (res gestae). So long as these circumstances do not consist of circumstances and statements, they are introduced as a matter of course, proved by either side without question, unless, indeed, they go too far away from the main-fact, when under rules having no relation to the subject of hearsay they are excluded. It is when they comprise statements, exclamations, answers to questions, and other verbal utterances by the participants in the act or event, that they occupy the attention of the Courts. If it had been possible to treat verbal utterances made under such conditions purely as acts, and not in any sense as evidence of the things stated, the subject of res gestae would not have belonged under the head of exceptions to the hearsay. The ground of reliability upon which such declarations are received is their spontaneity. They are the extempore utterances of the mind under circumstances and at times where there has been no sufficient opportunity to plan false or misleading statements ; they exhibit the mind's impressions of immediate events and are not narration of past happenings ; they are uttered while the mind is under the influence of the activity of the surroundings. As a good illustration we have the cases of statements made by persons injured, or others in their presence at the time of the injury. In Hutchies v. Railroad Co. 128 Iowa 279=103 N. W. 779, the plaintiff fell from a street car, by reason of negligence in failure to let down a folding step. As she fell she exclaimed, "yes, let down the step after I fall." The declaration was a typical instance of res gestae. It was clearly admissible, both as a part of the transactions and, having been received, as evidence also that the step was not let down until after the plaintiff fell. In this case the statement was spontaneous and coincident with the event. Taken altogether, it is perhaps safe to say that in the case of no exception to the hearsay rule is there as little danger and as much assistance to the cause of justice as in this, taking into consideration the matter in which it has been applied.—McKelvey's Evidence pp. 343—345.

Transaction.—A transaction is a group of facts connected together as to be referred to by a single legal name, as a crime, contract a wrong or any other subject of inquiry which may be in issue. Every fact which is part of the same transaction as the facts in issue is deemed to be relevant to the facts in issue, although it may not be actually in issue, and although if it were not part of the same transaction it might be excluded as hearsay. Whether any particular fact is or is not part of the same transaction has the facts in issue is a question of law upon which no principle has been stated by authority and on which single judges have given different decisions. (Stephen's Digest Art. 3). See also 11 C. W. N. 266; 34 P. R. 1914. Cr.=27. Ind. Cas. 664=16 Cr. L. J. 184. Acts are not parts of the same transaction, unless they were done substantially at the same time; although they are similar in other respects. R v. Birdseye, 4 C. and P. 386. The word "transaction" is used in a limited sense in illustration (a 1 of this section and in more general sense in the remaining illustrations of the section. 15 B. 491. A transaction may be a continuous one extending over a length of time (Rawson v. Haigh, 9 Moore, 217). Acts, declarations, and circumstances which constitute, or accompany and explain, the fact or transaction in issue, are admissible, for or against either party, as forming parts of res gestae (Phip. Ev. 46). A "transaction" consists both of the physical acts and the words accompanying such physical acts, whether spoken by the person doing such acts, the person to whom they were done or any other persons present. Such words are admissible in evidence as part of the transaction. (Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner, 402 cited in Cockle Cas. 65). See also 34 P. R. 1914 Cr.=27 Ind. Cas. 664=16 Cr. L. J. 184.

Verbal Acts or Verbal Parts of an Act.—There are other declarations which are admitted as original evidence, being distinguished from hearsay by their connection with the principal fact under investigation. The affairs of men consist of a complication of circumstances so intimately interwoven as to be hardly separable from each other. Each owes its birth to some preceding circumstances so intimately interwoven as to be hardly separable from each other. Each owes its birth to some preceding circumstances, and, in its turn, become the prolific parents of others; and each during its existence, has its inseparable attributes, and its kindred facts, materially affecting its character, and essential to be known in order to a right understanding of its nature. These surrounding circumstances, constituting parts of the res gestae may always be shown to the Court, along with the principal fact, and their admissibility is determined according to the degree of their relation to that fact, and in the exercise of the Court's sound discretion; it being extremely difficult, if not impossible, to bring this class of cases within the limits of a more particular description. The principal points for considerations are, whether the circumstances and declarations offered in proof were contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration, and whether they are so connected with it as to illustrate its character. Greenleaf § 108. Declarations in order to become part of the res gestae "must have been made at the time of the act done, which they are supposed to characterize and have been well calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the facts they were intended to explain, and so to harmonize with them as obviously to constitute one transaction" Per Hosmer C J. in Enos v. Tuttle 3 Conn. 250.

"Many acts are in themselves of an equivocal nature, and the effect of them depends upon the intention or disposition from which they proceed, which is in general best determined by the expressions accompanying them. Whenever, therefore, the demeanour of a person at a given time becomes the object of the enquiry, the expressions, as constituting a part of that demeanour and as indicating his present intent and disposition, cannot properly be rejected in evidence as irrelevant." Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 242. "What a man says, when he does a thing, shows the nature of his act and is a part of the act; it determines its character and effect; tenancy is a continuance of acts in a certain relation to another, and declarations during the tenancy by a man that he is a tenant and of a particular person may be put as a part of res gestae" Rankin v. Trainbrook, 6 Watts, 390.

Declarations.—A statement, in order to be admissible in evidence as part of the transaction or res gestae, must strictly accompany, or be made at the same time, as the physical acts in question. R. v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox. C. C. 341. But in R. v. Foster, 6 C and P. 325 a statement which followed the physical act, was admitted in evidence as a part of the transaction, although it was the last item of the transaction. A statement made by a third party may be relevant as part of the transaction, if he be actually present at the time. (R. v. Fowkes, Stephen 4). "There is a principle in the law of evidence which is known as res gestae; that is, the declarations of an individual made at the moment of a particular occurrence, when the circumstances are such that we may assume that his mind is controlled by the event, may be received in evidence, because they are supposed to be expressions involuntarily forced out of him by the particular event, and thus have an element of truthfulness they might otherwise not have..... But you are not to give any more weight to a declaration thus made, or any weight at all, unless you are satisfied that it was made at a time when it was forced out as the utterance of a truth, forced out against his will or without his will and at a period of time so closely connected with the transaction that there has been no opportunity for subsequent reflection or determination as to what it might or might not be wise for him to say", Per Lacombe J. in U. S. v. King 34 Fed. R. 314. "There must be no fair opportunity for the will of the speaker to mould or modify them. His will must have become and remained dormant, so far as any deliberations in concocting matter for speech or selecting words is concerned. Moreover, his speech besides being in the present time of the transaction, must be in the presence of it in respect to space. He must be on or near the scene of action or of some material part of the action. His declarations must be the utterance of human nature, of the genus homo rather than of the individual. Only an oath can guarantee individual veracity. But spontaneous impulse may be sufficient sanction for the speech of man as such—man, distinguished from this or that particular man. True, the verbal deliverance in each instance is that of an individual person. But if the state of his mind be such that his individuality is for the time being suppressed and silenced, so that he utters the voice of humanity rather than of himself, what he says is regarded by the law as in some degree trustworthy" Per Bleckley, C. J. in Traveller's Ind. Co. v. Shephard, 85 Ga. 751, 776. While it is said that the declaration must be contemporaneous with the main fact no rule can be formulated by which to determine how near, in point of time, they must be. No two cases are exactly alike and the determination of this question is separable from the circumstances of the case at bar. The transaction in question may be such that the res gesta would extend over a day or a week or a month." Per Shelby in Jack v. Mutual R. F. Life Association, 113 Fed 49. See 10 C. 302; 11 C. W. N. 266; 9 B. H. C. 358. Statements made by members of unlawful assembly of their determination to force their way through a police cordon is evidence of res gestae and is admissible to prove their intention. 3 Rang. 352=90 Ind. Cas. 918=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 354; see also 34 P. R. 1914 Cr.=27 Ind. Cas. 664=16 Cr. L. J. 184. Evidence of witness that complainant informed them about theft long after the incident is not admissible. A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 17=57 C. L. J. 447. As regards statement made to police vide 50 Ind. 7. Facts which are the occasion, cause or effect, immediate or otherwise, of relevant facts, or facts in issue, or which constitute the state of things under which they happened, or which afford an opportunity for their occurrence or transaction, are relevant.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is, whether A robbed B.

The fact that shortly before the robbery, B, went to a fair with money in his possession, and that he showed it or mentioned the fact that he had it, to third persons, are relevant.

(b) The question is whether A murdered B.

Marks on the ground, produced by a struggle at or near the place where the murder was committed, are relevant facts.

(c) The question is whether A poisoned B.

The state of B's health before the symptoms ascribed to poison, and habits of B, known to A, which afforded an opportunity for the administration of poison, are relevant facts.

Scope.—This section admits a very large class of connected facts in addition to those admitted by the last section. Here it should again be observed that the weight to be attached to such facts when admitted must of necessity vary. An effect may be conclusive proof of the primary act having been done, e. g. the birth of a child. On the other hand the existence of an opportunity may go but a very short way towards proving the committal of an act by a specified person since the same opportunity may have laid open to many others. (Field Ev. 20) Every fact is connected with numberless other facts by ties more or less close. It may often be difficult for a judge to say whether a fact can or cannot be properly said to "form part of a transaction" within the meaning of section 6. This section meets this difficulty by embracing a larger area of facts, leaving the transaction itself, it provides for the admission of several classes of facts, though not, possibly, forming part of the transaction, are yet connected with it in particular modes, and so are relevant when the transaction itself is under enquiry. These modes of connection are (1), as being the occasion or cause of a fact; (2) as being its effect; (3), as giving opportunity for its occurrence; (4) as constituting the state of things under which it happened. They are in truth different aspects of causation. (Cun. Ev. 91).

Principle.—"The competency of a collateral fact to be used as the basis of legitimate argument is not to be determined by the conclusiveness of the inferences, it may afford in reference to the litigated fact. It is enough if these may tend, even in a slight degree to elucidate the enquiry or to assist, though remotely, to a determination probably founded on truth." Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 164.

Occasion, Cause and effect.—These are different aspects of causation. If they are parts of the same transaction, they are admissible under s. 6. and also under this section. Now the question is what facts not part of the same transaction are admissible in evidence. Such facts are either similar or dissimilar. When the facts are dissimilar they are clearly inadmissible. Facts of this class, though often not destitute of moral weight, are rejected as legal evidence on grounds of convenience, since they tend to embarrass the inquiry with collateral issues, prejudice the parties with the jury, and encourage attacks without notice. The maxim "Res inter alias actae ulterius nocere non debent" is frequently supposed to express the principle of exclusion in such cases; but this is incorrect, for similar transaction inter partes would be equally inadmissible in this relation. The principle of the maxim appears, indeed, to fail altogether as a test of relevancy since an examination of this chapter will show that most of the transactions here is declared relevant are res inter alios while others that are irrelevant are res inter partes. The maxim has its principal utility in the domain of substantive law. (Philp Ev. 125, 126.) But where there is some logical connection between the fact offered as evidence and the issuable fact, or where proof of the former tends to make the latter more probable or improbable the testimony proposed is relevant, if not too remote (Bur Jones Ev. S. 138). So the admissibility of similar facts as direct proof of the fact in issue depends, not on personal, but logical privity; and is mainly a question of degree, or of our knowledge and understanding of the causes of events, as to which, in many cases the progress of science may change the law. In proportion as the element of personality, the interjection of the free will of the human being diminishes, we become more certain of the effects of a causative force, and more ready to admit such evidence. (Philp. Ev. 126.) On this principle this section lays down that those facts which are the occasion, cause and effect of relevant facts or facts in issue are admissible in evidence.

Opportunity.—Opportunity must always be relevant; for no circumstances can be more affirmative of a charge than that the accused had an opportunity of committing the crime. On the strength of this rests the force of a defence founded on alibi. But the Judge must be on his guard against jumping hastily from opportunity for, to commission of a crime. There can be no crime without an opportunity; but there is a wide gulf to be bridged over by evidence between opportunity and commission. This is well illustrated by a case cited by Best from Starkie in which a female servant was charged with having murdered her mistress. No persons were in the house but the deceased and the prisoner, and the doors and windows were closed and secure as usual. The prisoner was condemned and executed, chiefly on the presumption that no one else could have had access to the house; but it afterwards appeared, by the confession of one of the real murderers, that they had gained admittance into the house, which was situated in a narrow street, by means of board across the street from an upper window of an opposite house, to an upper window of that in which the deceased lived: and that having committed the murder they retreated the same way, leaving no traces behind them. (Norton 104). Facts showing the circumstances and position of the parties whose conduct is in question are generally relevant to such conduct. So, evidence of opportunity is relevant to the question whether a certain act was done. Circumstantial evidence is admissible not only in the absence of direct evidence, but also in aid of direct evidence. Dowling v. Dowling 10 Irish C. L. R. 236.

Alibi.—The theory of an alibi is that the fact of presence elsewhere is essentially inconsistent with the presence at the place and time alleged, and therefore with personal participation in the act. Wigmore Ev § 136. Where an accused takes the defence founded on an alibi, reasoning from probabilities cannot take the place of evidence. 128 Ind. Cas. 862 = 32 Cr. L. J. 63 = 31 P. L. R. 612 = A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 337.

Illustrations.—Illustration (a) is an instance of facts relevant as giving occasion or opportunity; (b) of facts constituting an effect (c) of facts constituting the state of things under which an alleged fact happened. Cunningham 91).

Motive, preparation and previous or subsequent conduct.

8. Any fact is relevant which shows or constitutes a motive or preparation for any fact in issue or relevant fact.

The conduct of any party, or of any agent to any party, to any suit or proceeding, in reference to such suit or proceeding, or in reference to any fact in issue therein or relevant thereto, and the conduct of any person an offence against whom is the subject of any proceedings, is relevant, if such conduct influences or is influenced by any fact in issue or relevant fact, and whether it was previous or subsequent thereto.

Explanation 1.—The word “conduct” in the section does not include statements, unless those statements accompany and explain acts other than statements; but this explanation is not to affect the relevancy of statements under any other section of this Act.

Explanation 2.—When the conduct of any person is relevant, any statement made to him or in his presence and hearing which affects such conduct, is relevant.

Illustrations.

(a) A is tried for the murder of B.

The facts that A murdered C, that B knew that A had murdered C and that B had tried to extort money from A by threatening to make his knowledge public are relevant.

(b) A sues B upon a bond for the payment of money, B denies the making of the bond.

The fact that at the time when the bond was alleged to be made, B required money for a particular purpose, is relevant.

(c) A is tried for the murder of B, by poison.

The fact that, before the death of B, A procured poison similar to that which was administered to B is relevant.

(d) The question is whether a certain document is the will of A. The facts that not long before the date of the alleged will A made inquiry into matters to which the provisions of the alleged will relate; that he consulted vakils in reference to making the will, and that he caused drafts of other wills to be prepared, of which he did not approve are relevant.

(e) A is accused of a crime.

The facts that, either before or at the time of, or after the alleged crime, A provided evidence which would tend to give to the facts of the case an appearance favourable to himself, or that he destroyed or concealed evidence or prevented the presence or procured the absence of persons who might have been witnesses or suborned persons to give false evidence respecting it are relevant.

(f) The question, is whether A robbed B.

The facts that after B was robbed, C said in A's presence—"the police are coming to look for the man who robbed B," and that immediately afterwards A ran away, are relevant.

(g) The question is, whether A owes B rupees 10,000.

The facts that A asked C to lend him money, and that D said to C in A's presence and hearing—"I advise you not to trust A for he owes B 10,000 rupees," said that A went away without making any answer, are relevant facts.

(h) The question is, whether A committed a crime.

The facts that A absconded after receiving a letter warning him that inquiry was being made for the criminal, and the contents of the letter, are relevant.

(i) A is accused of a crime.

The facts that, after the commission of the alleged crime, he absconded, or was in possession of property or the proceeds of property acquired by the crime or attempted to conceal things which were or might have been used in committing it, are relevant.

(j) The question is, whether A was ravished.

The facts that, shortly after the alleged rape, she made a complaint relating to the crime, the circumstances under which, and the terms in which the complaint was made, are relevant.

The fact that without making a complaint, she said that she had been ravished is not relevant as conduct under this section, though it may be relevant—

as a dying declaration under section 32, clause (1), or as corroborative evidence under section 157.

(k) The question is, whether A was robbed.

The fact that soon after the alleged robbery, he made a complaint relating to the offence, the circumstances under which, and the terms in which, the complaint was made, are relevant.

The fact that he said he had been robbed without making any complaint, is not relevant, as conduct under this section, though it may be relevant—

as a dying declaration under section 32, clause (1), or as a corroborative evidence under section 157.

Scope.—This section further illustrates the principle laid down in the preceding section. Under certain circumstances collateral facts are admissible when they fall within the definition of this section. The same principle underlies in the admission of these facts. So familiar is the practice of proving, as parts of the chain of evidence the preparation, motive, desire or intention of the party to do the act in question. On the same principle it is relevant to prove misconduct of the party in respect to the pending case, such as attempting to suppress or to fabricate testimony or bribe witness or jurors; and so it is relevant to prove the demeanour of a party accused of a crime or tort, his flight or concealment and his falsehoods, his attempt to fasten the crime on others, his possession of property connecting him with the offence, or statements made in his presence likely to affect his conduct. So whenever any act may be proved, statements accompanying and explaining that act made by or to the person doing it may be proved, if they are necessary to understand it. In criminal cases (of rape) the conduct of the person against whom the offence is said to have been committed, and in particular the fact that (she) made a complaint soon after the offence to persons to whom they would naturally complain, are deemed to be relevant; but the terms of the complaint itself seems to be deemed to be irrelevant; When a person's conduct is in issue or is, deemed to be, relevant to the issue, statements made in his presence and hearing by which his conduct is likely to have been affected are deemed to be relevant. (Burr Jones Ev. § 138).

Motive, Preparation and conduct.—Evidence is admissible not only of the facts in issue, but also of other facts which render the facts in issue probable or improbable by reason of their connection with or relation to them. Facts so connected with the facts in issue are said to be "relevant facts," and they constitute what is known as "circumstantial evidence." Thus facts which supply a motive for an act, or constitute preparation for it, or conduct apparently influenced by the act, are relevant to the question whether such an act was done by the person concerning whom such motive, preparation or conduct is proved. (R. v. Palmer, Cockle Cas. 38.), Lord Campbell in that case observed; "With respect to the alleged motive it is of great importance to see whether there was a motive for committing such a crime, or whether there was not, or whether there was an improbability of its having been committed so strong as not to be overpowered by positive evidence. But gentlemen, if there be any motive which can be assigned, I am bound to tell you that the adequacy of that motive is of little importance. We know from experience of Criminal Courts that atrocious crimes of this sort have been committed from very slight motives; not merely from malice or revenge, but to gain a small pecuniary advantage, or to drive off for a time passing difficulties."

Case.—The first information report against the accused is admissible under this section. 44 C. L. J. 253.

Motive.—A motive is that which moves a man to do a particular act. It is that which in his mind and which moves him to act and whether the belief which produces that state of mind is true or false the motive remains the same and the truth or falsity of the belief is not really in question. 62 Ind. Cas. 545. Intention must not be confounded with motive. Intention shows the nature of the act which the man believes he is doing. Motive is the reason which induces him to do the act which he intends to do and does. Motive is sometimes very important as evidencing a state of mind, which is a material element in the offence charged (Mayne's Cr. Law, § 9 A.) See also 40 P. R. 1905 Cr. = 148 P. L. R. 1905; 7 Ind. Cas. 38; 91 P. R. 1866 Cr.; 7 W. R. 60; 15 W. R. 46; 5 W. R. 28; 1 W. R. 19. In the proof of certain crimes, where motive is an important element, evidence of motive will involve the placing before the jury of a plan or scheme carried out or attempted by the accused, which may include the commission of other crimes. McKelvey's Evidence p. 190. In Com. v. Robinson. (1888) 146 Mass 571 = 16 N. E. 452, X was tried for murder of M. Evidence was offered of a scheme by X to kill Y, then to induce M to make X beneficiary under a policy under which Y had been beneficiary, and then to kill M. Is the evidence admissible? Allen J. observed: "In such cases there is a distinct and significant probative effect, resulting from the continuance of the same plan or scheme, and from the doing or other acts in pursuance thereof. It is somewhat of the nature of threats, or declarations of intention, but more especially of the preparations for the commission of the crime which is subject of the indictments." Motive for a crime, while it is always a satisfactory circumstance of corroboration when here is convincing evidence to prove the guilt of an accused person, can never supply the want of reliable evidence, direct or circumstantial of the commission of the crime with which he is charged. 94 Ind. Cas. 901 = A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88. Absence of proof of motive becomes also essential while the passive evidence fails to prove the prisoner's guilt. 5 W. R. Cr. 28; 9 A. 528; 15 W. R. Cr. 47; 25 Ind. Cas. 525; 25 Ind. Cas. 634; 1913 M. W. N. 145; 34 C. 686. When there is clear evidence that a person has committed an offence it is unnecessary to prove motive. 86 Ind. Cas. 406; 32 C. W. N. 345; see also 7 W. R. Cr. 60. The mere circumstances of an act being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence of homicidal tendency can be safely inferred. 40 P. R. 1905 Cr. = 148 P. L. R. 1905 = 2 Cr. L. J. 714. It is not always possible or necessary for the prosecution to prove the motive of the accused in committing the crime, and the absence of any proof of motives is not in itself sufficient to justify the rejection of evidence which is otherwise reliable. 4 S. L. R. 38 = 7 Ind. Cas. 38 = 11 Cr. L. J. 498; see also 91 P. R. 1866 Cr. 9 N. L. R. 184 = 22 Ind. Cas. 177 = 15 Cr. L. J. 83; 49 C. 558. Motive alone cannot supply the want of evidence. 99 Ind. Cas. 904. It is not competent to the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried on the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue. 97 Ind. Cas. 1041 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1217 = A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 28; Makin v. Attorney General, (1894) A. C. 57.

Motive how proved.—It must be proved by direct evidence and not by hearsay. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 689 = 61 M. L. J. 608; see also 3 Rang. 11 = 85 Ind. Cas. 236 = 25 Cr. L. J. 492. In cases where guilty knowledge or intention or design is of the essence of the offence, proof may be given that the defendant did other acts similar to those which form the basis of the charge. Halsbury Vol IX p. 380; see also R. v. Huson. 14 Con. C. 40; 36 C. 573; but see 47 C. 671 = 24 C. W. N. 501. Where direct evidence as to commission of offence is not available, evidence as to motive need not be considered. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 265 = 145 Ind.

Cas. 470=1933 Cr. C. 592=34 Cr. L. J. 1009=10 O. W. N. 1108. Surrounding circumstances can be referred to judge mental state on previous occasion. 130 Ind. Cas. 269=32 Cr. L. J. 478=A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 52.

Preparation.—Previous attempts to commit an offence are closely allied to preparation for the commission of it, and only differs in being carried one step further and maker to the criminal act of which however, like the former, they fall short. Best's Evidence p. 404.

Conduct, meaning of.—Conduct is the expression in outward behaviour of the quality or condition operating to produce those effects. These results are the traces by which we may infer the moving cause. In point of time, conduct is clearly associated with the internal condition giving rise to it; nevertheless the indication is strictly not a concomitant, but a retrospectant one because the argument is backward, from effect (conduct) to cause (internal condition). Wigmore § 190.

Conduct of any party.—The conduct of a party interested in any proceeding at the time when the facts occurred out of which the proceeding arises, is extremely relevant. 7 A. 385 (F. B.) at p. 394; see also 22 C. 391, 404 406; 29 A. 46; 5 W. R. Cr. 5; 37 A. 395; 30 A. 258 (P. C.); 90 Ind. Cas. 433=42 C. L. J. 111. The word "party" includes not only the plaintiff and the defendant in a civil suit, but parties in a criminal prosecution, as for instance a prisoner charged with murder. 7 A. 385; but see 53 C. 372. A person's conduct consists not only in what he does but also what he refrains from doing and the latter is often more significant. 43 C. 322; 24 W. R. 176. Conduct need not be contemporaneous. Whitely Stocks Vol. II, p. 856; 1 Q. B. 60; but see 14 Case. 341. A fact can be proved by conduct of a party, and by surrounding circumstances. 30 A. 251 (266) P. C.; 5 W. R. Cr. 5. The acts of the accused are not dealt with by s. 27 and are relevant under s. 8. 6 A. L. J. 839 (F. B.)=31 A. 592=3 Ind. Cas. 20; see also A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 695=35 P. L. R. 738=1934 Cr. C. 1009; 39 C. W. N. 368. The gesticulation of a deaf mutes at the place where a dead body was found during the police enquiry, and subsequently in Court are not admissible against the accused as conduct under s. 8 of the Evidence Act. 5 O. C. 246. But the signs made by the deceased, being the conduct of a person an offence against whom is the subject of a proceeding are relevant under s. 8 of the Evidence Act. 7 A. 385=A. W. N. 1885, 78 (F. B.). A letter written by the deceased some months before his death to the Commissioner of Police requesting police protection against apprehended assaults by the second accused is admissible in evidence under this section as containing statements which accompany and explain the conduct of the deceased. 34 Bom. L. R. 1087. Letter written by person immediately after date of retirement intimating bank his securance from firm and his consequent inability to guarantee its account is admissible. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 236=54 C. L. J. 516=59 C. 40=35 C. W. N. 705. Statements of persons writing alleged forged deed and one presenting same for registration are admissible under s. 8 as accompanying and explaining conduct. 1933 M. W. N. 96. Though the statement made by the accused to the police may be inadmissible under s. 162 Cr. Pro. Code, evidence of their conduct is certainly admissible under s. 8. A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 391. Fact of production of share of property by accused is admissible as conduct under s. 8. A. I. R. 1932. Bom. 286=56 B. 172. Where a particular act is accomplished upon a statement, the statement and act so blended together as to form part of the thing observed are admissible. 143 Ind. Cas. 17=34 Cr. L. J. 505=A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 136. In case of complaint by a ravished woman, terms in which complaint is made are relevant as conduct, but not relevant as direct proof of the act. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 233=32 Cr. L. Where the evidence against a person charged with an offence under s. 147 I. P. Code is open to doubt his conduct sometime after the occurrence cannot be taken to be such evidence of conduct under s. 8 as can be urged against him in the case. 54 Ind. Cas. 775=21 Cr. L. J. 167. Where a person had no part in crime and is not called as a witness, his conduct is not relevant. A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 81. Statement of accused after arrest in course of investigation giving false name is not admissible. A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 479.

Flight.—Flight from justice and its analogous conduct, have always been deemed indicative of a consciousness of guilt. 5 W. R. Cr. 28; see also 9A. 528 (568); 62 Ind. Cas. 545; 35 P. L. R. 740. In a case where the only evidence against the accused was that he absconded after the murder of a person, it was held that the fact of an accused's absconding was not inconsistent with his innocence knowing that an incorrect accusation has been brought against him. 4 P. L. R. 1915=16 Cr. L. J. 156=27 Ind. Cas. 219; see also 22 Bom. L. R. 1274.

Explanation I.—Explanation I points out that mere statements as distinguished from acts do not constitute conduct. Conduct may be equivocal or insensible without statements explanatory or elucidatory of it. Statements accompanying act are in fact part of the res gestae just as much as the acts themselves. They are often absolutely necessary to show the animus of the actor. Bate man v. Bailey, 5 Term R. 512; Hyde v. Palmer, 3 B & C. 657; Benison v. Cortwright, 5 B & C. 1. "This explanation points to a case in which a person whose conduct is in dispute mixes up together actions and statements; and in such a case those actions and statements may be proved as a whole. For instance a person is seen running down a street in a wounded condition, and calling out the name of his assailant, and the circumstances under which the injuries were inflicted. Here what the injured person says and what he does may be taken together and proved as a whole. But the case would be very different if some passers-by stopped him and suggested some name or asked some questions regarding the transaction. If a person were found making such statements without any questions first being asked; then his statements might be regarded as a part of his conduct. But where the statement is made merely in response to some question or suggestion, it shows a state of things introduced, not by the fact in issue, but by interposition of something else." Per Petresam C. J. in Empress v. Abdulla, 7 A. 385, 395, 396; see also 3 B. 12 (17); 11 B. H. C. 242; 45 Ind. Cas. 904; A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 162=106 Ind. Cas. 698=6 Pat. 747. This section so far as it admits a statement as included in the word "conduct" must be read in connection with sections 25 and 26, and cannot admit as statement as evidence which would be shut out by those section. 14 B. 260 (F. B.).

Explanation II.—Under this explanation another class of statements i. e. statements which affect the conduct of a person, whose conduct is relevant under this section, is admissible. The conduct of A in illustrations (f), (g) and (h) shows nothing unless the statements are put before the tribunal. Here the statements made in the presence of the party are admissible as the ground work of their conduct. Here the conduct of A is equivocal and statements are admissible to explain that conduct as part of the res gestae under the rule of Verbal Act doctrine explained in s. 6. In this explanation statements includes document addressed to a party. Vide illustration (b) Reg v. Thompson, (1910) 1 K. B. 640. "But before a bare statement made by another person in an accused's presence and prejudicial to him is allowed to be used as evidence against him, there must be something in the shape of action, conduct or words, which in the opinion of the Judge, would justify the Jury in drawing an inference that the accused substantially admitted the story told against him" Per Hawkins J. in R v. Smith, 18 Con. 72; see also 10 C. 302; 12 Ind. Cas. 87=12 Cr. L. J. 479.

Subsequent conduct of the accused.—Where once the crown has established the guilt of the accused by the evidence of prosecution witnesses then the subsequent conduct of the accused may be utilised as furnishing further proof of the correctness of the conclusion as to the guilt of the accused drawn from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. By itself however it can furnish no legitimate proof of the guilt of the accused. 126 Ind. Cas. 684=31 Cr. L. J. 1081=A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 324=7 O. W. N. 564.

9. Facts necessary to explain or introduce a fact in issue or relevant fact,

Facts necessary to explain or introduce relevant facts, or which support or rebut an inference suggested by a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which establish the identity of any thing or person whose identity is relevant or fix the time or place at which any fact issue or relevant fact happened, or which show the relation of parties by whom any such fact was transacted, are relevant in so far as they are necessary for that purpose.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is, whether a given document is the will of A.

The state of A's property and of his family at the date of the alleged will may be relevant facts.

(b) A sues B for libel imputing disgraceful conduct to A; B affirms that the matter alleged to be libellous is true.

The position and relation of the parties at the time when the libel was published may be relevant facts as introductory to the facts in issue.

The particulars of a dispute between A and B about a matter unconnected with the alleged libel are irrelevant, though the fact that there was a dispute may be relevant if it affected the relations between A and B.

(c) A is accused of a crime.

The fact that, soon after the commission of the crime, A absconded from his house, is relevant, under section 8, as conduct subsequent to and affected by facts in issue.

The fact that at the time when he left home, he had sudden and urgent business, at the place to which he went, is relevant, as tending to explain the fact that he left home suddenly.

The details of the business on which he left are not relevant, except in so far as they are necessary to show that the business was sudden and urgent.

(d) A sues B for inducing C to break a contract of service made by him with A. C. on leaving A's service, says to A—"I am leaving you because B has made me a better offer." This statement is a relevant fact as explanatory of C's conduct, which is relevant as a fact in issue.

(e) A, accused of theft, is seen to give the stolen property to B, who is seen to give it to A's wife. B says as he delivers it—"A says you are to hide this." B's statement is relevant as explanatory of a fact which is part of the transaction.

(f) A is tried for a riot and is proved to have marched at the head of a mob. The cries of the mob are relevant, as explanatory of the nature of the transaction.

Principle.—It would be practically impossible, in the conduct of an action, to plunge direct in medias res, and Judge and jury alike seek for some introductory evidence, just as one hearing only the main incident of a story desires to know the circumstances leading up to it and the results that flow from it. Those circumstances in relation to an action or suit may not per se be relevant, but in connection with the main issues to be put before the tribunal, they are treated as the introduction to main matters or by way of inducement to it. They take the place of the preamble to a statute, which, while it has no power in itself, combined with the enacting clauses becomes the statute. The variety of this introductory or preliminary proofs, as great in number as the variety of the causes of action, prevents any attempt at classification, but the rule as to their relevancy is abundantly established. In view of these facts the preliminary questions leading to the introduction of relevant fact was held entirely proper. It follows that if introductory testimony; not inherently relevant, is admissible a fortiori that should be relevant, which will explain, illustrate, elucidate evidence already given. Indeed, it is now an every-day occurrence for such evidence to be received as relevant—evidence which, if considered abstractly and apart from other evidence, would amount to nothing, but taken in connection with other facts proved in the case, tends to explain and illustrate them, either by way of reinforcing the evidence of the one side or breaking the force of that given by the other by showing its misapplication, exaggeration or other reason for depreciation of its force or value. Thus an explanation of words used in a conversation, the demonstration of the use of a scientific instrument, testimony showing the conduct of a party bears a different construction from that he would have put upon it, a conversation which would otherwise be hearsay, are examples of the class of evidence referred to. Burr Jones Ev. § 137 (a) and § 137 (b). So facts which are introductory and explanatory are always relevant. 9 B. L. R. 36 (50, 51)=17 W. R. Cr. 15; see also illustrations (a) and (b) and illustration (c) to s. 6.

Explanation of facts.—If after the commission of a crime a person, whose name is mentioned as a participator in the crime, absconds, his conduct shows that he is indeed concerned in the crime. Therefore, anything which tends to explain his conduct and furnishes a motive other than a guilty conscience is relevant under this section. Gangaram v. Imperator, 62 Ind. Cas. 545=22 Bom. L. R. 1274. Oral evidence is admissible to prove that the recital of consideration in a document is innocent. 4 Mys. L. J. 104. The Bombay police received a telegram purporting to emanate from the Chief Commissioner of Police, Naya Salad, informing him that book drafts in duplicate had been stolen and it was feared that signatures would be forged and negotiation attempted in Bombay. A second telegram was received from Naya Salad in reply to inquiries made by Bombay Police. The accused cashed a draft at the French Bank, Bombay and presented another at the Eastern Bank, Bombay. The clerk informed his superiors and as a result the accused was arrested. It was held that the telegrams purporting to be sent by the Naya Salad Police were relevant to explain the conduct of the clerk of the Eastern Bank and the Bombay Police and were therefore admissible in evidence under this section. 91 Ind. Cas. 690=27 Bom. L. R. 1373=49 B. 879=A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 71. A recital in a sale deed between strangers to the suit comprising property not in suit, to the effect that it is bounded by the suit property belonging to one of the parties to the suit is not admissible in the suit. 30 C. W. N. 761=97 Ind. Cas. 265=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 948.

Facts which support or rebut an inference.—The absence of entry in a book of account has no doubt been regarded as a relevant fact not under s. 34, but under ss. 9 and 11 to prove that an alleged payment was not made. 19 C. W. N. 612=28 Ind. Cas. 705; 74 Ind. Cas. 383=36 C. L. J. 389; 15 C. L. J.=17 C. W. N. 108; 4. C. W. N. C. C. VII; 25 A. 90; A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 153.

Identity.—It remains to observe on identity in the section, that sometimes evidence, which would be otherwise inadmissible becomes so, either as serving to identify the prisoner, or some article in his possession, as connected with the commission of the crime. Thus, in an indictment for Arson, evidence has been admitted to show that property, which had been taken out of the house at the time of the fire was afterwards discovered in the prisoner's possession. R. v. Richman, 2 East P. C. 1035 (Norton Ev. 119); see also 18 A 78; 1 C. W. N. 33; 9 C. W. N. 520.

10. Where there is reasonable ground to believe that two more persons have conspired together to commit an offence or an actionable wrong, anything said, done or written by any one of such persons in reference to their common intention, after the time when such intention was first entertained by any one of them, is a relevant fact as against each of the persons believed to be so conspiring, as well for the purpose of proving the existence of the conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that any such person was a party to it.

Illustration.

Reasonable ground exists for believing that A has joined in a conspiracy to wage war against the Queen.

The facts that B procured arms in Europe for the purpose of the conspiracy, C collected money in Calcutta for a like object, D persuaded persons to join the conspiracy in Bombay, E published writings advocating the object in view at Agra, and F transmitted from Delhi to G at Cabul the money which C had collected at Calcutta, and the contents of a letter written by H, giving an account of the conspiracy, are each relevant, both to prove the existence of the conspiracy, and to prove A's complicity in it, although he may have been ignorant of all of them, and although the persons by whom they were done were strangers to him, and although they may have taken place before he joined the conspiracy or after he left it.

Principle.—A rule is well established that, in cases where conspiracy is charged, the admission of one of the accused may become, by reason of the other proof in the case, admissible against the other. By themselves, and without other proof, they are not admissible; but, if proof shows the existence of the conspiracy, statement as to details of the crime charged, made by one party, become admissible against the other. The effect of this rule may be illustrated by supposing that the fact of the commission of the act which is charged as a crime is difficult of proof, but the fact of the conspiracy to commit such an act has been sufficiently proved. To procure a conviction, it is necessary that proof shall reach to both facts. Suppose now, that the only proof of the former fact consisted of statements in respect to it made by one of the parties. It is clear that since both are shown to have been interested together, and to have set out to commit the act, statements made by one as to what was done should be received against the other. It must be borne in mind, however, that the fact of the conspiracy is to be proved by evidence entirely outside of the admissions. It is probable that, in all cases of conspiracy where admissions are received, their reception could be explained on the ground that they are part of the res gestae.—Mackelvey's Law of Evidence p. 144.

Scope.—The operation of this section is strictly conditional upon there being a reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired to commit an offence. 37 C. 457=14 C. W. N. 1114; see also 1930 M. W. N. 1264; 81 Ind. Cas. 817=25 Cr. L. J. 1041=20 L. W. 202; 28 C. 797; 18 C. L. J. 590. Section 10 is based on principle of agency. A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 56=33 Cr. L. J. 1159=55 B. 839. This section is intended to make evidence communications between different conspirators, while the conspiracy is going on, with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy. 38 C. 169=15 C. W. N. 25; 28 C. 797. A conspiracy within the terms of this section contemplates something more than the joint act of two or more persons to commit an offence, 4 C. W. N. 528. This section says that reasonable ground for belief in the existence of a conspiracy should be shown before evidence is given of the facts of persons, who but for such conspiracy, would be strangers to one another. The existence of fact of a conspiracy must be proved before evidence can be given of the acts of any person not done in the presence of the prisoner. 5 O. C. 321. See also 11 P. W. R. 1915. What has to be established under this section to make documents found in the possession of one of several persons accused of conspiracy admissible against the other accused, is, that there is reasonable ground to believe in the existence of a conspiracy amongst such persons. It is not necessary for this purpose to establish by independent evidence that they were conspirators. 16 C. W. N. 1105; 30 C. 983. See also 25 B. 230; 9 B. L. R. App. 36; 7 B. L. R. 63; 46 C. 700; 25 Bom. L. R. 248; 46 C. 215=23 C. W. N. 193=46 Ind. Cas. 152; 42 C. 957=19 C. W. N. 676=21 C. L. J. 331. But the statement of an accused after arrest is not admissible under this section. 46 C. 700. This section is wider than the English law on this subject, which requires that acts and declarations of other conspirators must be in furtherance of the common purpose. Nor a conspirator who has severed his connection with the conspiracy is liable for the acts or declaration of the conspirators after severance. (Phipson, 74).

Conspiracy.—"The crime of conspiracy is complete, if two or more than two should agree to do an illegal thing, that is, to effect something in itself unlawful or to effect by unlawful means something which in itself may be indifferent or even lawful. It has accordingly been always held to be the law that the gist of the offence of conspiracy is the bare engagement and association to break the law, whether any act be done in pursuance thereof by the conspirators or not." Per Tindal C. J. in O'Connell v. R. 11 C. E. & F. 155; see also 42 C. 957=19 C. W. N. 676. It is undoubtedly true the law does not take notice of the intention or the state of the mind of the offender and there must be some overt act to give expression to that intention. 31 C. W. N. 239.

Proof of conspiracy.—Direct evidence is not essential to prove the conspiracy. It need not be shown that the parties actually came together and agreed in express terms to enter in and pursue a common design. Underhill Cr. Ev. § 491. In many cases the existence of conspiracy is a matter of inference deduced from criminal or unlawful acts done in pursuance of a common criminal purpose. Rv. Biscoe, 4 East 165 (171), Mulcahy v. R. L. R. 3 H. L. 306 (317); see also 9 Bom. L. R. 347; 92 Ind. Cas. 419. Possession of seditious literature by one member is evidence against the others as to the object of the association and even where such possession was obtained before the association was formed. 46 C. 215=28 C. L. J. 25=23 C. W. N. 193. The mere association of an accused with any of the conspirators is not enough by itself to convict him of being a member of the conspiracy. 39 C. L. J. 151=83 Ind. Cas. 513. Criminal conspiracy may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. 92 Ind. Cas. 419=27 Cr. L. J. 243=20 S. L. R. 18=A. I. R. 1626 Sind. 171; see also 5 Cr. L. J. 323; 32 M. 3; 35 C. L. J. 279.

Actionable wrong.—The acts and declarations of co-trespassers in civil actions and indeed of all persons combined for a common object whether civil or criminal are governed by the same rule. The acts and declarations of joint tort-feasors are not however reciprocally admissible unless combination for a common object be proved. (Phipson 74). In civil actions the declarations of co-trespassers are subject to the same rule. If they are mere narratives, they are evidence only against the makers & if they form part of the res gestae they are evidence against all. This section applies to an "actionable wrong" as well as a criminal offence. (Norton 123.)

Difference between English and Indian Law.—The provisions of this section are wider than those of the English law, according to which the act or declarations must have been done or said, not only with reference to the common intention but also in pursuance of the same. So this section renders admissible in cases of conspiracy much evidence which is not ordinarily admissible under the English Law. 5 Oudh Cas. 321; A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 369=1 Luck. C. 339. This section makes evidence communications between different conspirators while conspiracy is going on, with reference to the carrying out of a conspiracy. But it is not intended to make evidence the confession of a co-accused and put it on the same footing as a communication passing between conspirators, or between conspirators and other persons, with reference to the conspiracy. 15 C. W. N. 25=38 C. W. N. 169. Letters written by one conspirator may be evidence against others even when they are not written in furtherance of the conspiracy. 17 W. R. Cr. 15; 7 B. L. R. 63=15 W. R. Cr. 25. The illustrations to the section is inconsistent with the section, 28 Ind. Cas. 738=11 P. W. R. 1915=17 P. R. 1915 Cr.

Conspiracy must be proved.—This existence of the conspiracy must be proved before giving evidence of the acts of the alleged conspirators, and isolated acts may be proved as steps by which the conspiracy itself may be established. Fort v. Elliot, 4 Ex. 78; 31 Bom. L. R. 515; 116 Ind. Cas. 756=30 Cr. L. J. 646=A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 145 (F. B.); A. I. R. 1933 All. 690=34 Cr. L. J. 690=1933 A. L. J. 799.

Anything said or done.—A letter written by a person who is a stranger to the transaction is not admissible. 25 Bom. L. R. 248. In s. 10 "anything said" would include the statement made, speeches delivered, or declarations made. "Anything done" must be some act done and not merely the intention or knowledge of the person. "Anything written", would include (1) a manuscript whether signed or unsigned written by the person, and (2) matters transcribed by him on a type writer. A. I. R. 1933 All. 690=145 Ind. Cas. 481=1933 A. L. J. 799=1933 Cr. C. 1202; 34 Cr. L. J. 967=A. I. R. 1933 All. 690. Statement during trial is not as conspirator in furtherance of common intention of conspiracy. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 86=34 Cr. L. J. 124=141 Ind. Cas. 192. The question whether a post card written by the accused after his arrest to another accused person is admissible in evidence depends on whether the provisions of section 10 have been complied with. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 557=33 Cr. L. J. 450=137 Ind. Cas. 317. A document written by a woman since deceased in which she described her conversations with a third person in which she said that he told her that among his revolutionary friends was the accused, to whom he was accustomed to turn for guidance, is admissible under s. 10 as the statement if proved is itself a relevant fact by virtue of s. 10. A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 221 (F. B.)=35 Cr. L. J. 334. Confession of a co-conspirator is also admissible. 38 C. W. N. 1015.

When facts not otherwise relevant become relevant. 11. Facts not otherwise relevant are relevant—

- (1) if they are inconsistent with any fact in issue or relevant fact.
- (2) if by themselves or in connection with other facts they make the existence or non-existence of any fact in issue or relevant fact highly probable or improbable.

Illustrations.

- (a) The question is, whether A committed a crime at Calcutta, on a certain day. The fact that, on that day, A was at Lahore is relevant.
The fact that, near the time when the crime was committed, A was at a distance from the place where it was committed, which would render it highly improbable, though not impossible, that he committed it, is relevant.
- (b) The question is, whether A committed a crime.

The circumstances are such that the crime must have been committed either by A, B, C, or D. Every fact which shows that the crime could have been committed by no one else, and that it was not committed by either B, C, or D, is relevant.

Scope.—The words of this section are very wide, and under it, all evidence which would be held admissible under English law would be properly admitted under the Evidence Act. The Courts are justified in looking to English decisions to elucidate the meaning of the Evidence Act, and the evidence which Judges in England have admitted and Juries have acted upon, must be held to be clearly within the terms of ss. 11, 14, and 15, 16 B. 414. "This section is, not doubt expressed in terms so extensive that any fact which can, by a chain of ratiocination, be brought into connection with another, so as to have a bearing upon a point in issue, may possibly be held to be relevant within its meaning. But the connections of human affairs are so infinitely various and so far-reaching, that thus to take the section in its widest admissible sense would be to complicate every trial with a mass of collateral inquiries limited only by the patience and the means of the parties. One of the objects of the law of evidence is to restrict the investigations made by Court within the bounds prescribed by general convenience, and the object would be completely frustrated by the admission on all occasions of every circumstance on either side having some remote and conjectural probative force, the precise amount of which might itself be ascertainable only by a long trial and a determination of fresh collateral issues, growing up in endless succession, as the enquiry proceeded. That such an extensive meaning was not in the mind of the legislature, seems to be shown by several indications in the Act itself. The illustrations to this section do not go beyond familiar cases in the English Law of Evidence." Per West J. in Reg. v. Parbhu Das, 11 B. H. C. R. 90; see also A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 893; 16 B. 414 (430); 47 C. 671. The framer of the Act, also observed: "The meaning of the section would have been more fully expressed if the words to the following effect had been added to it:—'No statement shall be regarded as rendering the matter stated highly probable within the meaning of this section unless it is declared to be a relevant fact under some other section of this Act.' (Stephen's introduction p. 161). In order that a collateral fact may be admissible as relevant under this section, the requirements of the law are.—(1) that the collateral fact must itself be established by reasonably conclusive evidence, and (2) that it must, when established, afford a reasonable presumption or inference as to the matter in dispute. 6 Bom. L. R. 983. The terms of this section are no doubt wide but they must be read subject to other sections of the Act, and therefore the fact relied on must be proved in accordance with the provisions of the Act. If that fact is a statement made by a person who is not called or cannot be called, the statement cannot be admitted, unless it comes within the purview of subsequent sections of the Act, for example ss. 32 and 33. 9 A. L. J. 351, see also 9 Bom. L. R. 1047; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 893=110 Ind. Cas. 521.

Highly probable.—The words 'highly probable' point out that the connection between the facts in issue and the collateral facts sought to be proved must be so mediate as to render the co-existence of the two highly probable." Per Mitter I. in Empress v. M. J. Vyapoory, 6 C. 655. See also 16 B. 125; 30 C. 883; 18 Ind. Cas. 997=13 M. L. J. 282.

Cases.—The fact that no entry of the alleged payment was to be found in the defendant's book is relevant under this section. 76 Ind. Cas. 327=A. I. R. 1924 Nag. 22; 4 C. W. N. ccvii; 15 C. L. J. 7=17 C. W. N. 108; 25 A. 90; but see 10 C. 1024; 7 C. L. R. 356; 30 C. 231 (247). The point may now be taken to have been set at rest by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi, 23 C. W. N. 50 (P. C.)=28 C. L. J. 409=45 C. 878. Where the fact of absence of entry was held relevant, its effect to be determined in the light of the general evidence in the case. Where the question is whether a man is a habitual cheat, the fact that he belonged to an organisation formed for the purpose of habitually cheating in concert is relevant under s. 11 of the Evidence Act. 37 C. 91=14 C. W. N. 49=5 Ind. Cas. 29. In a charge of forgery of evidence of possession by the accused of other documents suspected or even proved to be forged is admissible under this section. 11 B. H. C. 90. In a charge under s. 401, I. P. Code, a former judgment 25 years old convicting accused of dacoity was held admissible to show criminal tendency and not habit. A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 195=26 Bom. L. R. 1223=26 Cr. L. J. 1391=89 Ind. Cas. 527. In a trial for an offence under s. 4 (a) of the Prevention of Gambling Act, 1887, the evidence that he was previously convicted of similar offence cannot be let in either under s. 54 or s. 11 of the Evidence Act. 28 B. 129. A cablegram purporting to be from one, in Calcutta was sent to P. in London. On the receipt of the cablegram and expressly referring to it P posted a reply to B. in Calcutta. Held, that P's reply to B would be a relevant fact under section 11 and cogent evidence to show that B. was the sender of the cablegram. 22 Ind. Cas. 179=18 C. L. J. 567=18 C. W. N. 386=15 Cr. L. J. 33. Where accused was charged for conspiracy to commit dacoity and under Arms Act, the fact that the accused was seen displaying revolver to companion is relevant under s. 11 A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 474=33 Cr. L. J. 854=59 C. 1361=55 C. L. J. 439. Where printed newspaper was found with accused, it is no evidence of truth of facts stated therein unless their existence is made by other evidence highly probable. A. I. R. 1933 All. 690=34 Cr. L. J. 967=1933 799=145 Ind. Cas. 481.

Horoscope.—48 Ind. Cas. 400.

In suits for damages, facts tending to enable Court to determine amount are relevant.

12. In suits in which damages are claimed. any fact which will enable the Court to determine the amount of damages which ought to be awarded. is relevant.

Notes.—Damages unless expressly admitted are deemed to be fact in issue. Evidence tending to increase or diminish the damage is of course, admissible, though not expressly involved in the issue. Thus, in an action for breach of promise of marriage, plaintiff may give evidence of the defendant's fortune; for it obviously tends to prove the loss sustained by the plaintiff; but not in an action for adultery; James v. Biddington, 6 C. and P. 589; nor for seduction. Hodsoll v. Taylor, L. R. 9 Q. B. 79, nor for malicious prosecution; for it is nothing to the purpose "that damages are taken from a deep pocket" Short v. Story, Winton Sum. As. 1835 per Alderson, B.—Roscoe's N. S. 86. Where the question is as to the amount of compensation for defamation of character, it is plausible argument that the defendant should be allowed to show how little the plaintiff had to lose, Scott v. Simpson, 8 Q. B. D. 491; Foot v. Tracy, 1 Johns. 46.

Damages as subject of opinion evidence.—In ordinary cases the Court is to determine the amount of damages. Lincoln v. Railroad Co. 23 Wend (N. Y.) 425. But there are questions of damages, dependent, by some rule of law, upon subsidiary questions of value of property and upon these latter questions persons specially qualified are often called upon for opinions so that opinions of experts as to values may furnish the basis upon which the jury arrives at a measure of damages, Mackelvey's Evidence p. 247. In Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 470, Gray J. said; "Whenever the value of any particular kind of property, which may not be presumed to be within the actual knowledge of all the jurors, is in issue, the testimony of witness acquainted with the value of similar property is admissible, although they have never seen the very article in question."

Facts relevant when right or custom is in question.

13. Where the question is as to the existence of any right or custom, the following facts are relevant:—

- (a) any transaction by which the right or custom in question was created, claimed, modified, recognized, ascertained or denied, or which was inconsistent with its existence;
- (b) particular instances in which the right or custom was claimed, recognized or exercised, or in which its exercise was disputed, asserted or departed from.

Illustrations.

The question is whether A has a right to a fishery. A deed conferring the fishery on A's ancestors, a mortgage of the fishery by A's father, a subsequent grant of the fishery by A's father, irreconcilable with the mortgage, particular instances in which A's father exercised the right or in which the exercise of the right was stopped by A's neighbours, are relevant facts.

Right.—The right mentioned in the above section is not a public right only. 23 W. R. 311; see also 6 C. 171; 39 C. L. J. 526. In the absence of any qualification such as is found in s. 48, "right and custom" in the section 13 must be understood as comprehending all rights and customs recognised by law, and therefore including a right of ownership. 10 B. 439; 31 B. 143; 12 M. 9; 15 M. 12; 16 M. 191; 12 A. 1. But the majority of Full Bench in Gujju Lal v. Fateh Lal, 6 C. 187 (F. B.) held that the word right includes only incorporeal rights. But Mitter J. dissented from the views taken by the majority and held that such contention is not warranted by any general principle. See also 2 C. W. N. 501.

Custom.—"Customs" accused in the sense of a rule which in a particular district, class or family has from long usage obtained the force of law must be (a) ancient; (b) continued, unaltered uninterrupted uniform, constant; (c) peaceable and acquiesced in; (d) reasonable (e) certain and definite (f) compulsory and not optional to every person to follow or not. The acts required for the establishment of customary law must have been performed with the consciousness that they spring from a legal necessity and must not be immoral" (Woodroffe Ev. 165).

Transaction.—Where a party sets up a particular right, judgments not inter partes in previous cases in which a similar right was asserted are admissible in evidence. 60 Ind. Cas. 142; 59 Ind. Cas. 734; 40 Ind. Cas. 838; 64 Ind. Cas. 465; 65 Ind. Cas. 522; 65 Ind. Cas. 525; 65 Ind. Cas. 699; 65 Ind. Cas. 398; 1 Pat. L. T. 221; 78 Ind. Cas. 895. It is well established that although a judgment not inter partes may be used in evidence in certain circumstances, as a fact in issue, or as a relevant fact, or possibly as a transaction, the recitals in the judgment cannot be used as evidence in a litigation between the parties. 20 C. W. N. 643=23 C. L. J. 583=35 Ind. Cas. 298; 28 C. W. N. 942; 82 Ind. Cas. 99; 40 C. L. J. 30=82 Ind. Cas. 392. See also 15 M. 12; 22 I. A. 60; 24 A. I. 10; 12 A. 1; 12 C. W. Amrit*, 24 B. 598 observed: "It is not easy to reconcile this conflict of views in particular instances, but apparently the cases which decide that judgments, not inter partes, are not admissible in evidence proceed chiefly on the ground that those judgments are sought to be used as having the effect, more or less, of res judicata; For that purpose a judgment inter partes alone can be admitted in evidence, but for other purposes, where judgments are sought to be used to show the conduct of the parties or to show particular instances of the exercise of a right or admission made by ancestors, or how the property was dealt with previously, they may be used under secs. 11 and 13 as exceptions recognised under s. 43 as relevant evidence". The words of this section are very wide. There is nothing in the section which requires that the right asserted should further have been successfully asserted, giving a wide interpretation to the section before assertion of the right is sufficient. 92 Ind. Cas. 104=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 727. Documents not inter partes are admissible under this section. 30 C. W. N. 826=95 Ind. Cas. 334=43 C. L. J. 327=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 822; see also A. I. 14. Facts showing the existence of any state of mind, such as intention

Facts showing existence of state of mind, or of body or bodily feeling, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill will or good will towards any particular person, or showing the existence of any state of body or bodily feeling—are relevant when the existence of any such state of mind or body or bodily feeling is in issue or relevant.

* Explanation 1.—A fact relevant as showing the existence of a relevant state of mind must show that the state of mind exists, not generally, but in reference to the particular matter in question.

* These Explanations were substituted for the original Explanation to s. 14. by the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act, 1891 (3 of 1891) s. 1 (2).

* Explanation 2—But where, upon the trial of a person accused of an offence, the previous commission by the accused of an offence is relevant within the meaning of the section, the previous conviction of such person shall also be a relevant fact. †

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. It is proved that he was in possession of a particular stolen article.

The fact that, at the same time, he was in possession of many other stolen articles is relevant, as tending to show that he knew each and all of the articles of which he was in possession to be stolen.

‡ (b) A is accused of fraudulently delivering to another person a counterfeit coin which at the time when he delivered it, he knew to be counterfeit.

The fact that, at the time of its delivery, A was possessed of a number of other pieces of counterfeit coin is relevant.

The fact that A had been previously convicted of delivering to another person as genuine a counterfeit coin, knowing it to be counterfeit, is relevant.

(c) A sues B for damage done by a dog of B's which B knew to be ferocious.

The facts that the dog had previously bitten X, Y and Z, and that they had made complaints to B, are relevant.

(d) The question, is whether A, the acceptor of a bill of exchange, knew that the name of the payee was fictitious.

The fact that A had accepted other bills drawn in the same manner before they could have been transmitted to him by the payee if the payee had been a real person, is relevant as showing that A knew that the payee was a fictitious person.

(e) A is accused of defaming B by publishing an imputation intended to harm the reputation of B.

The fact of previous publications by A respecting B, showing ill-will on the part of A towards B, is relevant, as proving A's intention to harm B's reputation by the particular publication in question.

The facts that there was no previous quarrel between A and B, and that A repeated the matter complained of as he heard it, are relevant, as showing that A did not intend to harm the reputation of B.

(f) A is sued by B for fraudulently representing to B that C was solvent, whereby B, being induced to trust C, who was insolvent suffered loss.

The fact that, at time when A represented C to be solvent, C was supposed to be solvent by his neighbours and by persons dealing with him, is relevant, as showing that A made the representation in good faith.

(g) A is sued by B for the price of work done by B, upon a house of which A is owner, by the order of C, a contractor.

A's defence is that B's contract was with C.

The fact that A paid C for the work in question is relevant, as proving that A did, in good faith, make over to C the management of the work in question, so that C was in a position to contract with B on C's own account, and not as agent for A.

(h) A is accused of the dishonest misappropriation of property which he had found, and the question is whether, when he appropriated it, he believed in good faith that the real owner could not be found.

The fact that public notice of the loss of the property had been given in the place where A was, is relevant, as showing that A did not, in good faith, believe that the real owner of the property could not be found.

The fact that A knew, or had reason to believe, that the notice was given fraudulently by C, who had heard of the loss of the property and wished to set up a false claim to it, is relevant, as showing that the fact that A knew of the notice did not disprove A's good faith.

(i) A is charged with shooting at B with intent to kill him. In order to show A's intent the fact of A's having previously shot at B may be proved.

(j) A is charged with sending threatening letters to B. Threatening letters previously sent by A to B may be proved, as showing the intention of the letters.

* These Explanations were substituted for the original Explanation to s. 14, by the Indian Evidence Act (1872) Amendment Act, 1891 (3 of 1891, s. 1 (1)).

† See the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act 5 of 1898), s. 311.

‡ This Illustration was substituted for the original Illustration (b) to s. 14, by Act 3 of 1891, s. 1 (2).

(k) The question is, whether A has been guilty of cruelty towards B, his wife. Expressions of their feeling towards each other shortly before or after the alleged cruelty are relevant facts.

(l) The question is whether A's death was caused by poison.

Statements made by A during his illness as to his symptoms are relevant facts.

(m) The question is, what was the state of A's health at the time when an assurance on his life was effected.

Statements made by A as to the state of his health at or near the time in question are relevant facts.

(n) A sues B for negligence in proving him with a carriage for hire not reasonably fit for use, whereby A was injured.

The fact that B's attention was drawn on other occasions to the defect of that particular carriage is relevant.

The fact that B was habitually negligent about the carriages which he let to hire is irrelevant.

(o) A is tried for the murder of B by intentionally shooting him dead.

The fact that A on other occasions shot at B is relevant, as showing his intention to shoot B.

The fact that A was in the habit of shooting at people with intent to murder them is irrelevant.

(p) A is tried for a crime.

The fact that he said something indicating an intention to commit that particular crime, is relevant.

The fact that he said something indicating a general disposition to commit crimes of that class is irrelevant.

Principle.—Where the question is as to knowledge, intent motive or any bodily or mental state, evidence of other acts done, showing the existence of such knowledge, intent, motive, or bodily or mental state are admissible, even though it involves the proof of other crimes. McKelvey's Evidence p 189. In Reg. v. Francis (1874) L. R. 2 Crown Cas 128, upon the indictment of X for obtaining money by false pretences, by representing a ring to be a diamond ring, evidence was offered, in order to prove guilty knowledge on X's part that he had, shortly before, offered other false articles to other pawn-brokers. The evidence was held admissible. In delivering the judgment Lord Coleridge J. said; "It tends to show that he was pursuing a course of similar acts, and thereby it raises a presumption, that he was not acting under a mistake. It is not conclusive, for a man may be many times under a similar mistake, or may be many times the dupe of another; but it is less likely he should be so oftener than once, and every circumstance which shows he was not under a mistake on any one of these occasions, strengthens the presumption that he was not on the last; and this is amply borne out by the authorities." In Com v. Russel, 156 Mass. 196 at p. 197 Barker J. observed: "The admission of such evidence is necessary, because guilty knowledge is a fact not susceptible of proof by direct evidence, and can rarely be shown by explicit admissions, but only by acts and conduct." So, also on a question of malice, evidence of other criminal acts leading up to one in question, which show the state of mind of the accused, is admissible. There is a tendency not to extend the doctrine, but to confine it to cases when there is very clear reason for its application on account of the necessity of showing motive, intent or guilty knowledge. Reg. v. Oddy, 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 264. In that case Lord Campbell C. J. said: "I should be very unwilling to apply their principle generally to criminal case." Where, however, the bodily or mental state is not a material fact in issue, evidence as to such state is inadmissible. McKelvey's Evidence p. 192.

Scope.—This important section had better be considered by remarks upon the several illustrations seriatim. It consists of a collection of the cases in which the strict rules of evidence are somewhat relaxed by the admission of collateral circumstances, where it is necessary to show a particular state of mind. Where a man is on his trial for a specific crime, such as uttering a forged note or coin, or receiving an article of stolen property, the issue is whether he is guilty of that specific act. To admit therefore as evidence against him other instances of a similar nature clearly is to introduce collateral matter. This cannot be with the object of inducing the jury to infer, that because the accused has committed a crime of a similar description on other occasions, he is guilty on the present: but to anticipate the defence that he acted innocently, and without any guilty knowledge, or that he had no intention or motive to commit the act. The first four illustrations

(a) (b) (c) (d) are on the point of knowledge ; the fifth (e), as also (i) and (j) ; of intention ; the sixth (f) as also (g) and (h), of good faith (k) of feeling ; (l), (m) of state of body ; (n) of negligence, and also of knowledge ; and (n), (o) and (p) illustrate the explanation (Norton 131). So this section is of assistance where the existence of a state of mind such as intention, knowledge, good faith, negligence, rashness, ill-will or good will towards a person or the existence of a state of body or bodily feeling was not or could not be in issue in the circumstance of the case. 24 C. W. N. 501=47 C. 671 (F. B.) In Baharuddin Mandal v. Emperor, 18 C. L. J. 578, it was ruled that proof cannot be offered of an independent offence to show that by reason of such independent offence the accused is more likely to have committed the one for which he is on trial ; in other words, evidence of such collateral offence can not be received as substantive evidence of the offence on trial, though under s. 14 evidence may be given of intention and like matters where the factum of intention or like is relevant. This distinction between cases where intention is and cases where intention is not relevant is illustrated by the decision of Emperor v. Debendra, 36 C. 573=13 C. W. N. 923 and Emperor v. Abdul Wahed, 8 A. L. J. 1269=12 Ind. Cas. 987 ; which lie on the opposite sides of the dividing line. See also 11 B. H. C. 90 ; 8 B. 223 ; 15 B. 491 (502). Whenever it is necessary to rebut even by anticipation, the defence of accident, mistake or other innocent condition of mind, evidence that the defendant has been concerned in a systematic course of conduct of the same specific kind at that in question may be given. To admit evidence under this head, however the other acts tendered must be of the same kind as that in question and not of a different character, and the acts tendered must also have been approximate in point of time to that in question. 19 C. W. N. 676 (692) ; 27 C. 139 ; 11 Cr. L. J. 430 ; 36 C. 573. In this connection it is also to be noted that section 15 is an application of the general rule laid down in this section. 36 C. 573 ; 18 C. L. J. 578=27 Ind. Cas. 187=15 Cr. L. J. 43. This section is wholly inapplicable in a case, where the state of mind or feeling of, any of the parties is admittedly not a fact in issue or a relevant fact and the guilt or innocence depends on proof of actual facts. A. I. R. 1928 Lah 382 ; 86 Ind. Cas. 970=29 C. W. N. 483=26 Cr. L. J. 906=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 674. When the intention of the accused is a relevant fact, evidence of similar transactions both prior and subsequent to the alleged offence is admissible as evidence of intention. 83 Ind. Cas. 811=26 Cr. L. J. 185. When a person is charged with, or alleged to have done, some act involving guilty knowledge or intention, or other state of mind, after proof of the physical act, evidence is admissible of his similar acts on other occasions, but only in order to show such guilty knowledge or intention or state of mind. (R. v. Geering, 18 L. M. J. M. C. 215=Cockle Cas. 99). See also R. v. Rhodes, L. R. (1899) 1 Q. B. 77. Where it was held that such evidence was admissible even when such acts were subsequent to the transaction, in question if they show a connected, or entire, scheme or system of operations. "The matter may be roughly stated thus ; unconnected conduct on other occasions is never admissible to prove the acts reas but is admissible to prove the mens rea or other state of mind. The rule applies to both civil and criminal cases. With regard to criminal charges, in the case of R. v. Bond, (1906) 2 K. B. 389, Bray J. summarised the law as follows :— (1) Where the prosecution seeks to prove a system or course of conduct ; (2) Where the prosecution seeks to rebut a suggestion on the part of the prisoner of accident or mistake ; (3) Where the prosecution seeks to prove knowledge by the prisoner of some fact." Cockle Ev. 100.

Intention—In criminal cases the conduct of the prisoner on other occasions is sometimes relevant, where such conduct has no other connection with the charge under enquiry than that it tends to throw light on what were his motives and intentions in doing the act complained of. The intention with which a particular act is done constitutes often the burden of the inquiry, and to prove the intent it becomes necessary, in many instances, to extend the examination beyond the particular transaction concerning which the accused is upon his trial. For the purpose, therefore, of proving the intent, not of proving the act itself, it is often permissible to show other criminal transactions of the same sort springing from the like mental condition. (Burr Jones s. 143). "It is, that though the prisoner is not to be prejudiced in the eyes of the jury by the needless admission of testimony tending to prove another crime, yet whenever the evidence which tends to prove the other crime tends also to prove this one, not merely showing the prisoner to be a bad man, but by showing the particular bad intent to have existed in his mind at the time when he did the act complained of, it is admissible ; and it is also admissible, if it really tends to this, as in the facts of most cases it does not, to prove the act itself." (r. Bish Cr. Pro. S. 1067). See also 16 B. 414 ; 11 B. H. C. 90 ; 8 B. 223 ; 6 C. 655 ; U. B. R. N. 345 ; 35 M. 186.

Explanation I.—Evidence as to general dishonesty of character is not admissible for the purpose of raising a presumption of dishonesty in the particular case under trial. 8 Cr. L. J. 411 ; see also 13 Ind. Cas. 781.

Explanation II.—As regards an offence under s. 400 I. P. C. previous commission of dacoity by the same accused is relevant under s. 14 of the Evidence Act. Convictions previous to the time specified in the charge, or previous to the framing of the charge are relevant under this explanation. But subsequent convictions are not admissible. 1 C. W. N. 146.

Cases.—In a prosecution under s. 415 of the I. P. Code, evidence would be relevant on the question whether the accused was in embarrassed circumstances at the date when he entered into his contract. A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 273=34 Bom. L. R. 313. Political view of accused are relevant in considering his intention. 1933 Cr. C. 433.=A. I. R. 1933 All. 498. Evidence of previous conviction is admissible not as evidence of character but to form habit and association. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 355=1933 Cr. C. 976=10 O. W. N. 688. It would be dangerous to infer that, because a man was generally dishonest, he was dishonest in a particular case. 38 Ind. Cas. 723=13 N. L. R. 35. In a trial for an offence under section 4 (a) of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bom. Act IV of 1887) the evidence that the accused was previously convicted of similar offence is admissible to show guilty knowledge or intention. 28 B. 129=5 Bom. L. R. 805 ; but see 4 C. W. N. 97=27 C. 139. In Banai v. The King Emperor, 15 C. W. N. 461=38 C. 408, the Court observed. "But in cases where the other evidence has established association for purpose of habitually committing theft, evidence of previous conviction whether for offences against property or for bad livelihood, has confined, always been admitted, not as evidence of character, but as evidence of habits and it would seem that of such evidence, convictions for bad livelihood would be more cogent than those for isolated thefts. Such evidence must of course be weighed. A single instance of theft for instance would comment for little or nothing. There must be at least two or more cases against the same, individual to show habit, but that the evidence of such convictions is admissible is clearly against the weight of authority in this case. Where certain speeches form the subject-matter of a charge for sedition and when speeches form part of a series of speeches or lectures on one topic, delivered within a short period of time, any of such speeches or lectures will be admissible under this section as evidence to prove the intention of the speaker in respect of the speech which forms the subject matter of the charge. 32 M. 3 ; see also 19 C. 35 ; 35 C. 945 ; 22 B. 112 ; 8 Mys. On a charge against the accused of cheating by falsely representing that they were the servants of a wealthy lady and were entrusted to act on her behalf in the arrangements for loans, to be made to the complainants out of the money she possessed, and thereby obtaining money from them on one pretext or another in connection with the affair held that evidence of instances similar but unconnected transactions with other persons, during the period covered by the evidence of the complainants is admissible under section 14 of the Evidence Act in order to prove intention of the accused. 15 A. L. J. 241=39 A. 273. In a case of cheating, it is open to the prosecution to show that the acts charged against the accused were parts of a series of similar acts committed by him, or in which he was concerned, at or about the time in question. Evidence of such other acts, whether previous or subsequent to the frauds charged against the accused is relevant for the purpose of showing whether or not the intention of the accused was honest or fraudulent. 269 P. L. R. 1914. In cases where the other evidence has established association for purposes of habitually committing theft, evidence of previous convictions whether for offences, against property or for bad livelihood is admissible, not as evidence of character, but as evidence of habit. 9 Ind. Where the accused is charged under s 409, Penal Code for embezzling three specific sums. Held that evidence of collateral offences in respect of other sums was not admissible. A. I. R. 1928, 382. Where in a particular trial under section 420 I. P. Code, evidence was let in with regard to previous act of fraud which was alleged to have been committed by the accused person on the witness who spoke to the fact that on a particular occasion he was cheated by the accused in respect of certain sum. Held that the evidence is clearly inadmissible in law and it cannot be brought in with the aid of s. 14 or 15 of the Evidence Act. 29 C. W. N. 483=86 Ind. Cas. 970=26 Cr. L. In a prosecution under s. 209 of the Penal Code for having knowingly made a false claim in a suit against certain persons, evidence relating to other suits brought by the accused against other persons may be admissible against the accused under ss. 14 and 15 of the Evidence Act for the purpose of showing ill-will or animus of the accused and as systematic cause of fraud or by systematic series of fraudulent claims and for the purpose of rebutting the defence that the particular suit was brought in good faith or any suggestion that it was brought under some mistake or misapprehension. 46 Ind. Cas. 696=22 C. W. N. 492=19 Cr. L. J. 776. The accused a license-clerk in a Municipal office, was charged with having cheated three persons of demanding from each two annas in excess of what was legitimate license-fee. On behalf of the prosecution evidence was produced to prove that he has also cheated other persons. Held that the evidence was inadmissible. 8 A. L. J. 1269=12 Ind. Cas. 987. Evidence of other dacoities by accused is inadmissible either under s. 14 or 15 of the Evidence Act. 13 Ind. Cas. 781=1912 M. W. N. 49=13 Cr. L. J. 125. In a suit on libel, evidence of instances of acts of the plaintiff more or less closely resembling the particular acts of misconduct imputed to him in the libellous statement is inadmissible. 19 Ind. Cas. 98=15 Bom. L. R. 130. Where in a prosecution under s. 304 I. P. Code, it was sought to be proved that the accused had taken part in a similar occurrence just previously by which as a result of the rash driving of his motor car certain persons were injured. Held that evidence regarding the previous occurrence was not relevant either under s. 14 or s. 15 of the Act. 1929 M. W. N. 395. The evidence to show the character of the accused would not be relevant under s. 14 of the Evidence Act as showing the existence of any relevant state of mind in as much the tendency to commit theft generally would not fairly be deemed to throw any light on the existence of an intention to commit the offence of dacoity. 54 B. 524=127 Ind. Cas. 189=31 Cr. L. J. 1168=32 Bom. L. R. 324=A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 157.

15. When there is a question whether an act was accidental, or intentional [or done with a particular knowledge or whether act was accidental or intentional], the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences, in each of which the person doing the act was concerned, is relevant.

Illustrations.

(a) A is accused of burning down his house in order to obtain money for which it is insured.

The facts that A lived in several houses successively, each of which he insured, in each of which a fire occurred, and after each of which fires A received payment from a different insurance office, are relevant, as tending to show that the fires were not accidental.

(b) A is employed to receive money from the debtors of B. It is A's duty to make entries in a book showing the amounts received by him. He makes an entry showing that on a particular occasion he received less than he really did receive.

The question is whether this false entry was accidental or intentional.

The facts that other entries made by A in the same book are false, and that the false entry is in each case in favour of A, are relevant.

(c) A is accused of fraudulently delivering to B a counterfeit rupee.

The question is, whether the delivery of the rupee was accidental.

The facts that, soon before or soon after the delivery to B, A delivered counterfeit rupees to C, D and E are relevant, as showing that the delivery to B was not accidental.

Regislative changes.—The words in the brackets have been inserted by Act 3 of 1891.

Scope.—This section is an application of the general rule laid down in s. 14, and it is not necessary under the section that all the acts should form part of a series of similar occurrences; such acts may be proved. Where the particular transaction is one of a series of similar frauds, evidence of the other frauds is admissible to prove the intention of the accused in the particular case. 36 C. 573=13 C. W. N. 973=9 C. L. J. 610; see also 24 C. W. N. 501 (F. B.). Section 15 must be read as subject to section 14, so far as evidence of knowledge and intention is concerned. 38 Ind. Cas. 723=13 N. L. R. 35. So under this section the prosecution cannot use the evidence as to the commission of the other acts of a similar nature in proof of the existence of the specific acts which form the subject matter of the charge. But when the existence of these acts has been established by evidence aliunde and the only question which remains to be decided is whether they were done accidentally or intentionally or with a particular knowledge or intention, then and there only could the evidence of other similar acts be let in. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 382; see also 12 P. R. 1913 Cr.=269 P. L. R. 1914=6 Ind. Cas. 964; 42 C. 957=21 C. L. J. 331=19 C. W. N. 676; A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 231=50 B. 174=28 Bom. L. R. 115; 39 Ind. Cas. 673=15 A. L. J. 241=39 A. 273=18 Cr. L. J. 529. In a case of cheating it is open to the prosecution to show that the acts charged against the accused were parts of a series of similar acts committed by him or in which he was concerned, at or about the time in question. 26 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.; see also 36 C. 573=13 C. W. N. 973=9 C. L. J. 610; 29 C. W. N. 483=29 Cr. L. J. 906=86 Ind. Cas. 970. So to come under this section it must be established that the act forms part of a series of similar occurrences. It is well established that the gist of the section is that unless there is a sufficient and reasonable connection between the fact to be proved and the evidentiary fact, that is, unless that is in substance some common link, they cannot form a series. So where each of the occurrences had its own special features they could properly be deemed similar occurrences. 24 C. W. N. 501 (517) F. B.; see also 19 C. W. N. 676 (692). Section 15 of the Evidence Act covers both previous and subsequent similar occurrences. 22 C. W. N. 494=46 Ind. Cas. 696=19 Cr. L. J. 776. In a prosecution for theft it cannot be assumed, as a matter of course that a previous conviction for the same offence is relevant in establishing the guilt of the accused. In order that it may be relevant under this section it must be strictly shown that that section applies. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. 1, 144. See also 13 Cr. L. J. 125; 12 Cr. L. J. 611; 269 P. L. R. 1914; 25 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.; 47 C. 671; 60 Ind. Cas. 331.

Principle.—"In criminal cases the leading principle is that evidence of all matters which are irrelevant to the issue will be excluded. But to this there is exception that evidence will be admitted of any facts which tend to explain or throw light on the transaction in issue, as for instance, to establish a systematic course of conduct, or to show criminal intention or guilty knowledge in the mind of the accused, or to rebut the defence that the criminal act was done accidentally or undesignedly"—Powell 128. This section is applicable where the only question is whether an untruthful statement is accidental or intentional or with particular knowledge or intention. 15 A. L. J. 241.

Cases.—Accused were prosecuted for misappropriation by defalcation of accounts made in 1925 and 1926, evidence was adduced by prosecution of similar acts done by the accused before 1925 : Held that the evidence was admissible under section 15 to rebut the probable plea of mistake or innocent condition of the mind of the accused, the evidence being that of a system in which there was a common link between acts of 1924 and those of 1925. 111 Ind. Cas. 387=29 Cr. L. J. 135=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 880 ; see also R. v. Bond, (1906) 2 K. B. 413-416 ; R. v. Francis, 43 L. J. M. C. 97 ; R. v. Stephens 16 Cox. 387 ; R. v. Richardson, 2 F. & F. 343. The accused, a grocer at Bhiwandi, ordered goods for Bombay and the goods were put into a hired motor lorry. To reach Bhiwandi, the lorry passed through the limits of the Kalyan Municipality ; but the lorry driver instead of paying octroi on the goods at Kalyan rapidly passed the ingoing Naka and similarly passed out at the other end of the limits. The Nakedar in charge of the ingoing Naka reported this matter to the municipality. The accused was charged under s. 77. (2) of the Bombay District Municipal Act for introducing the said goods within the Octroi limits without paying dues. Held that the evidence that the accused had been connected with similar cases as the one under charge was admissible to show his knowledge and intention. A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 231=50 B. 174=28 Bom. L. R. 115. The accused on the 7th June 1909 administered dhutura poison to A and B both of whom died from the effects thereof, and on the following day administered the same poison to C and D. The former got ill and recovered but the latter died. Held that the events which occurred or were said to have occurred, on the 7th and 8th of June were relevant to the case of charge of murder of D as forming incidents in series of similar transactions occurring about the same time and tending to show system and intention and to negative the idea of accident. 9 Ind. Cas. 731=32 P. L. R. 1911 ; see also 73 Ind. Cas. 262=6 N. L. J. 144. Where in a trial upon a charge under section 399 of the Penal Code the accused pleaded their presence at a particular spot, armed and in company was accidental and innocent it is open to the prosecution to rebut the plea, and section 15 of the Evidence Acts admits the production of any evidence which would determine the construction to be placed upon the acts of the accused which in themselves might or might not be preparation for dacoity, and evidence that one or more members of the gang had been concerned in previous and similar offences committed at the same place is admissible for the purpose. 71 Ind. Cas. 361=24 Cr. L. J. 136. In a case of cheating, it is open to the prosecution to show that the acts charged against the accused were parts of a series of similar acts committed by him, or in which he was concerned, at or about the time in question. Evidence of such other acts, whether previous or subsequent to the frauds charged against the accused, is relevant for the purpose of showing whether or not the intention of the accused was honest or fraudulent. Evidence merely to prove that the accused person's character is such that he is likely to commit the act with which he is charged, is not admissible. 26 P. W. R. 1910 Cr.=6 Ind. Cas. 964. In a charge against the accused of cheating by falsely representing that he was the Dewan of an estate and could procure employment for the complainant and thereby obtaining a sum of money as a pretended security deposit, evidence of instances of similar but unconnected, transactions with other persons before or after the date of the offence charged, is admissible, not to establish the factum of the offence but to prove that the transaction in issue was one of a systematic series of fraud, and that the intention of the accused on the particular occasion in question was dishonest and fraudulent. 36 C. 573=13 C. W. N. 973=9 C. L. J. 610 ; see also Reg v. Rhodes, 1 Q. B. D. 77 ; Rex v. Wyatt, 20 Cox. Cr. C. 462.

Where the accused was charged under s. 409 Penal Code, for embezzling three specific sums : Held that evidence of collateral offence in respect of other sums was not admissible.

In a suit on libel evidence of instances of acts of the plaintiff more or less closely resembling the particular act of misconduct imputed to him in the libellous statement is inadmissible. The defendants can justify the libel as true in substance and in fact by proving its truth not the truth of other acts and occasions having nothing to do with the act in question ; unless it is intended to show that those acts were parts of the habitual and intentional, not accidental, conduct of the plaintiff. Nadirsha v. Piroj Sha, 19 Ind. Cas. 98=15 Bom. L. R. 130. It is not open to the prosecution to adduce evidence to show that on two previous occasions the accused under trial had committed murders themselves but had falsely charged and got convicted some other person as murderers. 62 Ind. Cas. 545=22 Bom. L. R. 1274=22 Cr. L. J. 529. Two persons A and B were tried on the 21st July 1919 for the offence of murdering D a woman of the town, on the 10th December 1914, of conspiring to rob her, of theft of property from her house and for abetment of murder and theft. At the trial the prosecution wanted to adduce evidence (1) of the association of the two accused, (2) of their association in cases spoken of by other women of the town in connection with the charges of theft which they made against them and generally of a series of incidents from 1914 to 1918 that they used to go about together under different names, A taking B with him as his Durwan and introducing himself as a Babu to rich prostitutes of the town, and this being followed by their subsequent disappearance and discovery of loss of money and ornaments. Held that the evidence was not admissible. 24 C. W. N. 501 (F. B.). In a case under s. 420, I. P. Code the question of guilt or innocence of the accused depends upon proof of actual facts and not upon the state of the accused's mind. Therefore evidence as to any previous act of fraud (committed by the accused) is not admissible under any provision of the law. 29 C. W. N. 483=26 Cr. L. J. 906=86 Ind. Cas. 970; but see 36 C. 573=13 C. W. N. 923=9 C. L. J. 61. Where conduct alleged and proved against accused is susceptible of more than one interpretation, evidence of similar acts is admissible to show systematic conduct. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 136=34 Cr. L. J. 294=1934 Cr. C. 197=142 Ind. Cas. 274.

Passing bad coins.—In cases of passing bad coins previous offence is relevant. R. v. Jarves, 7 Con. 53.

Arson.—In cases of arson, evidence may be given of previous fires that the prisoner had experienced in his premises. R. v. Gray, 4 F & F. 1102.

16. When there is a question whether a particular act was done, the existence of any course of business, according to which it naturally would have been done, is a relevant fact.

Existence of course of business when relevant.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is, whether a particular letter was despatched.

The facts that it was the ordinary course of business for all letters put in a certain place to be carried to the post, and that that particular letter was put in that place, are relevant.

(b) The question is, whether a particular letter reached A. The facts that it was posted in due course, and was not returned through the Dead Letter Office, are relevant.

Scope.—There is no presumption that the course of business in a private office has the regularity of that in a public department. But the existence of any course of business, according to which an act in question would have been done, is relevant to the question whether such act was in fact done. Hetherington v. Kemp 16 R. R. 773. Illustrations (a) is based on this case. The question in that case was as regards the posting of a particular letter. In this connection Lord Ellenborough C. J. observed: "You must go further. Some evidence must be given that the letter was taken from the table in the counting house, and put into the post office. Had you called the porter, and he had said that although he had no recollection of the letter in question, he invariably carried to the post office all the letters found upon the table, this might have done, but I cannot hold this general evidence of the course of business in the plaintiff's counting house to be sufficient." In a private office the course of business is only a relevant fact. In a public office the Court will presume that the act was properly done. So if a letter be properly addressed to A, and posted and if it does not come back through the Dead Letter Office the Court will presume that A has received it. Warren v. Warren 1 C. M. and R. 250; Jones v. Great Central Railway, Powell, 144. The jury will also infer that A had received it in the ordinary course of postal business. Stocken v. Collin, 7 M. and W. 515; Ward v. Lord Lonsborough, 12 C. B. 252. There is a presumption that public and official acts and duties have been regularly and properly performed. Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366.

Course of business.—It means the ordinary course of a professional avocation or mercantile transaction or trade or business. 23 C. 63.

Registered letter.—Where a registered letter is posted to a firm's correct address but is returned with the word 'refused' endorsed upon it, the presumption under this section in favour of the existence of common course of business is that the letter reached the place of firm's business and it may also be presumed that it was refused by an agent or partner of the firm. 50 Ind. Cas. 149; see also 15 C. 681; 9 A. 366; 13 Bom. L. R. 328; 20 C. L. J. 455=19 C. W. N. 489.

ADMISSIONS.

17. An admission is a statement, oral or documentary, which suggests any inference as to any fact in issue or relevant fact, and which is made by any of the persons, and under the circumstances, hereinafter mentioned.

Admission.—An admission is “a statement oral or written, suggesting any inference as to any fact in issue or relevant or deemed to be relevant to any such fact, made by or on behalf of any party to any proceedings” (Reynold's Step. Ev. art. 15.) Admissions have been subdivided into direct and indirect, express, implied, incidental judicial and extrajudicial, and the names of some of them sufficiently indicate the description of any particular admission to obviate special definition. Direct and express admissions are practically the same. Implied admissions are made by having done or omitted to do some act. The term “incidental” carries with it that the admission was not made in connection with the matter under judicial inquiry. So judicial admissions are such as may be made in pleadings or in the progress of a trial or generally in the course of judicial proceeding, and all admissions not so made may be grouped as extra-judicial admissions. (Burr Jones § 235). Silence or conduct may amount to an admission, when it is natural to expect a reply or statement. (Bessela v. Stern, L. R. 2 C. P. D. 265). A vague admission is no admission. 21 A. L. J. 869.

Admission and confession.—In English law admission is confined in civil cases and confessions in criminal cases. But in the Evidence Act such distinction has not been observed. Sections 17-22 are applicable both to civil and criminal cases. But confession is used only in relation to criminal cases and herein the Act followed the English law. Admission in a civil suit that a document is genuine cannot in a forgery case be regarded as confession at all. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 539. “Confessions” are a sub-species of statements and a species of admissions. Per Rankin J. in 44 C. L. J. 253 (259)=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 17. The expression “confession” occurs under the category of admissions; it has not been defined in the Evidence Act. Per Mahmood J. in 6 A. 509 (539). But there is a distinction between “an admission and “a confession” in the Evidence Act. 10 B. L. R. App. 2; 7 A. 646; 6 B. 34; 15 C. 589; 6 C. 530; 15 C. 595. A confession only an admission of guilt. 4 A. L. J. 174 (Journal); see also 7 A. 646=A. W. N. (1885) 131; 16 P. R. 1886 Cr. An incriminating statement which falls short of an absolute confession, but from which the inference of guilt follows is a confession. 51 P. L. R. 1905=2 Cr. L. J. 239=20 P. R. 1905 Cr.

18. Statements made by a party to the proceeding, or by an agent to any Admissions by party to proceeding or his agent: such party, whom the Court regards, under the circumstances of the case, as expressly or impliedly authorized by him to make them, are admissions.

Statements made by parties to suits suing or sued in a representative character, are not admissions, unless they were made while the party making them held that character.

Statements made by—

(1) persons who have any proprietary or pecuniary interest in the subject-matter of the proceeding and who make the statement in their character of persons so interested; or are admissions, if they are made during the continuance of the interest of the persons making the statements.

(2) persons from whom the parties to the suit have derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit.

Scope.—Let us confine ourselves to civil admissions for the present. The persons by whom admissions may be made are the parties to the suit or their agents, or those identified in interest with them; or the persons sub modo in (1) and (2). If they proceed from a stranger they are generally inadmissible; unless he be dead, as to which see section 32 post. An admission made by an infant after he arrives at age will bind him. No distinction should be drawn between the nominal and real parties to a suit. The Courts of India being Courts of Enquiry should deal directly with admissions made by nominal parties as for instance consignees suing in the name of consignors. When the Court considers the admission of such a party fraudulent it should be at once rejected. (Norton Ev. 143.). An admission on a point of law is not binding. A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 879; A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 343.

Cases.—A statement made by a defendant in another suit may be used as an admission within the meaning of this section. 22 W. R. 303. An admission against her own interest by the predecessor-in-title of the defendant is relevant under ss. 18 and 21, though not conclusive, and is sufficient by itself to shift the burden of proof. 7 N. L. R. 23. See also 69 Ind. Cas. 35; 66 Ind. Cas. 15; 9 O. L. J. 262; 46 Ind. Cas. 709.

Parties.—An admission once made is binding against the party making it for all purposes of the suit, unless it be shown that such admission was recorded erroneously. 2 W. R. Act X. R. 1. An admission made by parties to a previous suit or an arbitration proceedings may be used as evidence against them in subsequent suit. 7 W. R. 249; 9 W. R. 162; 5 B. L. R. 529; 14 W. R. 28; 13 M. I. A. 438 17 W. R. 372; 23 W. R. 27; 15 W. R. 437; 27 W. R. 303. Where a person; uses the admission of another as evidence the whole admission must be put in. 7 W. R. 29. The admission by defendants in a former suit of a map as correct was held to be legal, though not conclusive evidence against them in a boundary suit. 8 W. R. 291.

Pleader.—A pleader's statement on behalf of his client after full consideration and consultation is relevant evidence against that client in another case to which he is a party. 15 W. R. 35. A barrister (or other advocate) may make any admission on behalf of his client which, in the honest exercise of his judgment, he thinks proper; but he has no authority on matters collateral to the suit (Swinsfen v. Lord Chelmsford, 29 L. J. Ex. 382). It is not open to a party in appeal to try to go behind an admission made by his pleader who represented him in trial court by engaging a fresh counsel in the appellate court. 102 Ind. Cas. 283; 9 W. R. 465; 11 M. I. A. 253; 6 C. W. N. 52; 21 M. 279; 22 M. 538.

Agents.—Admission may be made by agents. (Williams v. Innes, 10 R. R. 702). Whatever an agent or servant does or says, within the scope of his authority, express or implied, in carrying out the business in which he is employed binds his principal. An agent or servant may therefore bind his principal by admissions made within the scope of his authority or duty. Kirkstall Brewery Co v. Furness Ry Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. 468; G. W. Ry Co. v. Willis, 34 L. J. C. P. 195; Govindji v. Chhota Lal, 2 Bom. L. R. 651. Statements made by an agent about past transactions will not bind the principal as admissions. When the agent's authority to act in the particular matter has ceased, the principal cannot be affected by his subsequent statements. (Peto v. Hague 5 Esp. 134.). See also 3 B. L. R. 273; 46 Ind. Cas. 709. A statement made by an agent to the effect that his principal was a bastard was admissible. 109 Ind. Cas. 310=A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 233.

Admission by one of several persons.—Where several persons are interested in the subject-matter of a suit the general rule is that the admissions of any one of those persons are receivable against himself and his fellows whether they be all jointly suing or sued provided the admissions relate to the subject-matter in dispute and were made by the defendant in his character of a person jointly interested with the party against whom the evidence is tendered. 48 Ind. Cas. 193.

Admission of agent in criminal cases.—According to the Indian Evidence Act admission of an agent is admissible against the principal if made within his authority but confession of an agent are not so admissible. 46 Ind. Cas. 709=4 P. L. W. 120=19 Cr. L. J. 789.

19. Statements made by persons whose position or liability it is necessary to prove as against any party to the suit, are admissions, if such statements would be relevant as against such persons in relation to such position or liability in a suit brought by or against them, and if they are made whilst the person making them occupies such position or is subject to such liability.

A undertakes to collect rents for B.

B sues A for not collecting rent due from C to B.

A denies that rent was due from C to B.

A statement by C that he owed B rent is an admission, and is a relevant fact as against A, if A denies that C did owe rent to B.

Cases.—The question at issue was whether a party was the legitimate issue of a person with whom her mother was living after having been previously married to another who, it was alleged, had divorced her. A deposition given by the mother was tendered in evidence, in which she was described at the heading as the wife of her previous husband, but in the body of which she stated she had been living with the alleged father for 10 or 12 years past. Held, that the deposition, even if admissible, was of no weight for the reason that her statement did not amount to an admission that she was living in adultery. 26 A. 108 P. C.=8 C. W. N. 241. Guardians of infants are not competent to bind the infants by their admissions. 29 C. L. J. 577. An admission made by a landlord is not binding on the tenant. 52 Ind. Cas. 739.

Case.—64 Ind. Cas. 334.

20. Statements made by persons to whom a party to the suit has expressly referred for information in reference to a matter in dispute are admissions.

Admission by persons expressly referred to by party to suit.

Illustration.

The question is whether a horse sold by A to B is sound. A says to B—"Go and ask C; C knows all about it." C's statement is an admission.

Scope.—Admissions may be made by agents. If one party directs or requests another party to apply to any other persons for information on a certain matter, such reference constitute such other person as agents in such matters for such purpose. Williams v. Innes 10 R. R. 702. Whenever a party refers to the evidence of another, as is bound by it—and this is constantly good evidence. Daniel v. Pitt, 1 Camp 366. It matters not whether the question was one of law or fact. Price v. Hollis, 1 M. and S. 105; Downe v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256. The reference need not be by express words. If the fair consequence of a party's conduct is to refer to another, it will suffice. (Norton, 149). A party to a litigation is not bound by the statements of the Muktear of the opposite party who was cross-examined by the parties. 4 U. P. L. R. 9 (Rev). See also 80 Ind. Cas. 16=46A. 710. But there must be an express reference. L. R. 3 All. 204. Where parties to a proceeding agrees to abide by the statement of a third person to statement made by such person is admission within the meaning of this section. 103 Ind. Cas. 34=A. I. R. 1927 All. 659.

21. Admissions are relevant and may be proved as against the person who makes them, or his representative in interest; but they cannot be proved by or on behalf of the person who makes them or by his representative in interest, except in the following cases :—

Proof of admissions against persons making them, and by or on their behalf.

(1) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, when it is of such a nature that, if the person making it, were dead, it would be relevant as between third persons under section 32.

(2) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, where it consists of a statement of the existence of any state of mind or body, relevant or in issue, made, at or about the time when such state of mind or body existed, and is accompanied by conduct rendering its falsehood improbable.

(3) An admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it, if it is relevant otherwise than as an admission.

Illustrations.

(a) The question between A and B is, whether a certain deed is or is not forged. A affirms that it is genuine, B that it is forged.

A may prove a statement by B that the deed is genuine, and B may prove a statement by A that the deed is forged; but A cannot prove a statement by himself that the deed is genuine, nor can B prove a statement by himself that the deed is forged.

(b) A, the captain of a ship is tried for casting her away.

Evidence is given to show that the ship was taken out of her proper course.

A produces a book kept by him in the ordinary course of his business showing observations alleged to have been taken by him from day to day, and indicating that the ship was not taken out of her proper course. A may prove these statements, because they would be admissible between third parties, if he were dead, under section 32, clause (2).

(c) A is accused of a crime committed by him at Calcutta.

He produces a letter written by himself and dated at Lahore on that day, and bearing the Lahore post-mark of that day.

The statement in the date of the letter is admissible, because if A were dead, it would be admissible under section 32, clause (2).

(d) A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen.

He offers to prove that he refused to sell them below their value.

A may prove these statements, though they are admissions, because they are explanatory of conduct influenced by fact in issue.

(e) A is accused of fraudulently having in his possession counterfeit coin which he knew to be counterfeit.

He offers to prove that he asked a skilful person to examine the coin as he doubted whether it was counterfeit or not, and that that person did examine it and told him it was genuine.

A may prove these facts for the reason stated in the last preceding illustration.

Why admissions competent.—Whatever a party voluntarily admits to be true, though the admission be contrary to his interest may reasonably be taken for the truth. The same rule, it will be seen, applies to admissions by those who are so identified in situation and interest with a party that their declaration may be considered to have been made by himself. As to such evidence the ordinary test of truth are properly dispensed with; they are inapplicable. An oath is administered to a witness in order to impose an additional obligation on his conscience and so to add weight to his testimony, and he is cross-examined to ascertain his means of knowledge, as well as his intention to speak the truth. But where a man voluntarily admits a debt or confesses a crime, there is little occasion for confirmation; the ordinary motives of human conduct are sufficient warrants for belief." Southern Ins Co v. White. 58. Ark 277. In English law such admissions are admissible as one of the exceptions to the hearsay evidence. Strictly speaking they are open to but few of the objections which may be urged against hearsay testimony. Admission made by a party is of considerable weight as evidence against him, and may, if unexplained be even decisive. 51 Ind. Cas. 876; 13 C. W. N. 409; 7 Ind. Cas. 505. Under this section a Court is bound to receive in evidence admissions of a party but no such rule applies to denials. Junki v. Emperor. 49 A. 482 = A. I. R. 1927 All. 383. The statement that a document is a copy of the original is admissible when made by a deceased person in a document relating to relevant fact and also as an admission under s. 21. 56 I. A. 143 = 33 C. Cases.—68 Ind. Cas. 566; 4 Lah. L. J. 437; 45 Ind. Cas. 843; 22 C. 909; 1924 Nag. 281; 17 Ind. Cas. 961; 54 Ind. Cas. 478; 47 C. L. J. 222 P. C.

22. Oral admissions as to the contents of a document are not relevant, unless and until the party proposing to prove them shows that he is entitled to give secondary evidence of the contents of such document under the rules hereinafter contained, or unless the genuineness of a document produced is in question.

When oral admissions as to contents of documents are relevant.

Note.—According to English law a party's own statements as to any matter of fact are always evidence against himself, even where they relate to the contents of a deed, or other written instrument. Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. and W. 664). The Indian law on the subject departs from the English law as laid down in the above case. The above decision has been severely attacked in Sanders v. Karnell 1 F. and F. 356 and in Lawless v. Queale 8 Ir. L. R. 382 but in England it has survived those attacks, (Powell Ev. 444). But their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 10 I. A. 79 observed: "They consider that it is a very dangerous thing to rest a judgment upon verbal admission of a sum due, without very clear evidence especially, when there are other means of proving the case, if a true one."

23. In civil cases no admission is relevant, if it is made either upon an express condition that evidence of it is not to be given or under circumstances from which the Court can infer that the parties agreed together that evidence of it should not be given.

Explanation.—Nothing in this section shall be taken to exempt any barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil from giving evidence of any matter of which he may be compelled to give evidence under section 126.

Statements without prejudice.—"Communications admissions or statements, written or verbal, made by a party to an action, pending, the dispute or action, and made expressly or impliedly 'without prejudice' with the object of compromise or settlement, cannot be given in evidence against the person making them. A letter written without prejudice protects from disclosure the whole of the correspondence of which it forms part." (Paddock v. Forrester, 67 R. R. 634 cited in Cocker Cas. 54. It is applicable only in civil cases. By this section the Court is precluded from making use of the admission in a deed of compromise which was entered into and subsequently set aside on the ground that the agent of one of the parties was not empowered to enter into it. 83 P. R. 1877.

Cases.—Vide 20 C. W. N. 1217; 52 Ind. Cas. 348; 52 Ind. Cas. 443; 11 Lah. L. J. 446; 6 O. W. N. 1088.

24. A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him.

Confession—meaning of. It has already been stated that confessions are merely one species of admissions, namely, that species which consists in a direct acknowledgment of guilt in a criminal charge. The acknowledgment must be in express words, by the accused in a criminal case, of the truth of the guilty fact charged or some essential part of it. Wigmore § 821. So the question is what admissions do amount to confessions? The word confession "has not been defined in the Indian Evidence Act." says Mahmood J. in Queen Empress v. Babu Lal, 6 A. 509 (F. B.) at p. 539. "it, however, occurs under the category of admissions, and to make my meaning clear, I adopt the definition given by Mr. Justice Stephen in Art. 21 of his Digest of the Law of Evidence, by saying that a 'confession is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed that crime. In Queen Empress v. Jagrup, 7 A 646 (647, 648) Straight J. although he refused to follow the definition given in Stephen's Digest on the ground that the Digest "was written in view of a proposal for preparing a Code of Evidence for England, and it can scarcely be regarded therefore as an authority to guide me in construing an Act passed by the Legislature of this country in 1872" yet adds "though I may add that I do not find anything in Mr Justice Stephen's definition at variance with the view I take," According to him also the word 'confession' must be construed as meaning the same in s. 30 as in ss. 24, 25 and 26. In Imperatrix v. Jandharinath. 6 B. 34, the definition of Mr. Stephen was practically adopted and in Queen Empress v. Nana, 14 B. 260 (F. B.) that definition was quoted with approval. In the last case the accused was charged, under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code, with dishonestly receiving stolen property. In the course of police investigation, the accused was asked by the police where the property was. He replied that he had kept it, and would show. He said he had buried the property in the fields. He then took the police to the spot where the property was concealed, and with his own hands disinterred the earthen pot in which the property was kept. He made a second statement when pointing out the spot to the effect that he buried the property there. The question was whether those statements amounted to confessions and as such excluded under s. 25. Held that the above statements were clearly in the nature of a confession as they suggested the inference that the prisoner committed the crime, and even if not intended by the accused, as a confession of guilt they were an admission of a criminating circumstance and would form a very important part of the evidence against the accused as showing that he had not come by the property honestly, and, therefore, properly within the rule of exclusion in regard to confessions made by a person in custody of the police. But Straight J. in Queen Empress v. Jagrup, 7 A. 646, was of opinion that only statements which are direct acknowledgment of guilt should be called confessions. This view of Straight J. was followed in Emperor v. Santiya Bandu, 11 Bom. L. R. 633 where at page 636, Chandravarurkar J. said; "The Indian Evidence Act makes a clear distinction between an admission and a confession. It is only under s. 30 of the Act that the confession of one of two or more accused persons jointly tried for the same offence, can be taken into consideration as against the rest. It must be a confession to be so admissible that is, it must affect both the person confessing and the other accused. Here the statements of Yeswada taken by themselves do not fall within that category. As held by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Jagrup, 7 A. 646, the word 'confession' must not be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission which falls short of being an admission of guilt. Section 30 must be strictly construed. The learned Sessions Judge has construed the statement into a confession by a process of inferential reasoning which is not what the terms of section 30 countenance." See also Emperor v. Nani Gopal, 15 C. W. N. 593 (612) = 38 C. 569.

In Queen v. Mac Donald, 10 B. L. R. App. 2, Phear J. observed that there is a distinction in the Evidence Act between admissions and confessions, but the judgment contains no definition of the term. This case was followed by Prinsep J. in Empress v. Davee Pershad, 6 C. 530, which also throws no light on the subject. So the question afterwards raised by West J. in Queen Empress v. Tribhovan Manek Chana, 9 B. 131, 134, namely what are the particular kinds of statements which it is proposed to prove against an accused person to establish an offence or in other words what admissions do amount to confession, remained unanswered in both the Calcutta cases. Neither in Queen Empress v. Meher Ali Mullick, 15 C. 589, a subsequent Calcutta case, Wilson J. explained the exact meaning of the word confession, although he admitted this that there is a difference between admission and confession. In Queen Empress v. Nilmadhub, 15 C. 595, Petharam C. J. also said at p. 607: "If the contents of the document did not amount to a confession the document itself would be relevant as an admission under s. 21 of the Evidence Act." So there also the learned Chief Justice admitted the existence difference between admission and confession but did not give any definition of the word 'confession'. The High Court of Madras is silent on this point. So neither the early reported Calcutta cases nor the reported Madras cases throw any light whether in interpreting the term "confession" one should accept the strict definition given by Straight J. in Queen Empress v. Jagrup, or follow the definition given by Stephen J. in his Digest of the Law of Evidence, namely that a 'confession' is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime." In Emperor v. Kangal Miali, 41 C. 601 = 15 Cr. L. J. 713 = 26 Ind. Cas. 161 it was held that confessions are statements either directly admitting the guilt of the accused or statements suggesting the inference that he committed the crime with which he is charged. So the majority of Indian cases followed the definition of the term 'confession' given by Stephen J. in his Digest of the Law of Evidence. "The confession is not defined in the Evidence Act, but it has been many times interpreted by judicial decisions. It has been defined as an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference, that he committed that crime. Therefore, not only statements which amount to a direct acknowledgment of guilt are confessions, but also inculpatory statements which although they fall short of being actual admissions of guilt, yet suggest an inference of guilt or from which an inference of guilt follows. The factor determining whether a statement amounts to a confession or not is not the motive of the party making it but the fact that it leads to an inference of guilt." Per Purllet J in Mi Ein Jha v. Emperor, 5 L. B. R. 131=4 Ind. Cas. 1028=11 Cr. L. J. 153; Ilahi Baksh v. Emperor, 16 P. R. 1886 Cr.; see also Emperor v. Haji Sher Mahomed, 75 Ind. Cas. 70=46 B. 961=24 Cr. L. J. 870; Imperatrix v. Pandharinath, 6 B. 34; Empress v. Dabee Pershed, 6 C. 530. A confession is also an admission of fact as well as an admission of guilt. Abbas Ali v. Emperor 4 Cr. L. J. 471=3 L. B. R. 208 (F. B). A confession is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime. Hakiman v. King Emperor, 51 P. L. R. 1905=20 P. R. 1905 Cr.; Queen Empress v. Bhairab, 2 C. W. N. 702 (707); Superintendent v. Lalit Mohan Singa 25 Ind. Cas. 788=62 Ind. Cas. 578. In Queen Empress v. Jave Charan, 19 B. 363, it was held that confession includes "an admission of a criminating circumstance on which the prosecution evidently relies and which has weighed with the Magistrate in his judgment on the fact. See also Hakiman v. Emperor. 6 P. L. R. 196=2 Cr. L. J. 230.

In Emperor v. Mahamed, 5 Bom. L. R. 312, the accused was tried for the theft of a box, and a policeman gave evidence to the effect that he had seen him carrying the box at night, and that when challenged he had stated that the box was his own. The statement was found to be false, but it was nevertheless held by Crowe and Chandravarkar, JJ., to have been rightly admitted. "In order to determine" said the learned Judges, "whether the statement is a confession of guilt or an admission of a criminating circumstance, we must look to the statement itself. Here the statement of the accused was merely that the box belonged to him; it was no admission whatever of criminating circumstances. It was therefore, admissible. The statement held to be inadmissible in Imperatrix v. Pandharinath, 6 B. 34 was of different character. There the accused's statement admitted possession of a cheque alleged to be forged. It was an admission of one of the criminating circumstances which went to make up the offence charged against the accused. In the present case the statement does not amount directly or indirectly to an admission of any criminating circumstance, and is therefore, outside the principle of the ruling cited." "In the result," says Carnduff J. in Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor, 14 C. W. N. 1114 at p. 1197=37 C. 467 "it seems to me that each case must be decided as it arises with reference to the question whether the particular statement concerned, whether it be positive or negative, verbal or expressed by conduct, is or is not a confession". See also Muthu Kumar Swami v. King Emperor, 35 M. 397; Emperor v. Cuna, 22 Bom. L. R. 1247; Ganapati v. Emperor, 6 N. L. R. 180=12 Cr. L. J. 60=8 Ind. Cas. 1181. "By confession I understood not necessarily a full confession of guilt, but any statement made which, being relevant to the issue, may be put in evidence against the person making it." R. v. Wong Chin Kwei, Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 37. Confessions of other crimes not relating to the charge e. g., showing or admitting a general tendency even to the crime charged, are inadmissible. R. v. Cole, 1810; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 37.

In Smith v. Emperor, 43 Ind. Cas. 605, at p. 611, Philips J. said: "There is no definition of confession in the Evidence Act, but I take it that it must be something more than a mere admission. In Emperor v. Kangal Mali, 26 Ind. Cas. 161=15 Cr. L. J. 713=41 C. 601, when dealing with the admissibility of statements, it was said that a useful test was to ascertain the purpose to which they were put by the prosecution. If the prosecution relies on the statements of the accused as being true then they may and probably in many cases would be found to amount to confessions. Accepting both these propositions I would add that in order to make a statement a confession, it appears to me to be necessary that the inference as to the criminality of the person making the statement should be gathered from the statement itself, for I think it is quite possible that in many cases a statement which by itself does not contain any inference of criminality may in the light of subsequent events or of subsequent evidence strongly support such an inference. If the statement in itself is not incriminating, I am doubtful whether the fact that it does become incriminating owing to subsequent events would make it a confession." See also 19 Cr. L. J. 42; 53 Ind. Cas. 691.

An admission of all the ingredients required to constitute an offence is a confession. A confession is an admission made at anytime by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime. 120 Ind.

Cas. 257 (2)=31 Cr. L. J. 26=A. I. R. 1930 All. 29 ; see also A. I. R. 1929 All. 293. Where a person confessed he had taken part in a dacoity and named his associates and the police recovered stolen articles from the house of the person making the confession and from the persons named by him held, that the confession was not rendered untrue merely because the person making the statement minimised his share in the dacoity. 126 Ind. Cas. 498=31 Cr. L. J. 1017=A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 74. A statement of the following kind cannot be regarded as a confession of complicity in an offence. "I told the other accused that, if they wanted to kill my husband, they were at liberty to do so, and I would bring no case against them. But when they arrived at my husband's house on the fateful night, I endeavoured to restrain them and was only prevented from doing so by their threats to kill me and my son if I interfered. I did neither take any part in the murder, nor did in any way assist the murderers after my husband was put to death." 4 Ind. Cas. 429=24 P. W. R. 1909 Cr.=153 P. L. R. 1909. A statement of an accused to the effect that under threats of death, he was forced to sit outside the door of the house where a murder was being committed, to warn the murderers of the approach of any body, and not to divulge the secret and to remain an impassive agent in the crime, and that he took no part in it, on the other hand he vainly tried to dissuade the co-accused from committing the crime, does not amount to a confession of either murder or its abetment, and consequently is also inadmissible in evidence under s. 30 of Act I of 1872, against the accused. 38 P. W. R. Cr. 1910=24 P. R. 1910=193 P. L. R. 1910. A confession must be a confession of guilt or a confession of facts which constitute in law the offence charged. Mere admissions of incriminating facts will not amount to a confession, unless those facts and the necessary inferences from them amount to an offence. 1. L. B. R. 133. Where the accused expresses his willingness to tender an apology to the complainant, it is unfair for the Magistrate to treat the circumstance as an indication of the accused's guilt. 4 L. W. 556=17 Cr. L. J. 462=36 Ind. Cas. 142. To constitute a 'confession' under the Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the person confessing should make a full and explicit admission of his guilt so clean as to leave no other hypothesis tenable. 43 Ind. Cas. 605=19 Cr. L. J. 189. The fact that the accused did not claim a piece of cloth as his own before the Police but admitted at that time that it belonged to the deceased might have been due to this that the defence is not always stated during the Police enquiry and any statement made to the Police to the effect that an article produced by suspected men really belonged to the deceased could amount not to a confession but to an admission. 5 Lah. L. J. 128. Admission is usually applied to a civil transaction, and to those matters in criminal cases which do not involve a criminal intent. The term confession is usually used in criminal Courts as denoting an acknowledgment of guilt. Admission in a civil suit that a document is genuine cannot in a forgery case be regarded as confession at all. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 539.

Motive for true confession.—Various reasons are found for making a true confession. These reasons for making voluntary confessions may be classified under the following heads :—(1) repentance ; (2) panic created in the view of the accused when he finds no reasonable hope of escaping discovery 15 B. 452 (479) ; 6 A. 509 (550) ; (3) he is, for the moment in despair, and glad to purchase immediate ease by making a confession or resignation to fate. 6 A. 509 (550, 551) ; (4) due to simplicity and half savage nature of the accused (Tay Cors Trial Cases, para 135 cited in Chaudhury's confession p. 139) ; (5) expectation of mitigation of punishment.

What are not confessions.—A confession is an acknowledgment in express words, by the accused in a criminal case of the truth of the guilty fact charged or of some essential part of it. Step. Dig. Ev. 21 ; 6 A. 509 (539) ; 14 B. 260 (263) ; 41 C. 601 ; 20 A. L. J. 128 ; 6 B. 34 (37) ; 9 B. 131 (134). Therefore the term "confession" does not include either (1) guilty conduct (2) exculpatory statements and (3) acknowledgments of subordinate facts colourless with reference to actual guilt. Wigmore Ev. § 821 ; see also 6 B. 34 (37) ; 22 C. Confessions, Division of.—Confessions may be divided into two classes : Judicial and extrajudicial. Roscoe Ev. 37. Judicial confessions are those which are made before the Magistrates ; or in Court, in the due course of legal proceedings ; and it is essential that they be made out of the free will of the party and with full knowledge of the nature and consequences of the confession, of this kind are the preliminary examinations, taken in writing by the Magistrate, pursuant to statutes; and the plea of guilty made in open court to an inducement. Greel Ev. § 216; see also ss. 164 and 364 of the Cr. Pro. Code. Extra judicial confessions are those which are made by the party elsewhere than before a Magistrate, or in Court; this term embracing not only explicit and express confession of crime, but all those admissions of the accused from which guilt may be implied. Greenl Ev. § 216. An extra-judicial confession is an admission of guilt to a private person. 8 W. R. Cr. 29 (30); 13 W. R. Cr. 69. It may be in the form of a letter. 15 Cr. L. J. 55=18 C. W. N. 386. An extra-judicial confession can be made to any person, or collection or body of person. 8 O. C. 395; 21 Ind. Cas. 468=14 Cr. L. J. 596; 15 Cr. L. J. 502=24 Ind. Cas. 590. The court is to decide whether the person before whom the admission is said to have been made are trustworthy witnesses. 134 Ind. Cas. 1018=A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 415. When the making of a confession is completely proved, its authenticity is beyond dispute. In such a case a voluntary and genuine confession is legal and sufficient proof of guilt. 7 W. R. Cr. 41; 6 W. R. Cr. 73; 6 W. R. Cr. 83; 52 Ind. Cas. 520; 15 B. 480; 51 Ind. Cas. 876; see also 48 Ind. Cas. 981=35 M. L. J. 518; 9 C. W. N. 974.

Conclusions from witnesses are not to be accepted. In Queen v. Soobjan, 10 B. L. R. 332, (335) Phear J. said: "Now, it is to be observed that these statements are in general terms, and so are merely statements of a conclusion at which the witnesses themselves arrived from the answers given by the prisoners to the questions... but it is all important in matters of this kind to know what were the words which the person who is said to have confessed actually used: nothing in short of the actual words given in detail in the first person, so far as it is possible to obtain them, ought ever to be relied upon as a foundation for the opinion formed by the Court; because, it may turn out that the words taken together with the questions and the circumstances under which the questions were put, do not in truth amount to a confession of guilt such as the witness chose to represent it." See also R. v. Ali Husain, 23 A. 306, 308; Kha Hlaw v. Emperor, 4 L. B. R. 116=7 Cr. L. J. 82 Nawab Bibi v. R. 22 P. R. 1883; Queen v. Babu Lal, 6 A 509 (549); R. v. Mohan Lal, 4 A. 46; Nur Ali v. Emperor, 81 Ind. Cas. 530=5 L. 140. But where the actual words used in the confession are not given it does not affect the admissibility but the weight to be given to such evidence. Ibid; see also Desraj v. Emperor, 1928 Lah. 58=29 P. L. R. 486. There is no rule of law which requires an extrajudicial confession to be recorded. 11 P. R. (1918) Cr.; 21 P. R. 1881 Cr., 21 Bom. L. R. 1065; 141 P. Confession made by signs or gestures. Vide 31 P. L. R. 391=120 Ind. Cas. 539=31 Cr. L. J. 141=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 84.

Confession—Test of truth.—A true confession made by a person who takes part in a murder invariably adds something to the knowledge already possessed by the investigating officer and that is the quoted test of its truth. 132 Ind. Cas. 228=32 Cr. L. J. 854=A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 166.

Confession must be taken as a whole.—When a confession is used against an accused person, the whole confession must be introduced. So where an accused person makes a confession, the confession is evidence in his favour as well as against him and must be taken as a whole. 15 A. 452; 88 Ind. Cas. 455=26 Cr. L. J. 1142; 52 A. 1011=A. I. R. 1931 All. 1 (F. B.); 7 W. R. Cr. 39; 1 Bur. 327; 1 Bur. 324; 21 C. 955; 29 C. 782; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 771; 1 Bom. L. R. 428; 22 C. W. N. 834; 1928 M. W. N. 161; L. B. R. R. 1933 All. 401; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 252; A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 326; A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 204; A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 673; A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 620.

"As in other cases the meaning and intention of the parties are collected from the whole writing taken together, and all the instruments, executed at one time by the parties, and relating to the same matter, are equally resorted to for that purpose, so here. This principle, in its application, has several detailed consequences. (1) The prosecution must put in the whole of the accused's statement, including the portions favourable to himself as well as those unfavourable. But this does not prevent the use of statements which are separate in themselves though not forming all the accused's utterances nor of such fragments of a connected statement as were alone heard or remembered by the witness. Moreover the witness need not be able to give the exact words, provided he can give the substance (but see, 38 Ind. Cas. 740=15 A. L. J. 15; 38 Ind. Cas. 767; 53 Ind. Cas. 145) (2). If one part of a conversation is relied on, as proof of a confession of a crime, the prisoner has a right to lay before the Court the whole of what was said in that conversation; not being confined to so much only as is explanatory of the part already proved against him, but being permitted to give evidence of all that was said upon that occasion, relative to the subject matter of the issue (Per Lord C. J. Abbott in the Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 297, 298; R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 165; Howk. P. C. b. 2, C. 46 § 5; R. v. Higgins, 3 C. & P. 603; R. v. Hearne, 4 C. & P. 215; Brown's Case, 9 Leigh 633, for as has been already observed respecting admission, unless the whole is received and considered, the true meaning and import of the part which is good evidence against him cannot be ascertained. (3) But if, after the whole statement of the prisoner is given in evidence, the prosecutor can contradict any part of it, he is at liberty to do so; and then the whole testimony is left to the jury for their consideration, precisely as in other cases, where one part of the evidence is contradictory to another; for it is not to be supposed that all the parts of a confession are entitled to equal credit. The jury may believe that part which charges the prisoner, and reject that which is in his favour, if they see sufficient grounds for so doing. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 436; 10 B. H. C. R. 500; 19 Cr. L. 785 (Nag); Rat. Un. Cr. C. 370. 1930 Oudh. 113; 1930 M. W. N. 785. If what he said in his own favour is not contradicted by evidence offered by the prosecutor, nor improbable in itself, it will generally be believed by the jury; but they are not bound to give weight to it on that account, but are at liberty to judge of it like other evidence, by all the circumstances of the case. (4) And if the confession implicates other persons by name, yet it must be proved as it was made; not omitting the names; but the Judge will instruct the jury, that it is not evidence against any but the prisoner who made it." Greenl. Ev. § 218.

A Judge ought to decide the question of the admissibility of a confession first and if it is inadmissible it should be excluded from the record and its terms should be kept from the assessors. And inadmissible confession is inadmissible in its entirety. 18 Cr. L. J. 383=38 Ind. Cas. 767. The ordinary rule is that a confession is evidence for the prisoner as well as against him and must be taken together. But it is only where no other evidence is forthcoming that this can be pressed to the extent of requiring that no part be accepted as true without accepting the whole. 53 Ind. Cas. 145=20 Cr. L. J. 737; see also 46 Ind. Cas. 705=19 Cr. L. J. 785; 15 A. L. J. 15; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 371.

After the entire statement of a prisoner has been given in evidence, any part of it may be contradicted by the prosecution if they choose to do so, and then the whole testimony is left open for consideration precisely as in other cases where one part of the evidence contradicts another. Even without such contradiction it is not supposed that all the parts of a confession are entitled to equal credit; if sufficient grounds exist, that part which charges the prisoner may be believed, while that which is in his favour may be rejected. 3 O. W. N. 800=98 Ind. Cas. 178=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh. 618. Even when a part of the confession is found to be false the entire confession should be rejected simply for that reason. If sufficient grounds exist that part that charges the prisoner may be believed that which is in his favour may be rejected. 132 Ind. Cas. 70=32 Cr. L. J. 830=14 O. L. J. 303; see also A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 222=35 Cr. L. J. 894=149 Ind. Cas. 69; A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 204=1933 Cr. C. 919. Where the confession is any thing but a full confession the Court is at liberty to use the confession as it stands and derive a deduction of the guilt of the man who made it even while rejecting portions of it which are false. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 113.

Uncorroborated confession evidentiary value of.—If there is no reasonable doubt that a confession is voluntary and genuine it is legal and sufficient proof of guilt. 7 W. R. Cr. 41. Under ordinary circumstances, a confession cannot be accepted as sufficient for a conviction, unless it is supported by material facts established independently of the confession itself. Experience shows that unfounded confessions are not infrequently made from one motive or another natural to humanity and that consequently the Courts have to be on their guard against being led astray by such deceptions. It is, therefore, the practice in general to require some support for a confession and reasonable consistency with the surrounding circumstances about which there is no doubt. U. B. R. (1897-1901), Vol. I. 152. Where the accused's confession is the only evidence against him, accounting for the commission of the crime with which he is charged, it must be accepted in so far as it is not inconsistent with reason and other surrounding circumstances. 6 Cr. L. J. 260; see also 3 P. R. 1888 Cr.; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 867; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 463; 11 B. H. C. 137; 17 P. W. R. 1907 Cr.=6 Cr. L. J. 141; 21 P. W. R. 1907 Cr.=6 Cr. L. J. 266; 6 Bom. L. R. 773; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 197=12 Cr. L. J. 488=12 Ind. Cas. 96. Where a case depends upon circumstantial evidence, it is usual to find a confession to bolster up such evidence. Courts should attach little importance to such a confession. 9 C. W. N. 474. Where the circumstances of the case compel a tribunal to reject all the other evidence and act only upon a confession, the confession must be used literatim et verbatim, and due effect must be given to every statement contained therein whether in favour of the accused or against him. 15 A. L. J. 15. The law does not require that the confession of an accused person should be corroborated before it can be acted upon. It is for the Court to decide whether it believes a confession or not. 52 Ind. Cas. 881=20 Cr. L. J. 721. The fact that the confession was retracted before the committing Magistrate would not deprive it of its voluntary character. 52 Ind. Cas. 50=20 Cr. L. J. 562. No doubt the extra-judicial confession is of great importance but it must be a true extra-judicial confession and not one fabricated in order to provide additional evidence for what rightly or wrongly the investigating officer considers to be a weak cause. A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 272; see also A. I. R. 1932 Oudh. 324=7 Luck 623=9 C. W. N. 170. Apart from the question whether or not extra-judicial confessions are inadmissible in evidence, they are not of such a nature as entitles them to any weight, because it is impossible to ascertain the exact words used by the person. To base a conviction on such a confession is not safe. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 858=29 P. L. R. 486. The evidence of an admission of guilt to villagers may be as strong evidence against an accused person as a confession before a Magistrate. It requires no corroboration. The Court has to decide whether the persons before whom the admission is said to have been made are trustworthy witnesses. A. I. R. 1928 O. 393=5 O. W. N. 693. When the accused were unable to explain away their confessions, which clearly indicated the guilt, held that the confessions alone were sufficient for the conviction. 5 O. W. N. 968. Extra-judicial confession made before person is taken into police custody has high probative value. It must however be proved strictly. A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 201=26 S. L. R. 302=34 Cr. L. J. 147. Where extra-judicial confession is clear consistent and convincing it should be believed. 12 Mys. L. J. 73. But in such confession exact words should be ascertained. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 119=151 Ind. Cas. 984.

Confessions of prisoner in another case—how proved. The confession of prisoner in one case in which he was convicted cannot be used against him in another case, unless they are deposed to on oath either by the person who took them down, or by some one else who heard them. 10 W. R. Cr. 56.

Confession how construed.—Where people are so ignorant as the Burmans are, of the most elementary legal principles, it is extremely dangerous to accept an admission as a plea of guilty without the closest scrutiny of the meaning of the acknowledgment. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 72.

Recording of judicial confessions.—As regards recording of judicial confessions and the proof thereof vide ss. 164 and 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code and s. 80 the Evidence Act.

Principle underlying section 24.—The value of confessions depends on the supposition that they are deliberate and voluntary, and on the presumption that a rational being will not make admissions prejudicial to his interest and safety, unless when urged by the prompting of truth and conscience. Such confessions, so made by a prisoner, to any person, at any moment of time, and at any place, subsequent to the preparation of the crime, and previous to his examination before the Magistrate, are at common law received in evidence as among proofs of guilt. Greenl. Ev. § 215; Taylor § 865; Best Ev. § 524; Will's Ev. § 102. When a confession is made under influence of a promise of benefit, or a threat of harm, it is untrustworthy because it has been associated with an attraction too strong to reject. In general, then, the position of the confessing person which causes our distrust is that of being compelled to choose between two alternatives, one of which involves a confession of guilt irrespective of its truth or falsity.—Wigmore § 824. More accurately, the confession so dominated is a pseudo confession. It is not a confession at all. It is not made animo confitendi. It is merely a self-serving statement masquerading in the garb and under the name of a confession. Accordingly, it has not the relevancy of a true confession, a self-dis-serving statement, and is, in consequence, rationally to be regarded with suspicion. As a matter of logic, there is the obvious impairment of probative value due to the consideration that a declarant so circumstanced may, like the person offering a confession in a civil case, make his statement, not because it is true, but for the reason that he anticipates that in this way he will gain something desirable which otherwise he would not secure. In addition to this it is not fair to the accused for the law to trap him, to take him when off his guard, to break into his fastness of silence. Chamberlayne's Ev. § 1484. "The object of the rule relating to the exclusion of confessions is to exclude all confessions which may have been procured by the prisoner being led to suppose that it will be better for him to admit himself to the guilty of an offence which he really never committed." Per Littledate J. in R. v. Court 7 C. & P. 486; R. v. Holmes, C. & K. 248. "I think in every case it is for the Judge to decide whether the words were used in such a manner and under such circumstances as to induce the prisoner to make a confession of guilt whether such confessions were true or not."

Scope of scope 24.—Section 24 of the Evidence Act provides that a confession of an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding if the making of the confession appeals to the Court to have been caused by any inducement, having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority. Fatehchand v. Emperor, 86 Ind. Cas. 1001=26 Cr. L. J. 937=L. R. 6 A. 89 Cr. In dealing with the question of the admissibility of a confession the Judge is not concerned with the truth or falsity of the confession; that is a matter entirely for the jury. The Judge is only concerned with the question as to whether the confession is admissible in evidence. If the confession is voluntary it is admissible. If prima facie it is false, inconsistent, improper or absurd that might suggest that it is not voluntary. Emperor v. Panchhari Dutt, 86 Ind. Cas. 414=29 C. W. N. 300=52 C. 67=26 Cr. L. J. 782=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587. Voluntariness, being the warrant for varacity, was then regarded as the sine qua non of confessions. This was the condition precedent which had to be complied with before confessions could be admitted in evidence. The meaning of this position apparently is that confessions were presumed to be false till the presumption was rebutted by proof of voluntariness." 2 Bom. L. R. J. 228. The reason for rejection of confessions are thus stated by Eyre C. B.: "A confession forced from the mind by the flattery of hope or by the torture of fear, comes in so questionable a shape, when it is to be considered as the evidence of guilt that no credit ought to be given to it and therefore it is rejected." Warrickshall's case, 1 peach Cr. C. 263; see also 2 L. B. R. 168; U. B. R. (1909) 1st Qr. Ev. 3=11 Cr. L. J. 41=4 Ind. Cas. 759; but see 45 C. 557=22 C. W. N. 213; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 552; 85 Ind. Cas. 830=26 C. R. L. J. 606.

A confession by an accused person is not made irrelevant, if otherwise relevant, merely because the accused person has been sworn or affirmed. 3 P. R. 1880 Cr. An oral confession by an accused person, not being open to exception under s 24, 25 or 26 of the Evidence Act is, as an admission by an accused person, a relevant fact and may be proved at his trial under section 21 and therefore such a confession made to a Magistrate is relevant and may be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate. 11 P. R. Cr. 1918=45 Ind. Cas. 843=19 Cr. L. J. 651; but see Emperor v. Maruti, 21 Bom. L. R. 1065. Section 27 of the Evidence Act, qualifies not only sections 25 and 26 but also section 24, all three of which lay down general rules excluding confessions and the same broad grounds underlie all the three. 45 C. 557=22 C. W. N. 213=27 C. L. J. 148=44 Ind. Cas. 321=19 Cr. L. J. 305; but see 35 Ind. Cas. 962=17 Cr. L. J. 402=U. B. R. (1916) Vol. II, 114; 29 Ind. Cas. 817=11 P. R. 1915 Cr. 16=Ct. L. J. 545. If the case against the accused entirely rests on the confession made by the accused and there is a conflict as to the manner in which the confession is obtained, the accused is justified in asking the Court to give him the benefit of doubt. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 88. Where a person of sound mind and of full age makes a confessional statement in ordinary simple language after he has been warned, he must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning and a subsequent retraction of the same is of no effect. 127 Ind. Cas. 247=A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 353=31 Cr. L. J. 1210. Where the confession made before the police was found by the Court not to have been voluntary, it cannot be corroborated by the confession of the accused as an approver, subsequently retracted. A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 259=124 Ind. Cas. 459=31 Cr. L. J. 661. A confession made by an accused person is not invalid merely because it was made under the belief that he would gain some benefit by making it. 126 Ind. Cas. 109=A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 92. A confession is an admission by an accused person in a criminal case. The making of a counterfeit coin is not a statement and hence the evidence of persons who say that the accused made counterfeit coins in their presence is not barred by s. 24, 25 or 26. 133 Ind. Cas. 154=A. I. R. 1931 All. 9. A confession alleged to have been made by the accused person in the jail to the warder in the absence of any evidence on the part of the prosecution to prove it was read to the accused and acknowledged by him to be correct is absolutely of no evidentiary value against the accused. 1930 M. W. N. 1249. Evidence is inadmissible to prove a confession made while an accused person is in Police custody, except in so far as any fact is discovered in consequence of the information so received from him. 22 Ind. Cas. 150=8 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=38 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 6. A confession made voluntarily in the sense that it was made spontaneously and without any inducement is admissible in evidence under s. 24 of the Evidence Act. 45 A. 300=21 A. L. J. 143=73 Ind. Cas. 62=24 Cr. L. 526. If a man is told by a person in authority that if he gives a true account of the matter he will be pardoned, that is a continuing offer, the thread of which continues unbroken until it is accepted by the confession which completes the bargain, unless there is some circumstance which breaks in so as to show that the inducement no longer operates, and the person confessing has no longer any hope of gaining anything from the authorities by making confession. 26 Cr. L. J. 937=86 Ind. Cas. 1001=A. I. R. 1925 All. 606. Where the Magistrate who recorded the confession took all possible precautions to satisfy himself that the confession was made voluntarily and that the accused was under no inducement or threat at the time he made the confession and he was informed that if he confessed he would not get a pardon: Held that the confession was admissible in evidence. 103 Ind. Cas. 900=28 Cr. L. J. 752=8 A. I. C. R. 416. Section 27 controls three earlier sections. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 297=59 C. 1040=36 C. W. N. 373. Statement of accused that confession was made of free will does not relieve court from considering whether confession should be excluded under s. 26 on other grounds. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 747 (S. B.)=57 C. L. J. 213=1933 Cr. C. 1249. In order to base conviction on confession three things are to be proved (1) that it was made; (2) that evidence of it can be given and (3) that it is true. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 172=1934 Cr. C. 1274.

The mere fact of a person being in custody cannot be a good basis for a presumption that any confession he may make is caused by an inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against him, proceeding from some Police-officer and sufficient to make him believe that he would be benefited in the trial by making it. 95 Ind. Cas. 59=27 Cr. L. J. 731=A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 368. If pressure exercised by a Police officer is sufficient to give the accused grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporary nature, the confession would not only be weak in nature but wholly irrelevant under s. 24. Evidence Act. 27 Cr. L. J. 158=101 Ind. Cas. 894=A. I. R. 1926 All. 246. Confession was made by the accused against himself to a witness. The Judge did not disbelieve it but rejected it because he thought that it was made by the accused under the belief that it would be to his advantage. A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 92. Whether any threat or inducement was offered or not in a particular case is a question of fact and has to be decided with reference to the circumstances of that case and it is not safe to make any generalisations merely on the ground that a certain set of words used in a particular case has been held to be in the nature of an inducement. A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 275. Where there is veiled threat as well as inducement, a confession so obtained is invalid. A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 275.

Made. A confession made to one person by the accused is irrelevant, even where the inducement, threat or promise is held out by a different person if the latter be a person in authority. 9 B. H. C. R. 416.

Accused person. The expression "made by an accused person" in this section means that person must be an accused person at the time of the confession. 35 M. 397 (535); see also 4 C. W. N. 129. The words "accused person" in sections 24 and 26 include any person who subsequently becomes accused, provided that at the time of making the statement criminal proceedings were in prospect. 43 Ind. Cas. 605=19 Cr. L. J. 189. Section 24 of the Evidence Act would apply even if the person who is said to have made the confession was not an accused person at the time when he made the confession. It is sufficient if the person ultimately comes to be an accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have made the confession. 22 Bom. L. R. 1247=59 Ind. Cas. 324 ; 133 Ind. Cas. 55=32 Cr. L. J. 985=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 763. Formal accusation or custody is unnecessary. 1 C. L. R. 21. The test which has to be applied in deciding whether this section applies, is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission, not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it. A confession, therefore, made to a Police officer by a person when he is not accused of any offence is inadmissible in evidence against him when he is accused of an offence. 13 Cr. L. J. 465=15 Ind. Cas. 305=5 Bur. L. T. 92.

If it appears.—“The words lend some colour to the argument that the confession ought to be made to appear to the Judge to have been improperly induced—in other words, that the onus probandi is in the first instance on the prisoner. I do not accede to that argument. A confession may appear to the Judge to have been the result of inducement on the face of it, and apart from any proof at all...In every case, I contend, where a prisoner says he has been forced to confess, the Judge is put upon judicial enquiry, and as I ended before, I end now, that enquiry should precede the admission of the confession and any examination into its truth.” Lex, 2 Bom. L. R. (Journal) 163, “A confession to be admitted at all in evidence must be proved to have been made voluntarily, and not to have been caused by any of the means mentioned in section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, read with sections 28 and 29 of the same Act. When admitted it is to be dealt with like any other piece of evidence, and acted on only if it is believed to be true,” Per Parsons J., in Queen Empress v. Balya Dajadin, cited in 2 Bom. L. R. (Journal) 163. But Fulton J. in Queen Empress v. Baswanta, 25 B. 168=2 Bom. L. R. 761 (765) dissenting from the above case said : The use of the word ‘appears’ indicates, it may be argued, a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if ‘proof’ has been required. A Court might perhaps in a particular case fairly hesitate to say that it was proved that the confession had been unlawfully obtained, and yet might be in a position to say that such appeared to it to have been the case ;” see also 38 C. W. N. 659=35 Cr. L. J. 1479=A. I. R. 1934 Cal. 636. It is not possible for a Court to say that the making of a confession appears to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise except upon evidence before it. The inference may be suggested by the confession itself or by the evidence of the prosecution or by evidence adduced by the accused person or by the surrounding circumstances which the court is always bound to take into consideration but the conclusion cannot be reached on surmise or conjecture. Whether or not a confession is admissible in evidence is a matter which is to be decided after a full consideration of the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 676=29 Cr. L. J. 385=108 Ind. Cas. 387. If in the circumstances of a case, it appears to the Court that there is reason to suspect that a confession was obtained by inducement so as to bring it under the provisions of section 24 of the Evidence Act, the prosecution to make the confession admissible in evidence against the accused, must show that it was freely made. 68 Ind. Cas. 413=26 C. W. N. 54=23 Cr. L. J. 573. It is not possible for a Court to say that the making of the confession “appears” to it to have been caused by any inducement, threat, or promise, except upon evidence which is before the Court. The inference may be suggested by the confession itself, or by the evidence of the prosecution, or by the evidence adduced by the accused person ; or by surrounding circumstances which the Court is always bound to take into consideration ; but the conclusion cannot be reached on surmise or conjecture. 4 Pat. L. T. 186=72 Ind. Cas. 961=24 Cr. L. J. 497=A. I. R. 1923. P. 13. When the admissibility of a confession depends upon a conclusion as to the truth about conflicting evidence antecedent to the making of the confession and tending to show that it is liable to rejection under section 24, the trial Judge must make up his mind upon this issue, and decide the question of admissibility before relying upon the contents of the confession. L. R. 6 A. 89 Cr.=26 Cr. L. J. 937=85 Ind. Cas. 1001=A. I. R. 1925 All. 606.

In Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt, 29 C. W. N. 300=52 C. 67=86 Ind. Cas. 414=26 Cr. L. J. 782=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587. Mr. Justice Mookerjee said : “There are words and expressions in this section to which one must pointedly direct his attention in order to construe the section. There occurs the word ‘appears’ ; the ‘inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person’ must proceed from a person in authority, but nothing is said as to the person to whom it is to be directed ; it is enough if such inducement, threat or promise would in the opinion of the Court be sufficient to give the accused person grounds which would appear to the accused person (and not the Court) reasonable for supposing that by making the confessions he would gain an advantage or avoid an evil of the nature contemplated in the section. It will be seen therefore that the mentality of the accused has to be judged rather than that of the person in authority. That being so, not merely actual words, but words accompanied by acts or conduct as well on the part of the person in authority, which may be construed by the accused person situated as he then is, as amounting to an inducement, threat or promise, will have to be taken into account. A perfectly innocent expression, coupled with acts and conduct on the part of the person in authority, together with the surrounding circumstances may amount to inducement, threat or promise. In scrutinising a case from the point of view of section 24 of the Evidence Act the Court will have to perform a three-fold function. It will have, as a Court, to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat or promise as affording certain grounds; it will have again to clothe itself with the mentality of the accused to see whether the grounds would appear to the accused reasonable for a supposition that is mentioned in the section; lastly it will have to judge as a Court if the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise. The use of these vague expression has been deliberately made with the object of securing absolute fairness in the matter of admitting confessions in judicial proceedings. It is indeed very difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule as to the sufficiency of the circumstances which would make the confession irrelevant under the provisions of the section. Reported decisions afford us little help in this direction. A study of the cases, bearing upon the question, which are too numerous to mention, would show that anything ranging between the barest suspicion on the one hand and absolute certainty on the other has been held to be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section. In this connection reference may be made to 11. B. H. C. R. 137; A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 259; 15 B. 452; 1 C. L. R. 275 (281); 19 B. 721 (731); 8 Bom. L. R. 697; 28 C. 613 at 617. The expression used in this section is not "proved" but "if it appears" which is not as strong an expression as "proved." 33 C. W. N. 1112=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 226. The true view seems to have been taken in the case of Queen Empress v. Basvanta, 25 B. 168, where it was said that the section does not require positive proof (as defined in section 3 of the Act) of improper inducement to justify the rejection of the confession, the word 'appears' indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if 'proof' had been required. There is some diversity of judicial opinion on the question regarding the onus of proof as to the voluntary character of a confession, viz., whether the prosecution will have to prove affirmatively that it was voluntarily made or they should do so only in the event of a doubt arising in the mind of the trial Judge (see for instance the observations of Parke B. in R v. Warringham, 2 Den. C. C. 447 n. and of Cave J. in R v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q. B. p. 12 at p. (17). It is unnecessary to go into this matter, with regard to which there was for some time a diversity of judicial opinion in this country as well for having regard to the wording of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act and also to the presumption attaching to certain recorded confessions and arising under section 80 of the Act, the true and generally recognized view is that a confession duly recorded by a Magistrate with the proper certificate appended to it will be admitted in evidence subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in section 24; that under the latter section a well grounded conjecture, reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed in the evidence, is sufficient to exclude the confession, because it would be idle to expect the accused to prove the inducement, threat or promise, for in most cases such proof cannot be available." To reject a confession it is not necessary that there should be positive proof to establish that the confession had been obtained by use of threat, persuasion, etc. Anything from the barest suspicion to positive evidence would be sufficient for a confession being discarded. 23 A. L. J. 821=89 Ind. Cas. 903=L. R. 6 All. Cr. 161=26 Cr. L. J. 1431=A. I. R. 1925 All. 627 P. C.

Burden of proof—English law. The question of voluntariness is for the Judge; and it is now settled that it lies upon the prosecution to establish, and not upon the accused to negative the element, it being the duty of the prosecution to satisfy itself therefore before putting the statement, R v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q. B. 12; R v. Rose, 18 Cox. 717; Ibrahim v. R. (1914) A. C. 599 (610, 611)=18 C. W. N. 705, (P. C.) where all the English cases have been reviewed; Philp.

Ev. 7th Ed. 256; R. v. Voisin, (1918) 1 K. B. 351. But Prof. Wigmore interpreted the ruling laid down in R. v. Thompson, in a different way. He says: "A modern English ruling takes a middle path, and seems to receive the confession unless attacked by evidence of an improper inducement, and then in case of doubt leaves upon the prosecution the burden of convincing the Court of the admissibility. R. v. Thompson, (1893) 2 Q. B. 12, 18., Cave J. (in case of doubt)." See also Chamberlayne's Ev. § 1579.

Person in authority.—It is a confession well known to English lawyers on questions of this nature; and although all rules of evidence which were in force at the passing of the Act are repealed, the English decisions on the subject can scarcely be regarded as authorities they may still serve as valuable guides." 9 B. H. C. R. 358 (368). Though a too restricted meaning should not be given to the expression "person in authority" in this section, the test to be applied is whether the person has authority to interfere in the matter and any concern or interest in it would be sufficient to give him that authority. 57 C. 488=A. I. R. 1930 Cal 633. A travelling auditor is a person in authority in respect to a railway clerk. 9 B. H. C. R. 358. Too restricted a meaning should not be given to the words "persons in authority." 9 C. W. N. 474. The words "person in authority" include the prosecutor. 26 C. W. N. 54; see also 53 Ind. Cas. 605=19 Cr. L. J. 189. A village Magistrate is a person in authority. 26 M. 38=2 Weir. 733; but the son of a village Magistrate is not a person in authority. 2 Weir. 733. So also is a police patel (3 B. 12; 17 Bom. L. R. 898=16 Cr. L. J. 740), a police constable (5 N. W. P. 86) and a police Inspector (15 P. R. 1885). A panchayat ordinarily is not a person in authority 4 A 46=A. W. N. 1881, 84; 4 Bom. L. R. 785. But when a panchayat was assuming an authority as was leading the accused to believe that he had that authority was held to be a person in authority. 9 C. W. N. 474=2 Cr. L. J. 256; 11 C. W. The expression "person in authority" has a wider meaning than in the actual prosecutor and the test is, 'has the person authority to interfere in the matter' and any concern or interest in it is sufficient to give him authority. *Smith v. Confession made before coroner.—There is no provisions of law which renders a statement made voluntarily by an accused, a suspect, in inquest proceedings before a coroner inadmissible against the accused on his trial of the offence. A. I. R. 1928 B. 52=30 Bom. L. R. 84. Section 20 of the Coroner's Act provides that a coroner shall be deemed to be a Magistrate for the purpose of section 26 of the Evidence Act 28 Bom. L. Inducement threat or promise.—The terms of "inducement" constantly involve both threat and promise,—a threat of prosecution if disclosure is not made, a promise of forgiveness if it is. Wills' Ev. 2nd Ed. 302. But it is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what constitutes inducement. The question is one for the discretion of the judge, and its decision will vary in each particular case. Nort Ev. 161. The inducement need not be expressed, but may be implied. *R v. Cas. 998; see also A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 409. Judge has to decide admissibility of confession of accused caused by inducement, threat or promise. If he considers it admissible, he must point out to jury that admissibility of evidence does not mean that it is true and that it is for jury to accept or reject it. 142 Ind. Cas. 639=1933 Cr. C. 233=34 Cr. L. J. 369=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 187. Where Court entertains a doubt as regards the voluntariness of the confession, it should make a thorough enquiry into the matter. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 835=145 Ind. Cas. 863 (F. B.) Court can under s. 24 form its own opinion as to whether inducement, threat or promise was sufficient to lead accused to believe that he would benefit from making confession. A. I. L. J. 147; see also 1933 A. L. J. 1551. But where it was not properly recorded it is not admissible. 1933 M. W. N. 723.

Inducement must be natural.—The word "temporal" is opposed to spiritual or religious. A confession induced by holding out a hope of forgiveness from God would therefore be admissible in evidence. 4 A. 46. Where the threat employed was excommunication from caste for life, this was an evil probably temporal. 5 M. L. J. 28. Admonition to speak out based on moral ground e.g. that confession is better than guilty silence, is not, legally speaking, an inducement. 89 Ind. Cas. 961=4 Pat. 646; see also 9 P. R. 1894 Cr.; but see 2 L. B. R. 316.

Threats made but not influencing the accused.—Where threats are made to the accused but the accused made the statement deliberately i.e. uninfluenced by the threat this section does not apply. 49 B. 642=27 Bom. L. R. 1034=89 Ind. Cas. 1046=26 Cr. L. J. 1478.

Promise of pardon.—A confession by promising immunity from prosecution of another case is not admissible against the confessor. 12 P. W. R. 1907 Cr.=5 Cr. L. J. 437; see also 1 A. L. J. 110=1 Cr. L. J. 211; 1 P. R. 1899 Cr. 9 P. R. 1869 Cr. 2 A. 260; L. B. R. (1872-1892) 396; 45 A. 633; 32 C. L. J. 204=60 Ind. Cas. 417=22 Cr. L. J. 225; 22 C. 50 (73); 2 Weir 137; 8 W. R. Cr. 53; 10 R. 1895; 5 N. R. 1933 Lah. 310. The tender of a pardon by the Local Government though of doubtful validity in law, can in no way be regarded as an inducement or threat legally held out to an accused person to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge. 5 C. L. J. 224. A voluntary statement given by an accused on conditional pardon is admissible in evidence as against him. 8 B. H. C. Cr. 103. The suggestion that accused persons for the ends of justice be encouraged to confess by the knowledge that if they do so they will receive lenient punishment is one which is likely to convey on an entirely wrong impression and to be extreme mischievous. Cr. B. R. (1916) 2nd r. 113=17 Cr. L. J. 402=35 Ind. Cas. 962; confession made under mere hope of pardon cannot be rejected. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 388=34 Cr. L. J. 598=34 P. L. R. 704; A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 73; A. I. R. 1931 Oudh. 74; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 987.

Proceedings.—Proceedings mean criminal proceedings. 5 M. L. J. art. 29; 1 L. B. R. 133 (135). The phrase "in reference to the proceedings against him" must be read as qualifying the words "advantage" and "evil". Ibid; 9 B. H. C. R. 358. The advantage held out, or the evil threatened, must be with reference to the proceedings against the prisoner, as for instance, that by confessing, he will not be sent to jail. (9 B. H. C. R. 358), that nothing will happen to him. (5 N. W. P. 86), that he will get off (3 B. 12), that he will be pardoned Empress v. Ashgar Ali, 2 A. 260, that he will receive a more lenient sentence, that he will in consequence of confessing become crown evidence, and the like. 5 M. L. J. Art. p. 29.

Retracted confession—Corroboration of. To use a confession as evidence against the accused, the Court must be satisfied (1) that it is voluntary, and (2) that it is substantially true. Moreover, it is a general rule of practice not to act upon retracted confessions, unless they are corroborated on material points by credible independent evidence. 2 S. L. R. Cr. 34=10 Cr. L. J. 200; 5 P. L. R. 1915=3 P. W. R. 1915 Cr.=16 Cr. L. J. 157=17 Ind. Cas. 221. 36 Ind. Cas. 133=17 Cr. L. J. 453; 2 P. W. R. 1917 Cr.=75 P. L. R. 1917 Cr.; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 847; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 315=8 Luck. 518=10 O. W. N. 466; 9 O. W. N. 321; 9 O. W. N. 327; 9 O. W. N. 96; A. I. R. 1934; Lah. 715; A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 89; A. I. R. 1934; Sind. 172; A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 388; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 268. It is a recognised rule of the Law of evidence, that a retracted confession may be used against the person making it, but not against other accused jointly with him. 28 P. W. R. 1907=7 Cr. L. J. 227; 28 C. 683. A Judge should in the first instance, see whether a retracted confession is voluntary or has been improperly induced. The mere fact that prisoner puts in a plea of guilty and denies having made the confession or explains having made it by allegation of police torture, is enough in itself to put a Judge upon enquiry. And he, then, has to decide, before admitting the confession at all, or allowing it to be looked at, whether it has been improperly induced. That is a question for the Court, i.e., the Judge to answer in limine. If, upon weighing all the circumstances, the prisoner's denial and probabilities, it appears to the Judge that the confession has been improperly induced, no matter how true it may be, he is bound to exclude it, it then becomes evidence and liable to be appreciated and weighed with the rest of the evidence in the usual way. 8 Bom. L. R. 697=4 Cr. L. J. 332; 3 Bom. L. R. 441; A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 682=104 Ind. Cas. 247; 60 Ind. Cas. 789; A. W. N. 1898, 69; A. W. N. 1885, 59 (F. B.); A. W. N. 1885, 221. A confession duly recorded and certified under s. 164 of the Cr. Pro. Code, is admissible in evidence against a person making it unless shut out by the provisions of s. 24 of the Evidence Act. In India the law relating to the admissibility of a confession is contained in section 24 of the Evidence Act. The question which a Court has to decide when determining on the admissibility of a confession is whether it appears to the Court to have been induced by the means mentioned in that section. The mere subsequent retraction of a confession which has been duly recorded and certified by a Magistrate, is not enough in all cases to make it appear to have been unduly induced. Queen Empress v. Baswant, 25 B. 168=2 Bom. L. R. 761.

In the absence of any corroboration by credible and independent evidence, it is unsafe in the majority of cases to found a conviction on a retracted confession. A retracted deposition does not of itself afford a sufficient corroboration of a retracted confession. 13 C. P. L. R. 107; 12 M. 123=2 Weir. 376; A. W. Where the statement of a person in the capacity of an approver had been made under a condition not fulfilled, viz., that he should be examined at the trial, if the prosecution was not prepared to treat him as a witness, preferring to deal with him as a co-accused, his retracted confession would be irrelevant under s. 24, notwithstanding the special provisions of cl. 2 of s. 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 1 P. R. 1899 Cr. ; 9 P. R. 1869 Cr. ; 28 C. 689=5 C. W. N. 670. Where a confession was made before a Magistrate under circumstances not liable to suspicion, and, to all appearances, fulfils the requirements of the law, the fact that it is retracted in the Sessions Court does not negative the presumption of the genuineness of the confession. A. W. N. 1890, 173. A confession before the Magistrate, though afterwards retracted in the Sessions Court, is evidence against the party making it. 8 W. R. Cr. 40 ; 1 L. B. R. 238 ; 17 W. R. So it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt, without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to a retracted confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally given, and the circumstances under which it was retracted, including the reason given by the prisoner for his retraction. 16 P. A confession though made voluntarily by an accused person before a Magistrate, if subsequently retracted, is not sufficient by itself to justify a Sessions Court in acting upon it. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 952 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 842 ; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 497 ; 38 P. W. R. Cr. 1910=24 P. R. 1910=8 Ind. Cas. 250. An admission which is explained away is like a retracted confession. A. I. The net result of the authorities on the value of confession seems to be this : (i) That it is not illegal to base a conviction upon the uncorroborated confession of an accused person, provided the Court is satisfied that the confession was voluntary and is true in fact ; (ii) that, from the point of view of legality, pure and simple, the fact that a confession has been retracted is immaterial ; (iii) that the use to be made by the Court of a confession, whether retracted or not, is a matter rather of prudence than of law, the business of the Court being to make up its mind, in accordance with the dictates of common sense, whether it is safe to believe the confession or not ; (iv) that experience and common sense show that, in the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine ; (v) that, when it is a question of using a confession against a co-accused of the person confessing and the Court would not be prepared to accept the confession per se as sufficient, the corroboration ought to be of the kind that not only confirms the general story of the crime, but also, unmistakably, connects the said co-accused with the crime. 264 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 626=30 P. R. 1914 Cr.=25 Ind. Cas. 634=5 P. W. R. 1914 Cr. see also L. B. R. (1893-1900) 642 ; 1 L. B. R. 238 ; 57 C. 488=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 633. It can not be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to such a confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally given and under which it was retracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for his retraction. A confession, in itself reasonable and probable must, if repeated more than once and retracted only at a late stage in the proceedings has greater weight attached to it than a confession made only once and retracted after a short interval. The question which should be put to the Jury regarding such confessions is not whether they are corroborated by independent evidence, but whether, having regard to the circumstances connected with them, it was more probable that the original confessions or the statements retracting them were true. An omission on the part of the Judge to place the circumstance before the jury and to put this question to the Jury amounts to a misdirection. 21 M. 83=2 Weir 533 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 242 ; 19 B. 728. If a Judge believes that a confession made by a prisoner although subsequently withdrawn, contains a true account of that prisoner's connection with a crime, the Judge is bound to act, so far as the prisoner is concerned, on that confession, which he believes to be true. When a confession is not supported by the evidence of witnesses, a Judge must examine carefully to see whether it gives details which indicate that it is a natural narrative of what took place in the presence of the man making it, and is not at variance with any evidence in the case which is believed, and is not merely a parrot-like repetition of a story put into the man's mouth. 20 A. 133 (134-135)=A. Where an approver who had accepted a conditional pardon, make a confession implicating the accused, but afterwards retracted it, held, that the accused was not liable to be convicted on the confession alone. 5 N. W. P. 217. But confession of a co-accused, though subsequently retracted is admissible in evidence against his co-accused. 125 Ind. Cas. 639=31 Cr. L. J. 877=A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 667. Where the confession made before the police was found by the Court not to have been voluntary, it cannot be corroborated by the confession of the accused as an approver, subsequently retracted. 124 Ind. Cas. 459=31 Cr. L. J. 661=A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 259.

In capital cases, the jury should often refrain from convicting on retracted confessions. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 245=Cr. Reg. 12 of 1886. Where the only evidence in a criminal case was the confession of the accused made before the Magistrate but subsequently retracted, and where it was found that the police misconducted themselves in the search of the houses of the prisoners who confessed, the High Court set aside the conviction. 2 C. L. R. 132. Where a confession was taken by a Magistrate in jail with a police officer in the next room and was subsequently retracted, such a confession could not be acted upon unless supported by very good corroboration. 11 C. L. J. 273.

Where a confession is retracted by the accused on the ground that it was induced by torture and especially when the confession, after admission, is to be taken into consideration against the co-accused under s 30, Evidence Act, and the accused has marks of violence on his body ; it may be the proper course for the Judge to take evidence about the circumstances before admitting the confession in evidence. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 730=Cr. Reg. 58 of 1894. Where a prisoner, a young girl of 15 years of age, who was suddenly charged with a serious offence and was kept in police custody for some time, made a confession to a Magistrate, after being beaten by the police with a view to forcing her to make it, which she subsequently retracted held, that it could not be relied upon, especially, when it was inconsistent with the evidence given in the case by the prosecution witnesses. 6 C. W. N. 380. If the accused was examined in a language which the Magistrate understood and was able to write, then the record of the examination, if made in another language, is inadmissible, and no evidence can be admitted to prove what statement was made by the accused. It is not the practice to base a conviction upon a retracted confession, unless it is corroborated. That a person, who is being tried, is the same as the person who made the confession must be proved. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 70. Where the accused, who made a detailed confession before the committing Magistrate, retracted it, on his examination being read over to him in conformity with s. 205 Cr. Pro. Code, it was held that it did not amount to a confession. 9 B. H. C. R. 344. The practice of the High Court of Bombay has been to deal with confessions in connection with all the facts of the particular case, and while not ignoring the difficulties that surround retracted confessions, it has not avoided these difficulties by applying any stringent rule. There is no rule of law that requires a duly proved confession to be corroborated. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 719. A confession made before the Magistrate though afterwards retracted, is evidence against the party making it ; and the statement of an accused made after accepting a person, is not inadmissible in evidence by reason of the pardon making it having retracted it before the committing Magistrate. P. L. R. 1900, 19 Cr. There is nothing in section 30 of the Evidence Act which would exclude, as against persons being jointly tried for the same offence, a confession made by one of the accused duly proved, simply because at the trial the confession is withdrawn or denied. 1 L. B. R. 133. Certain accused persons made confessions which led to the arrest of certain other persons. The confessions were subsequently retracted, but were corroborated by the evidence of the approver. Held that the retracted confessions taken behind the back of the accused who had no opportunity of cross-examining the persons who made them, were not sufficient corroboration of the approver's evidence and no conviction should be based on them. 11 A. L. J. 73=18 Ind. Cas. 672=14 Cr. L. J. 112. C was convicted of causing the death of J by fracturing her skull. C made a confession before a Magistrate, which she retracted in the Court of the trying Magistrate. Except the evidence of one witness, who said he saw the two women quarrelling, there was no proof whatever to show that C committed the crime. Held, that it was not safe to convict the accused person on his retracted confessions standing by itself uncorroborated. Held also, that production by an accused person while in the hands of the Police, of a thing unconnected with the commission of the evidence is not admissible in evidence against him. 3 P. W. R. 1907 Cr. Evidence brought in under s. 288 cannot be accepted as proper corroboration of a confession made to a Magistrate and retracted at the sessions trial, especially when that confession was not fairly obtained and was not voluntary. 27 C. 295=4 C. W. N. 129. But a retracted confession, where a confession was recorded under section 164 Cr. Pro. Code, can be relied on when it was corroborated in material particulars by the evidence of an accomplice. 25 M. 143=2 Weir 800. A confession which was made under the influence of an offer of pardon and was recorded under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be relied on if retracted afterwards. L. B. R. (1893-1900) 8.

A confessing prisoner should not be condemned upon a retracted confession unless it is corroborated in material particulars. 70 P. L. R. 1918=19 P. W. R. Cr. 1918=44 Ind. Cas. 179=19 Cr. L. J. 275; 36 Ind. Cas. 133=17 Cr. L. J. 453; 60 Ind. Cas. 789=22 Cr. L. J. 293.

An accused's confession subsequently retracted and not tallying with the other evidence in the case, cannot be pressed as strong evidence against him. 32 Ind. Cas. 321=2 O. L. J. 468=17 Cr. L. J. 33. In the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a retracted confession, unless from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent, of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been retracted from is genuine. 31 Ind. Cas. 831=16 Cr. L. J. 815. But it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of the plaintiff without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to such a confession must depend on the circumstances under which the confession was originally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. It is unsafe for a Court to rely on an act on a confession which has been retracted unless after a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, the Court, is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true, that is to say, usually unless the confession is corroborated by credible independent evidence. A retracted confession should carry practically no weight as against a person other than its maker. 71 Ind. Cas. 497=23 C. W. N. 1010=24 Cr. L. J. 145=A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 217; 45 M. L. J. 613=18 L. W. 607=33 M. L. T. H. C. 37; Manna Lal v. Emperor, 9 O. & A. I. R. 947; 75 Ind. Cas. 152=24 Cr. L. J. 204.

The duty of a Judge presiding over the trial by jury is to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties. In considering whether certain confessions are admissible or not he is not confined to the grounds of confessions as contained in the retraction or to the objections as to the admissibility by the accused, but he should look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether the confession is admissible or not. A judge is not concerned with the truth or falsity of a confession. That is a matter entirely for the jury. He is concerned only with the question of admissibility. They will be admitted only if they are voluntary. If the Judge is satisfied as to the truth of a confession but doubts voluntary character he is bound to exclude it under the law, though such rejection amounts to excluding truth from the Court. 29 C. W. N. 300=52 C. 67=86 Ind. Cas. 414=26 Cr. L. J. 782=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587.

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by an accused cannot be accepted as evidence of guilt without independent corroborative evidence. In every case the credibility of a confession is a matter to be decided by the Court in the circumstances of each particular case. A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 1. In deciding whether a retracted confession is to be admitted in evidence it is necessary to examine not only the statement of the prisoner as to how he came to make it, but all the circumstances of the case. There is no rule of law which compels a Court to raise an inference of improper inducement from the mere fact that a confession is retracted. 6 Lah. 415=7 Lah. L. J. 482=A. I. R. 1925 Lah.

605 ; 96 Ind. Cas. 747=27 Cr. L. J. 982. Confession made by an adult man who understood what he was doing, though retracted, is sufficient for the conviction of the person making it, even although certain parts of it are not found to be true provided that there was a detailed confession and it was made voluntarily and in spite of the fact that he was explained the consequences of making it. A. I. R. 1929 Oudh. 381. Conviction based on retracted confession which was voluntary and was sufficiently corroborated is legal. 103 Ind. Cas. 112=28 Cr. L. J. 656 ; 11 Mys. L. J. 407, A. I. Confession to police officer not to be proved.

25. No confession made to a police-officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence.

Redrafting of ss. 24 to 27.—“It is now clear beyond all dispute that section 27 is one of those sections which controls the three earlier sections, namely section 24, 25 and 26. In the last mentioned sections, the danger of admitting confessions made to police officers or when in police custody is clearly pointed out. But although such confessions are inadmissible under the law, that is under the sections which I have just mentioned, they may in certain circumstances lead to the discovery of facts, etc., in consequence of the information received from persons in custody. Therefore, the first thing that has got to be ascertained before sections 27 of the Evidence Act can be applied, is to find out whether or not the information, such as it was, which led to the discovery of certain other facts came from a person in the custody of a police officer.” Per C. C. Ghosh in 36 C. W. N. 373 (375)=138 Ind. Cas. 116=33 Cr. L. J. 546=59 C. 1040=A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 297. In the same case Rankin C. J. said : “I agree I would only point out that this case is a very good illustration of the necessity of sections 24 to 27 of the Evidence Act being redrafted. As my learned brother has pointed out it has been decided by the highest authority that section 27 is not a mere proviso to section 26 but cuts down the operation of sections 24 and 25 as well.”

Reason of the Rule.—This law is applicable only in India. The following extract from the First Report of the Indian Law Commissioners shows the reasons which prompted the Legislature in enacting ss. 25 and 26. The Police in the province of Bengal are armed with very extensive powers. They are prohibited from enquiring into cases of a petty nature, but complaints in cases of the more serious offences are usually laid before the police daroga who is authorized to examine the complainant, to issue process of arrest, to summon witnesses, to examine the accused and forward the case to the Magistrate or to submit a report of his proceedings according as the evidence may, in his judgment, warrant the one or the other course. The evidence taken by the Parliamentary Committee on Indian affairs during the Sessions of 1852 and 1853 and other papers which have been brought to our notice, abundantly shows that the powers of the police are often abused for purposes of extortion and oppression ; and we have considered whether the powers now exercised by the police might not be greatly abridged. We have arrived at the conclusion that, considering the extensive jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the facilities which exists for the escape of parties concerned in serious crime, and the necessity for the immediate adoption in many cases of the most prompt and energetic measures, it is requisite to arm the police with some such powers as they now possess ; and we have accordingly adopted many of the provisions of the Bengal Code on this head. In one material point we propose a change in the duties of the police. By the existing law, the daroga or other police officer presiding at an enquiry into a crime committed within his division is required, upon the apprehension of the accused, to question him fully regarding the whole of the circumstances of the case and the persons concerned in the commission of the crime, and, if any property may have been stolen or plundered, the person in possession of such property or the place where it has been deposited (vide s. 19 of Regulation XX, 1817). In the event of the accused making a free and voluntary confession, it is to be immediately written down. Then follow other provisions for preventing any species of compulsion or maltreatment with a view to extort a confession or procure information. But we are informed and this information is corroborated by the evidence we have examined, that in spite of this qualification as to the character of the confession, confessions are frequently extorted or fabricated. A police officer, on receiving intimation of the occurrence of a dacoity or other offence of a serious character, failing to discover the perpetrators of the offence often endeavours to secure himself against any charge of supineness or neglect by getting up a case against parties whose circumstances and character are such as are likely to obtain credit for an accusation of the kind against them. This is not unfrequently done by extorting or fabricating false confessions, and, when this step is once taken, there is, of course, impunity for the real offenders, and a great encouragement to crime. The daroga is henceforth committed to the direction he has given to the case, and it is his object to prevent a discovery of the truth and the apprehension of the guilty parties, who so far as the police is concerned, are now perfectly safe. We are now persuaded that any provisions to correct the exercise of this power by the police will be futile; and we accordingly propose to remedy the evil, as far as possible by the adoption of a rule prohibiting any examination whatever of any accused party by the police, the result of which is to constitute a written document. This of course, will not prevent a police officer from receiving any information which any one may voluntarily offer to him; but the police will not be permitted to put upon record any statement made by a party accused of an offence."

As regards sections 25, 26 and 27 Mahmood J. observed in Queen-Empress v. Babu Lal, 6 A. 509 at pp. 521, 522: "I have stated these facts as introductory of the observations which I am about to make, that the rules contained in ss. 25, 26, and 27 of the Evidence Act were not originally treated in British India as, strictly speaking, rules of evidence, but rather as rules governing the action of police officers, and as matters of criminal procedure. I may take it that no such rules existed either in the Muhammadan Law or in the English rule of evidence, the only two systems to which the Courts resorted for guidance on questions of evidence in criminal matters." Then after making mention of previous legislation on the subject he added at p. 523: "These legislative provisions leave no doubt in my mind that the Legislature had in view the malpractices of police officers in extorting confessions from accused persons in order to gain credit by securing convictions, and that those malpractices went to the length of positive torture; nor do I doubt that the Legislature, in laying down such stringent rules, regarded the evidence of police officers as untrustworthy, and the object of the rules was to put a stop to the extortion for confession, by taking away from the police officers the advantage of proving such extorted confessions during the trial of accused persons." Section 25 of the Evidence Act is enacted to guard prisoners accused of offences against unfair practices on the part of the police. Solam v. Emperor, 43 Ind. Cas. 111=19 Cr. L. J. 79; see also per Garth C. J. in Queen v. Horribole, 1 C. 207; 1 C. L. R. 21; 4 A. 198 (204). The reason why the law in ss. 25 and 26 jealously excludes a confession made by an accused, whilst in the custody of a police officer unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, is that there is room for apprehension that a police officer who is armed with large powers over accused persons, may unwillingly excite terror in their minds and extort false and involuntary confessions; and his duty to investigate criminal cases and to detect offenders and bring them to justice may make him feel tempted to obtain confessions from accused persons by threat, promise, or other improper influence. 2 C. W. N. 71.

Scope of the section.—"In section 25, the criterion for excluding the confession is the answer to the question—To whom was the confession made? If the answer is that it was made to a police officer, the law says that such confessions shall be absolutely excluded from evidence, because the person to whom it was made is not to be relied on for proving such a confession, and he is moreover suspected of employing coercion to obtain confessions." Per Mahmood J. in Queen-Empress v. Babu Lal, 6 A. 509 at p. 532; 28 Bom. L. R. 1196. In Queen v. Hurribolle Chunder Ghosh, 1 C. 217, the confession, was made, in the first instance, to two policemen, and taken down in writing, and the prisoner was then brought before the Deputy Commissioner of Police Mr. Lambert, in the Police Office in Calcutta, when he again affirmed the truth of his former statement to Mr. Lambert. and Mr. Lambert, in his capacity of a Magistrate received and attested the statement. Mr. Jackson, Counsel for the prisoner contended that the reception in evidence of the statement admitted was expressly barred by s. 25 of the Evidence Act, it being a confession made to a police officer. The fact that the police officer was in this case also a Magistrate does not alter the effect of the section; it does not make him the less a police officer. He cannot separate his functions as police officer and Magistrate and therefore was not such a Magistrate as is contemplated by s. 26. In delivering the judgment Garth C. J. said at p. 215: "It was urged by Mr. Jackson, for the prisoner, that the terms of s. 25 are imperative, that a confession made to a Police Officer, under any circumstances, is not admissible in evidence against him, and that the 26th section is not intended to qualify the 25th, but means that no confession made by a prisoner in custody, to any person other than a Police officer, shall be admissible, unless made in the presence of a Magistrate. I am of opinion that is the true meaning of the 25th section. Its humane object is to prevent confessions obtained from accused persons through any undue influence, being received as evidence against them. It is an enactment to which the Court should give the fullest effect, and I see no sufficient reason for reading the 26th section so as to qualify the plain meaning of the 25th. 11 C. 635 ; but see 6 A. 509 ; 4 A. 198 ; In re Heran Miya, 1 C. L. R. 21." The confession made to a police officer by an accused is not admissible against him under s. 25 of the Evidence Act, a fortiori it is inadmissible against a co-accused. 12 Bom. L. R. 899=8 Ind. Cas. 622=11 Cr. L. J. 690 ; 36 Ind. Cas. 480=17 Cr. L. J. 512. This section is absolute. A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 24. A confession contained in a statement made by an accused person to a stranger in the presence of a Police officer while he was in the custody of a jailor does not fall within the purview of s. 25 or s. 26 of the Evidence Act and is admissible in evidence. 8 P. R. 1914 Cr.=214 P. L. R. 1914=15 Cr. L. J. 480=24 Ind. Cas. 568 ; A confession made by an accused to a private person in the presence of the Police is inadmissible in evidence against him. 20 Ind. Cas. 468=37 P. W. R. 1913 Cr.=320 P. L. R. 1913=14 Cr. L. J. 596. Section 25 of the Evidence Act lays down that a confession to a Police officer shall not be used as against the person making it, it does not say that such a confession shall be inadmissible for all purposes. Such a confession may be used for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion whether a subsequent judicial confession should be believed or not. 75 Ind. Cas. 693=6 L. L. J. 54=25 Cr. L. J. 5=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 315. The words "a person" in this section mean any person. But as section 26 of the Act applies only to the proof of a confession as against his maker so it should be held that this section has a similar scope ; and both these sections were intended to prevent the use, as evidence against the maker of confessions made actually or in effect to Police officers. This section is not concerned with the statements of witnesses. 35 M. 397. Section 27 of the Evidence Act qualifies not only, sections 26 and 25 but also section 24. Therefore, when a confession as a whole is excluded, whether by reason of the section 26 or of section 25 or of section 24, so much of the information given by the person making the confession when he was an accused and in custody, as distinctly relates to a relevant fact thereby discovered becomes admissible. 44 Ind. A confession made to a Police officer is inadmissible even if the Police officer is invested with the powers of a Magistrate. 8 Rang. 52=A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 227. A confession made to a Police officer is inadmissible in evidence according to sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. 15 Ind. Cas. 800=13 Cr. L. J. 528=11 M. L. T. 407 ; 25 C. 413=2 C. W. N. 257. A was convicted on the evidence of two Excise Sub-Inspectors, who stated that he offered them Rs. 10 per ball of opium as a bribe to let him land unmolested a large quantity of illicit opium from the steamer Kattoria. These Excise officers had been also enrolled as Police officers. Held, that the alleged offer by the accused amounted to an admission that he had large quantity of contraband opium in his possession, and being an admission of an offence under the Opium Act, amounted to a confession and was thus inadmissible under s. 25 of Evidence Act. The test which has to be applied in deciding whether s. 25 Evidence Act applies, is the position of the person at the time when it is proposed to prove the admission not his position at the time when he is alleged to have made it. A confession, therefore, made to a Police officer by a person when he is not accused of any offence is inadmissible in evidence against him when he is accused of an offence. A confession made by an accused person to a Police officer might be admissible in favour of a co-accused but not against him. 15 Ind. Cas. 305. As section 26 of the Evidence Act applies only to proof of a confession as against the maker ; so it should be held that section 25 has similar scope ; and both these sections were intended to prevent the use, as evidence against the maker, of confessions made actually or in effect to Police officers. Section 25 of the Evidence Act, was not concerned with the statements of witnesses. 1912 M. W. N. 549=12 M. L. T. 1=13 Cr. L. J. 352=14 Ind. Cas. 890=35 M. 397. But when an accused is examined as a witness by a Police officer his statement is inadmissible under this section. 4 C. W. N. 129. In that case the Court observed at page 143 : "It has been already mentioned that the statement obtained by the Police from the mother of Jadab Das is said to have incriminated Rai Charan, the Inspector examined him as a witness reducing his statement to writing and that he then arrested Rai Charan. The impropriety of such proceedings is aggravated by the course taken by the Sessions Judge. He examined the Sub-Inspector in regard to that statement and he thus admitted it as evidence in the trial. The statement cannot be regarded otherwise than as a confession made by Rai Charan to the Sub-Inspector. If it be regarded it was clearly inadmissible under section 25 of the Evidence Act. If on the other hand it was to be used as evidence against the other prisoners, it was manifestly inadmissible." Section 25 only provides that no confession made to a Police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. It does not preclude the counsel for one accused person, on his client's behalf, from asking questions to prove a confession made to the police by another accused person, tried jointly with him. Such a confession is not to be treated or received as evidence against the person making it. The Judge should instruct the jury accordingly. 2 B. 61 (64). The confession under this section need not be a confession of the crime which the police is at the moment investigating. 1931 M. W. N. 1138=34 L. W. 858=61=M. L. J. 860.

Police officer, meaning of. "In construing the 25th section of the Evidence Act of 1872, I consider that the term 'police officer' should be read not in any strict technical sense, but according to its more comprehensive and popular, meaning." Per Garth C. J. in Queen v. Hurribole, 1 C. 207 (215). "Police officer" means what is popularly and technically known as member of police force. A. I. R. 1932 Pat. 293=13 P. L. T. 627. A Deputy Commissioner of Police in Calcutta is a Police officer. Ibid. Primarily the term "Police officer" in this section means the same as it does in the Police Act but it can be extended beyond the definition in section 1 of the Police Act to cover only those persons who like Police officers coming within that definition, are so much more interested in obtaining convictions than any member of the community is, that they might possibly resort to improper means for doing so. That class does not include police patel in Berar. 23 N. L. R. 23=101 Ind. Cas. 599=A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 222; 82 Ind. Cas. 32=26 Cr. L. J. 1088=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 340. But in Bombay a police patel is a Police officer within the meaning of sections 25 and 26. 17 B. 485; 10 B. 595. There is no qualification of the expression "Police officer" in s. 25 or s. 26 of the Evidence Act and a confession made to a Police officer whoever that officer may be and whether he is a Police officer in British territory or a Police officer in foreign territory, is inadmissible. 22 B. 235; 87 Ind. A tenhouse Gaung appointed under the Lower Burma Village Act, 1889, is a Police officer within the meaning of s. 25 of the Evidence Act; and an admission to him of the accused's guilt is inadmissible in evidence under the section. 3 L. An extra judicial confession made by the accused to a Lambodar and a Subedhars cannot be admitted. 35 P. L. R. 359.

There was some conflict of opinion between the Bombay High Court and other High Courts as regards whether an excise officer is a police officer or not. An excise peon having the power to detain, search, seize and arrest any person whom he believes to be guilty if any offence under the Opium Act or Bombay Abkari Act has power which are very similar to those exercised by a Police officer. Any admission made to him is therefore admissible under the provisions of s. 25. A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 60=31 Bom. L. R. 49 ; A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 4 (F. B.)=28 Bom. L. R. 1196=51 B. 78=99 Ind. But the Calcutta High Court held that confession made to an excise officer is admissible in evidence as an excise officer is not a Police officer and section 25 of the Evidence Act does not apply to such a confession. 54 C. 601=31 C. Confessions recorded in a police diary cannot be used for any thing other than to assist the presiding Judge in the enquiry or the trial or for the purpose of enabling the defence under certain circumstances to contradict the witness for the Crown. It is the duty of the Judge to bring on record by evidence any material fact that may come to his knowledge and it is for that purpose that he should use the confession. A. I. R. 1928 All 25=8 A. I. Where a house was searched and the accused put his signature on the recovery list ; held that the fact of the accused putting his signature on the recovery list is not admissible in evidence against him in a case in which the possession of the house is in question because it would be an incriminating statement of the nature of a confession to a Police officer and could not be proved by reason of the prohibition contained in section 25. 8 Lah. 326=28 P. In a case of dacoity a statement made by an accused to a Police officer, at the time of the search of his house, that property would be found in the possession of his co-accused is not admissible in evidence against the accused making the statement nor is it admissible against his co-accused as proving their participation in the dacoity. 65 Ind. A first information of murder was lodged at the Police station by the accused himself on the morning following the murder and in it, after stating the narrative of events prior to the night of occurrence he confessed that he had committed the offence. Held that although by reason of the provisions of section 25 of the Evidence Act the first information was not admissible in its entirety, yet, in so far as it spoke of events prior to the night of occurrence, it was admissible in evidence if and when proved. 62 Ind. Accused went to a Police station and made the report "I have killed my wife and her corpse is lying in my house," in consequence of which the Police proceeding to his house, discovered the corpse of his wife in an inner room of the house. Held, that the provisions of ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act apply to the circumstances of the case. 16 A. The only evidence against the first accused was that, in consequence of information given by him, the second accused was questioned and the stolen property was produced. The first accused was also said to have admitted the theft before the police. Held that the evidence was too insufficient to justify the conviction of the first accused for theft. The confession was irrelevant, as it did not lead directly to the recovery of the property. 3 M. L. T. 333=7 Cr. L. J. 398. Where a confession was made before an investigating Police officer, who joined the prosecutor in questioning the accused, it should in fact be held to have been made to a Police officer, though actually taken down by the prosecutor, and it is hence inadmissible under s. 25 of the Evidence Act. 10 C. A person who had committed a murder, voluntarily went to a police station, and made a statement to a Police officer that he had done the deed, and that the instrument of murder was in a place named. He was subsequently arrested. Held, that the statement was a confession and was not admissible under s. 25 of the Evidence Act. Evidence of the police, however, was admissible to prove the

When a Police officer has evidence before him, sufficient to justify the arrest of a person, he should not, preliminary to the arrest, examine him and record his statement. Such statement cannot be regarded except as confession to a Police officer, and is inadmissible in evidence under s. 25 of the Evidence Act. 27 C. 295=4 C. W. N. 129. Any statement made by an accomplice, while in police custody as suspect, in consequence of a tender of a pardon by an Assistant Commissioner acting in his executive capacity, though professing to act under s. 337, Cr. Section 25 of the Evidence Act only provides that a confession made to a Police officer shall not be proved as against an accused person. It does preclude an accused person from proving on his own behalf, a confession made to a Police officer by another accused person tried jointly with him. 12 Cr. L. J. 79=9 Ind. Cas. 449. Confession to a Police officer of having given false information cannot be proved against the person making it and charged under s. 182 and s. 211 of the Penal Code. U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I, 156. Three persons were tried jointly for rioting. During the trial an information lodged by one of them with the police was proved, and, in his charge to the jury the Judge said "it (the information) contains an admission that all three accused persons were present at the occurrence." Held, the information was not a confession under s. 25 of the Evidence Act, and as against the person other than the informant, it amounted to an admission of evidence against them. 11 C. L. J. 301=5 Ind. Cas. 305=14 C. W. N. 593. Where a Police officer read over to the accused the statement which he (Police officer) had taken from others and then told him "I know the whole thing now," and the accused, thereupon, made a statement, in consequence of which he was arrested and his confession was duly recorded, held that the confession recorded under these circumstances was free and voluntary and was perfectly admissible in evidence. 3 Bom. L. R. 404. Where there is no judicial proof of the guilt of the accused person, it is illegal to rely upon an unreliable or suspicious confession or a confession which is open to grave suspicion of having been produced by ill-treatment of the police. 21 P. Where the confession of an accused person conflicted with the medical evidence in the case and was probably induced by the police, the Chief Court declined to confirm a capital sentence based upon it. 3 P. R. 1867 Cr. A police officer examined for the prosecution stated in the course of cross-examination, that, when he arrested the prisoner, he said to the former that some Chinamen, at the time of the occurrence came out with hatchets. In re-examination, the Policeman substituted the words "at the time of the occurrence." On being asked if the prisoner had explained "what time" the Policeman answered that the prisoner said "at the time I struck the deceased." Held, that the statement of the prisoner that the Chinamen came out with hatchets at the time he struck the deceased would not be admissible in evidence, as it was an incriminating statement made to a Police officer by an accused person in custody, 10 C. 1022. An admission to a Police officer made by an accused before arrest is admissible in evidence. 6 C. 530=7 C. L. R. 541. The accused was convicted of an offence under s. 412 I. P. Code. The evidence for the prosecution consisted of certain confessions made to the Police and the circumstance that the accused found some stolen cloth for the Police while in Police custody. Held that the confession was inadmissible under s. 25, Evidence Act, and the circumstance mentioned did not justify his conviction under the section. A. W. N. 1883, 126.

Two of them made a statement to a Sub-Inspector of Police that they were in the fight and that the deceased had attempted to interfere with the seizure of the cattle. Held that the statement did not amount to a confession, inasmuch as it was only an explanatory statement of the circumstances under which the cattle had been seized and was not an admission of guilt but rather in the nature of a complaint against the deceased and was not therefore inadmissible in evidence. 81 Ind. Cas. 347=25 Cr. L. J. 811=A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 232. A statement by one accused to the police that certain property which he produced had been given to him by two other accused who were charged with him as being members of a gang of dacoits, is inadmissible as being an admission of a criminalizing circumstance under s. 25 of the Evidence Act. 75 Ind. Cas. 70=46 B. 961=24 Cr. L. J. 870. A statement made by an accused to a Police officer if it does not amount to a confession may nevertheless, be used against him and more particularly if the statement turns out to be false in the light of the other evidence in the case. If it amounts to a confession then it must be excluded from evidence altogether under section 25 but in either event it can only be used against the accused making the statement. 65 Ind. Cas. 349=20 A. L. J. 178=23 Cr. L. J. 197. The word confession in section 25 of the Evidence Act is not confined to actual admissions of guilt, but it includes inculpatory statements from which inferences of guilt can reasonably be drawn or which suggest the guilt of a person making the statement, 42 Ind. Cas. 1002=19 Cr. L. J. 42; see also A. I. R. 1935 Oudh 1. Section 25 of the Evidence Act does not say that all statements made to the Police are admissible but it excludes only confession made to them; there being a distinction between mere admissions and confessions which are statements either directly admitting the guilt of the accused or statements which suggest the inference that he committed the crime with which he is charged. Further the general rule is subject to that which admits statements leading to discovery whether such statements amount to confession or not. 26 Ind. Cas. 161=15 Cr. L. J. 713=41 C. 601; 3 N. L. L. J. 252. A statement made by the accused to the police, which does not amount directly or indirectly to an admission of any incriminating circumstance, is admissible in evidence; hence where the accused was found carrying away a box at night and, when asked by a policeman on duty about the ownership of the box stated that it belonged to him, the statement was held admissible against him at a trial for theft of the box. 5 Bom. L. R. 312. "Confession" in section 25, Evidence Act, as in section 24, means a confession made by an accused person, which it is proposed to prove against him to establish an offence. For such a purpose, confession might be inadmissible which yet for other purposes, would be admissible under s. 18 against the person who made it (s. 21), in his character of one setting up an interest in property, the object in litigation, or judicial enquiry and disposal. 9 B. 131. First information by accused to police officer admitting guilt is inadmissible by confession. A. I. R. 1935 Bom 26.

Reason of the rule. "The object of section 26 of the Evidence Act appears to us to be to prevent the abuse of their powers by the police, and hence confessions made by accused persons while in custody cannot be proved against them unless made in the presence of a Magistrate." Per Birch J. in Queen v. Monmohun, 24 W. R. 33. "Its human object is to prevent confessions obtained from accused persons through any undue influence, being received as evidence against them," Per Garth C. J. in Queen v. Hurribole Chunder, I. C. 207 (215). The reason of the rule seems to be that the custody of a police officer provides easy opportunities of coercion for extorting confessions. 6 A. 509 (532).

Scope of the section. This section deals with confessions made in the presence of a police officer who has the custody of an accused person, that is, of a police officer who is concerned more or less in the investigation of the case; and those confessions are absolutely excluded, whether made to a police officer or to any other person, unless made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. The proper construction of sections 25 and 26 is one which excludes confessions to a police officer under any circumstances, or to any one else, while the person making it is in a position to be influenced by a police officer, unless the free and voluntary nature of the confession is secured by its being made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, in which case the confessing person has an opportunity of making a statement uncontrolled by any fear of the police. Per Ainslie J. in In the matter of Hiran Miya, I. C. L. R. 21. Section 26 is not to be read as qualifying the plain meaning of s. 25. I. C. 207; 12 W. R. Cr. 82. Section 26, cannot be treated as an exception or proviso to s. 25, there being no words to justify such an interpretation. The criterion adopted is s. 26 for excluding confession is the answer to the question—under that circumstances was the confession made? If the answer is that it was made whilst the accused was in the custody of a police officer, the law lays down that such confession shall be excluded from evidence, unless it was "made in the presence of a Magistrate." 6 A. 509. The law is imperative in excluding what comes from an accused person in custody of a police if it incriminates him. 10 C. 1022; 4 A. 198 (204). This section as it stands makes no distinction between oral and written confession but embodies a substantive rule of law. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 534=32 Cr. L. J. 290. This section does not make admission dependent upon knowledge of accused as to identity of Magistrate. Ibid. A witness ought not to be allowed to describe a 'confession' made by the accused, if the fact was deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from the accused while in the custody of the police. S. C. 81 (Oudh). Section 26 of the Evidence Act applies only to the proof of a confession as against its maker. 1912 M. W. N. 549=12 M. L. T. 1=13 Cr. L. J. 352=36 M. 397=14 Ind. Cas. 896. But it may be admissible in favour of a co-accused. 2 B. 611. The general rule applicable to confessions made by prisoners whilst in the custody of a police officer is contained in section 26 and the proviso contained in section 27 refers to an exception to that rule. 12 M. 153; 11 B. H. C. R. 242. In a case in which three persons B, M and T were charged with the murder of one H the following statement made by T to a Police Superintendent on the day next to the day of the occurrence, while M was arrested, but neither of the other two accused was suspected of having had any hand in the murder, and was not then under arrest, was sought to be given in evidence for the prosecution. The statement was as follows: "The deceased H had called the previous day, was taken with cholera, was purged three times after which the dispute arose regarding the Bengalee bill; H had abused M's wife, on which M had given H a push in the throat when H fell backwards and became insensible; they tried to get a box and to put the corpse the box; as the body was too big, they had to tie the body to make it fit into the box; they then put the lid after placing a sheet on the body; they lowered the box with a gunny and then tied it up with a rope they left the box till evening; at 6 P. M. M got a cooly and had the box removed." The statement was held inadmissible. 15 C. 589. Incriminating admissions of an accused under admitted circumstances that he took the whole of the investigation staff of the police officers round the scene of offence and admitted before them his own guilt, are inadmissible in evidence under section 26. A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 350. A statement made in the presence of a sub-inspector and a constable who had the accused under arrest at the time and not recorded by Magistrate under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not admissible in evidence. A. I. R. 1929 All. 855. A confession or an incriminating statement made in the presence of a Magistrate by an accused person while in police custody who is not produced before the Magistrate with a view to record his confession can be proved by oral testimony of the Magistrate when it has not been reduced to writing. In the absence of any provision of law making it obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to record a confession it is not a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 534.

Police custody—meaning of. Substantial test of "custody of police officer" is to decide whether accused is or is not at liberty to move from particular place where he was when he made the confession. A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 149=26 S. L. R. 1=34 Cr. L. J. 1129; or see also A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 201=26 S. L. R. 302=34 Cr. L. J. 147. When an accused person is brought to a Magistrate for recording a confession, while the police officer, in whose custody he had been, remained outside ready to capture him if he ran away, the accused should be treated as still being under police custody. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 855. Where a woman charged with the murder of her husband was taken into the custody of the police, a friend of hers also accompanying her, and the policeman in charge of the woman left her with her friend for the purpose of procuring fresh horse any confession made to the friend accompanying her, while the policeman was away, would not be admissible in evidence, as the prisoner should be regarded to have been in the custody of the police, notwithstanding the temporary absence of the policeman. 20 B. 155; see also 3 M. H. C. 318. Two accused persons admitted the offence imputed to them to the persons who assisted the police in the investigation. The first accused accompanied the police and others to his house, where certain of the stolen property was discovered. The second accused was not taken there till after discovery. Held that the conviction of the second accused was not sustainable, as an admission of the accused made while in police custody, was inadmissible under s. 26. 12 P. R. 1900 Cr.=P. L. R. 1900 56 Cr. As soon as an accused or suspected person comes into the hands of a Police officer, he is, in the absence of clear and unmistakable evidence to the contrary, no longer at liberty and is therefore in custody within the meaning of ss. 26 and 27 of the Evidence Act. 25 Cr. L. J. 381=77 Ind. Cas. 429=A. I. R. 1924. Rang. 173. The meaning of the words "in the custody of a Police officer" in this section, cannot be extended by implication to cases beyond what is absolutely necessary, that is, where the person is really under arrest or in strict supervision and is merely allowed to go for a few moments to converse with the person to whom the confession is made. But where the accused is not arrested or under supervision, and is merely being invited to explain certain circumstances, it would be going further than the section warrants to exclude the statement that he makes, on the ground that he is deemed to be in Police custody. The accused while in Police custody, made a confession on being questioned by the Court Inspector who forthwith produced him before a Magistrate. The latter proceeded to record a confession in the presence of the Court Inspector and after recording it remanded the accused to Police custody. Held that it would be most unsafe to hold that the confession was made voluntarily and that, therefore, it could not be taken into consideration as against the accused. 76 Ind. Cas. 180=25 Cr. L. J. 116. When an accused person has been in custody of the Police and has made a confession, it is important that the Magistrate before recording such confession under section 164 of Criminal Procedure Code should ascertain how long the accused has been in custody. If there is no record of that fact, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge, before holding the confession relevant under section 24 of the Evidence Act (1 of 1872) to send for the Magistrate and satisfy himself on the point. 25 B. 543. The custody of the keeper of a jail in a Native State, who is not a Police officer, does not become that of a Police officer, merely because his subordinates, the warders of the jail, are members of the police force of that State. In the absence of any suggestion of a close custody inside the jail, such as may possibly occur when an accused person is watched and guarded by a Police officer investigating an offence, section 26 of the Indian Evidence Act (1 of 1872) does not exclude such a jailor from giving evidence of what the accused told him while in jail. 20 B. 795.

Confessions made in police custody, whether admissible. A confession made to a police officer but not in the presence of a Magistrate, is inadmissible. S. C. 98 Oudh; 26 M. L. J. 352=15 Cr. L. J. 533=24 Ind. Cas. 845. An admission of the accused while in Police custody is inadmissible under this section. 12 P. R. 1900 Cr.=P. L. R. 1900, 56 Cr.; 19 B. 563; 3 M. L. T. 270; 3 M. L. T. 333=7 Cr. L. J. 398; 3 M. L. T. 263. But a former confession which was made by the accused when not in Police custody is admissible in evidence. 8 O. C. 365=2 Cr. L. J. 811; see also 9 Pat. L. T. 449=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 473. Confession made by an accused not to a Magistrate but to the Superintendent of Post Offices, at his house, where he was taken temporarily by the police and was again removed back to police lock-up is inadmissible in evidence. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 282=10 L. L. J. 174=108 Ind. Cas. 398. Statements of accused while in custody of the Police officer, and of his having pointed out the places where he committed the offence are not admissible as being of an incriminating nature. A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 320=48 C. L. J. 524=92 Ind. Cas. 439. While accused was in the lock-up and under trial, he was sent by the Magistrate to a dispensary in order to be treated for a malady which involved an examination of the patient in private. Two police men took the accused from the lock-up to the dispensary. At the dispensary the police men waited outside on the verandah while the accused was inside undergoing examination at the hands of the doctor, and during the few minutes that he was with the latter he made a confession. Held, that the confession was inadmissible in evidence under section 26 of the Evidence Act, in as much as the accused remained in the custody of the police men while he was undergoing the examination. 42 Ind. Cas. 597=19 Bom. L. R. 683=42 B. I.=18 Cr. L. J. 981. Where the accused has made a statement to a Sub-Magistrate confessing his guilt and there was no irregularity in the manner of taking the confession, the mere fact that the police man in the charge of a sub-jail who was not one of the investigating police was also present at the time of the interview does not make the confession inadmissible. 1931 M. W. N. 723. So also a statement made by the accused at the dock before the Magistrate, if it amounts to a clear confession is certainly admissible in evidence against the accused, and its value is not discounted by the fact that the accused was at that time in the custody of the police. 1930 M. W. N. 1249. Where a person suspected of having committed a murder made a confession to the Zaildar, in consequence of the latter dropping a remark to the effect that his own brother had committed a murder but had got off in making a clean breast of the matter. Held that in as much as the police were in the vicinity at the time of the confession, and the accused though not handcuffed, was in police detention as a suspect, he was to all intents and purposes in police custody and the confession could not be proved unless made to a Magistrate. 32 P. W. R. 1916 Cr.=153 P. L. R. 1916=26 P. R. 1916. Incriminating statements made by accused persons while in police custody, in answer to questions put by a Police officer in the presence of a headman, are excluded from evidence under ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. 18 Cr. L. J. 106=37 Ind. Cas. 314=10 Bur. L. T. 270; see also 52 Ind. Cas. 601=21 Bom. L. R. 724. Where the accused while in custody of the police, confessed to have committed theft and also stated that the stolen property would be found in a heap of rubbish close to his house and after making the statement he took out the property from the heap in the presence of two police constables. Held that the statement as regards the commission of theft was not admissible in evidence, but the statement that stolen property would be found in the heap of rubbish was admissible. 24 Ind. Cas. 845=24 M. L. J. 352=15 Cr. L. J. 533.

Where an accused person promised, while in police custody to restore the stolen property, held, that the promise was an incriminating statement suggesting the inference that the accused participated in the commission of the offence, and 'therefore' a confession irrelevant under ss. 25 and 26, Evidence Act. 20 P. R. 1905=51 P. L. R. 1905=2 Cr. L. J. 230.

A statement made by an accused person, while in the custody of the police 'if it is an admission of a criminal circumstance, is not admissible in evidence'. 19 B. 363; 14 B. 260 F. B.

Confession made in the presence of a Magistrate. A confession to a Magistrate while in Police custody is not inadmissible. 9 Ind. Cas. 806=27 Cr. L. J. 134=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 557; 24 W. R. A confession made by an accused person before the Administrator in Portuguese territory, who is not a Magistrate is excluded by s. 26 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is immaterial that the police officer in whose presence the confession was made was not himself the person in charge of investigation of the case. 26 Bom. L. R. 706=1924 Bom. 480.

Police officer, meaning of. The word Police-officer in this section means "police-officer" in Native States. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 855=Cr. Reg. 22 of 1896; 49 B. 642; 22 B. 235; 12 A. 595; 69 Ind. Cas. 257. It is doubtful whether a Chaukidar is a Police officer under this section. 9 C. W. N. 474=2 Cr. L. J. 255; but see A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 19; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 1921. The words "police officers" in this section are used in the same sense in which they occur in section 25, and there is no reason for importing into this section the notion that the police officer there described in general terms must be restricted to investigating "police officers". 42 Ind. Cas. 597 = 19 Bom. L. R. 683 = 42 B. 1 = 18 Cr. L. J. 981. A Deputy Commissioner of Police of Calcutta is a police officer. 1 C. 215. A village Magistrate in the Presidency of Madras is not a police-officer. 7 M. 787; 49 B. 492 = 89 Ind. Cas. 1096; 69 Ind. Cas. 257; 2 P. R. 1909 = 7 P. W. R. 1909; 49 B. 642. A police officer in a French Territory is a police officer. R v. Viraraghava, 11 M. L. T. 407. A police patel is a police officer. 3 B. 12.

Magistrate.—The word "Magistrate" in this section includes Magistrate in Native States. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 855; 22 B. 235; 12 A. 595; 69 Ind. Cas. 257; 17 B. 485; A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 103; A Magistrate though on leave and not in the district in which he has been exercising jurisdiction is a Magistrate within the meaning of this section. 8 P. W. R. 1914 Cr. = 38 P. L. R. 1914 = 15 Cr. L. J. 6 = 22 Ind. Cas. 150; see also 7 B. H. C. R. C. C. 56. 'Judged' Instruction of the French Government is a Magistrate and so statements made in his immediate presence are admissible in evidence. The term Magistrate is not restricted to the Magistrate exercising jurisdiction under the Criminal Procedure Code. A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 487. But a Portuguese Administrator is not a Magistrate. 87 Ind. Cas. 20 = 26 Bom. L. R. 706. In the Punjab Honorary Magistrate exercise their powers under Cr. Pro. Code and an confession made to such a person is trial at by s. 26. A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 417 = 1934 Cr. C. 643.

Explanation—Previous to the enactment of this explanation by Act III of 1891, it was held that a village Munsiff falls within the purview of this section and as such he was a Magistrate. 2 M. 5; see also 10 M. 295.

27. Provided that, when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police-officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved.

Principle.—Sections 25 and 26 exclude confession to a police-officer under any circumstances, or to any one else, while the person making it is in a position to be influenced by a police officer. 1 C. L. R. 21. The broad ground for not admitting confessions made to a police officer is to avoid the danger of admitting false confessions, but the necessity for the exclusion disappears in a case provided for by s. 27, when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given. Per Oldfield J. in R. v. Babu Lal, 6 A. 509 (F. B.) This section was intended not to let in confession generally, but only such particular part of it as set the person no whom it was made in motion, and led to his ascertaining the fact or facts of which he gives evidence. Per Straight C. J. in Queen Empress v. Babu Lal 6 A. 509 (F. B.) at p. 546. Certain statements, made under certain circumstances, are rendered inadmissible, because the Legislature has, in such cases, considered them unworthy of credit; but the taint is removed by the finding upon search, of articles connected with the crime or other facts. 5 Mad. L. Jour. Article at p. 80. "The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other articles were to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequences of any inducement. It is this guarantee afforded by the discovery of the property for the correctness of the accused's statement, which is the ground for the admission of the exception to the general rule. The fact discovered shows that so much of the confession as immediately relates to it is true." 6 A. 509 (513, 517).

Scope of the section—Section 27 is a proviso to set only to section 26 but also to section 25; and therefore so much of the information given by the accused to the police officer, whether amounting to a confession or not, as related distinctly to the fact thereby discovered might be proved. 6 A. 509 (F. B.) by majority (Mahmood J. dissenting); see also 19 W. R. 51; 11 B. H. C. R. 242; 3 B. 12; 4 A. 198; 11 C. 635; 10 B. 595; 14 B. 260; 16 A. L. J. 478; 22 C. W. N. 213; 34 C. W. N. 106; 36 C. W. N. 213 (223, 224) = 45 C. 457 = 44 Ind. Cas. 321; 2 L. B. R. 168; 31 A. 392. The test of admissibility under s. 27 of the Evidence Act of information received from an accused person in the custody of a police officer, whether amounting to a confession or not, is :—"was the fact discovered by reason of the information and how much of the information was the immediate cause of the fact discovered, and as such a relevant fact?" 12 M. 153. Under s. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act not every statement made by a person accused of any offence which in custody of a police officer, connected with the production or finding of property is admissible. Those statements only which lead immediately to the discovery of property and, in so far as they do lead to such discovery are properly admissible. 11 B. H. C. R. 242 ; 36 C. W. N. 373 (375) ; 44 P. Statement by person not accused nor in police custody is not admissible under s. 27. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 278=32 Cr. L. J. 365 ; but see A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 150=152 Ind. Cas. 206=1934 Cr. C. 330. Section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to the statements of persons examined as witnesses by the police in the course of an investigation and not to the statement of an accused person. 35 P. L. R. 738=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 695=1934 Cr. C. 1009.

Any fact.—The fact discovered by a statement must be a material thing and not a state of mind induced in another person by that statement. 16 C. P. L. R. 122 ; A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F. B.) ; 6 A. 509 ; 11 C. 635 ; but see A. I. R. 1935 mad. 528 (F. B.). The words "any fact" are qualified by the word "discovered". 11 B. H. C. R. 242.

Discovered.—The word "discovery" is in ordinary prevalence of two meanings, firstly purely mental act of learning something which was not known before to a person, and secondly the physical act of binding upon search something, the existence or the exact locality of which was unknown till then. It is in the latter, and not in the former sense that the word is employed in s. 27 of the Evidence Act, and this will be made evident upon considering the principle underlying the section. 5 Mad. L. J. pp. 80, 81 ; see also 11 B. H. C. R. 242 ; 3B. 12 ; 14B. 260 ; A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 350 ; 11 C. 635 ; 11 P. R. 1900 Cr ; A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338. But this section applies when the discovery is made by police officer even when the facts are already known to the person other than the police officers. 49C. 167=25 C. W. N. 788.

Information whether includes mere statement.—"Throughout all the authorities dealing with section 27 the word statement is used interchangeably with the word information. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344 ; but see A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

In consequence of information.—"Whatever be the nature of the fact discovered, that fact must in all cases, be itself relevant to the case, and the connection between it and statement made must have been such that the statement constituted the information through which the discovery was made, in order to render the statement admissible". 11 B. H. C. R. 242 ; see also 14 B. 260 ; 10 B. 595 ; 4 A. 198 ; 6 A. 509 (546) ; 19 W. R. 51 ; 25 C. 413 ; 105 Ind. Cas. 683=28 Cr. L. J. 791 ; 1923 Lah. 434.

From a person.—When a fact is discovered in consequence of information received from one of several persons charged with an offence, and when others give like information, the fact should not be treated as discovered from the information of all. 24 W. R. Cr. 36; see also 6 A. 509 (549, 550); 50 P. R. 1915=7 Cr. L. J. 12; A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 665; 101 Ind. Cas. 488=28 P. L. R. 187=28 Cr. L. J. 456; A. I. R. 1931 Sind. 154; A. I. N. 173; 36 Ind. Cas. 474; 9 Ind. Cas. 232.

Police custody.—The accused must be in police custody. 6 A. 509 (513). The person must be an accused and must be in police custody. 5 M. L. J. Article p. 128; see also A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 401=6 Pat. L. T. 537=29 Cr. L. J. 790; 35 Ind. Cas. 962. As soon as an accused person comes into the hands of a police officer, he is in the absence of clear and unmistakable evidence to the contrary, no longer at liberty and is therefore in custody within the meaning of ss. 26 and 27. 25 Cr. L. J. 381=77 Ind. Cas. 429. Custody does not necessarily mean detention. Submission to custody by word, or action under s. 46 (1) Cr. Pro. Code amounts to police custody. 32 P. L. R. 347=131 Ind. Cas. 93=32 Cr. L. J. 650=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 278; see also A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 149 (F. B.)=1933 Cr. C. 404=34 Cr. L. J. 349=14 P. L. T. 82. It also includes surveillance. 139 Ind. Cas. 429=33 P. L. So much of the information as relates distinctly to facts thereby discovered.—In 34 C. W. N. 106 (111) Lort Williams J said: "Relates to" means ordinarily 'is connected with' or has reference to while 'distinctly' means 'clearly' or 'definitely' or 'positively' or 'undeniably' or 'undoubtedly'." So according to this view, under this section is admitted not only so much of the information as leads directly and immediately to the discovery of the fact, but also the portion of the information which leads immediately by way of explanation. 19 W. R. Cr. 51. The other view construes the words "as relates distinctly to" to mean "as leads directly and immediately to" or "is the proximate cause of." 5 M. L. J. Art. pp. 129, 130; see also 11 B. H. C. 42; 3 B. 12; 6 A. 509; 4 A. 198; 11 C. 635; 12 M. 153; 14 B. 260; A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F. B.); 29 Ind. Cas. 817=10 Cr. L. J. 545; 28 P. R. 1894; 44 Ind. Cas. 967=52 P. L. R. 1918; A. I. Confession made after removal of impression caused by inducement, threat or promise, relevant.

28. If such a confession as is referred to in section 24 is made after the impression caused by any such inducement threat or promise has, in the opinion of the Court, been fully removed, it is relevant.

Scope.—A confession is deemed to be voluntary if (in the opinion of the Judge) it is shown to have been made after the complete removal of the impression produced by any inducement, threat or promise which would otherwise render it involuntary. Step Dig. Art. 22; see also 2 L. B. R. 168; 74 Ind. Cas. 264=50 C. 127; 5 N. W. P. 86; 9 B. H. C. R. 358; A. I. R. 1933 All. 31=1932 A. L. J. 1125=1933 Cr. C. 42=55 A. 91=34 Cr. L. J. 489.

29. If such a confession is otherwise relevant, it does not become irrelevant merely because it was made under a promise of secrecy, or in consequence of a deception practised on the accused person for the purpose of obtaining it, or when he was drunk, or because it was made in answer to questions which he need not have answered, whatever may have been the form of those questions, or because he was not warned that he was not bound to make such confession, and that evidence of it might be given against him.

Scope.—"A confession shall not be inadmissible in evidence merely because it has been obtained by deception. Even when the prisoner has made it only on receiving a preliminary oath of secrecy from the person trusted, such person will be competent and compellable to reveal it (R. v. Shaw 6 C. & P. 372); and a confession made by a prisoner while drunk has been received. R. v. Spilsbury 7 C. and P. 187"—Powell, 111. Confession made in consequence of deception is not to be excluded. 20 W. R. 33. Confession otherwise admissible does not become inadmissible because accused was not warned. 33 Cr. L. J. 542=1932 M. 30. When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession.

Explanation.—"Offence" as used in this section, includes the abetment of, or attempt to commit the offence.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B are jointly tried for the murder of C. It is proved that A said—"B and I murdered C." The Court may consider the effect of this confession as against B.

(b) A is on his trial for the murder of C. There is evidence to show that C was murdered by A and B, and that B, said—"A and I murdered C."

This statement may not be taken into consideration by the Court against A, as B, is not being jointly tried.

Legislative changes.—The explanation was inserted by Act III of 1891.

Principle. This section is entirely a new provision of the law. There was no such provision either in Act II of 1855, or in the Criminal Procedure Codes of 1861 and 1872. Before the passing of the Indian Evidence Act the confession of an accused person was only evidence against himself. (6 W. R. 84 Cr.) and it could not be taken to be corroborative evidence or any evidence at all, against any body other than himself. 8 W. R. 35 Cr. So the confession of one prisoner could not be used as corroborative evidence against another prisoner. 13 W. R. 14 Cr. "Until the passing of the Indian Evidence Act, such dangerous material as this could not be used as evidence against the accused person, and even by that Act, the legislature only bestowed a discretion upon the Court to take into consideration such confession as against such person as well as against the person who makes such confession." Per Phear J. in Queen v. Sadhu Mundal, 21 W. R. 69 Cr. (71). The old cases followed the English cases on the subject. Vide R. v. Fletcher, 4 C. & P. 250; Roscoe Cr. Ev. 55; R. v. Turner, 1 Moo. C. C. 347; R. v. Blake, (1844) 6 Q. B. 126; R. v. Appleby, 3 Stark. 33.

The principle underlying this section is thus stated by Phear J. in Queen v. Belat Ali, 19 W. R. 67: "It seems to me that it is this implication of himself by the confessing person which is intended by the Legislature to take the place as it were of the sanction of an oath, or rather which is supposed to serve as some guarantee for the truth of the accusation against the other." So "where a person admits guilt to the fullest extent, and exposes himself to the pains and penalties provided for his guilt, there is a guarantee for his truth, and the Legislature provides that his statement may be considered against his fellow prisoners charged with the same crime." Per West J. in Empress v. Daji Narsu, 6 B. 288 (291); see also A. I. R. 1930 All. 29=120 Ind. Cas. 257=31 Cr. L. J. 26. What was intended was that where a prisoner 'to use a popular phrase, 'makes a clean breast of it' and unreservedly confesses his own guilt and at the same time implicates another who is jointly tried for the same offence, his confession may be taken into consideration against such other as well as against himself, because the admission of his own guilt operates as a sort of sanction, which to some extent takes the place of the sanction of an oath, and so affords some guarantee that the whole statement is a true one." Per Straight J. in Queen-Empress v. Jagrup, 7 A. 646, 648. "The object sought by the rule of law" said West J. in Queen-Empress v. Nur Mahomed, 8 B. 223, "is a safe-guard for sincerity and for information." This principle, it must be observed, is sound in theory rather than in practice. In the first place the confession of a crime is not an absolute guarantee of its truth as to the person making it, for it may have been falsely made from a sense of hopelessness of contending against the array of circumstantial evidence against him. But from being a guarantee of the truth of the confession as against the confessing party, to its operating similarly as regards another person, is a wide step. It does not follow necessarily that because a man has truly implicated himself, therefore his implication of another is also true. If his self-implication was actuated by remorse or a sense of justice, there would be ground for believing the whole of his confession, even as against another, but very few confessions have that character, and therefore in most confessions the sanction of an oath is really wanting; nor its trustworthiness is guaranteed by confrontation or cross-examination. 5 Mad L. J. (journal) p. 220.

Scope of the section.—"The provision is flatly in contradiction to the Law of England where Judges always take the greatest pains to prevent the statements of a prisoner affecting the case of a fellow prisoner; and I do not think that Judges in India have looked with much favour on the section". Morkley Ev. p. 28; see also 19 W. R. 57 Cr.; 21 W. R. Cr. 69; 14 Ind. Jur. N. S. 19; 21 W. B. 71. This section should be construed with great strictness 19 W. R. 57 (64); 54 M. 788=61 M. L. J. 358=A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 820; 1929 M. W. N. 698; 14 L. W. 474. Section 30 relates to confessions made by accused persons who are being jointly tried for the same offence. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 9; 22 C. 51; 21 W. R. Cr. 65; 25 Cr. L. J. 13=75 Ind. Cas. 701; 29 P. R. 1901 Cr.=P. L. R. 1900 p. 32. This section does not refer to statements made at the trial but the statements made before and proved at the trial. A. I. R. 1928 All. 322=45 A. 323; 4 C. 483=3 C. L. R. 270; but see 38 M. 302=22 Ind. Cas. 157=15 Cr. L. J. 13. A statement by one accused can only be used against a co-accused if the provisions of this section are applicable. 20 A. L. J. 178=65 Ind. Cas. 849=A. I. R. 1922 All. 24. Evidence of accomplice may be corroborated by confession of co-accused as against other accused where truth of confession is guaranteed. A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 355=1933 Cr. C. 976=10 O. W. N. 688.

Tried jointly.—The words "are being tried jointly" which occur in the section refer to the initiation of the proceedings before the particular judicial officer who deals with the case under Chapter XXII of the Cr. Pro. Code. L. B. R. (1893-1900) 643; see also 21 W. R. Cr. 65; 25 Cr. L. J. 13=75 Ind. Cas. 701; 22 C. 51; 37 A. 347; 3 P. R. 1879 Cr.; 13 P. R. 1878 Cr.; 5 B. 63; 7 M. 102; 14 Ind. Jus. 125; 17 A. 524; 19 B. 195.

Same offence.—The expression "same offence" in this section means the identical offence and does not mean even offence of the same kind. The legislature did not intend the section to cover different offences in the same transaction by different persons. The illustration to s. 30 makes the meaning of the section quite clear. A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 14=32 C. W. N. 1004; see also 9 O. & A. L. R. 836; 14 L. W. 74; A. W. N. 1881, 164; 32 P. R. 1882 Cr.; Rat Un. Cr. C. 450; 20 Ind. Cas. 136=14 Cr. L. J. 376; A. W. N. 1899, 63; 9 P. R. 1886 Cr.; 8 P. R. 1874; 7 M. 579; 5 B. 63=5 Ind. Cas. 425.

Confession.—The word "confession" as used in the Act, must not be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission, which falls short of being an admission of guilt. 11 Bom. L. 633=3 Ind. Cas. 742. A confession within the meaning of this section is a full and unqualified admission of the guilt of the person making it and of a character to justify his conviction upon it. A. W. N. 1881, 20; A. W. N. 1881, 99; see also 2 A. 444; 6 B. 288; 19 W. R. 16; 19 W. R. 67; 10 B. H. C. R. 497; 21 W. R. 48; 21 W. R. 53; 23 W. R. 24; 25 W. R. 8; 25 W. R. 43; 6 C. 279; 7 A. 646; 20 P. The confession of a co-accused cannot be taken into consideration where he does not substantially implicate himself to the same extent as the other accused, but on the contrary ties as far as he can to minimise the part he took. 8 Ind. Cas. 719=9 M. L. T. 318=1910 M. W. N. 754; see also 25 W. R. Cr. 8; 14 Cr. L. J. 586=21 Ind. Cas. 378; 94 Ind. Cas. 258=27 Cr. L. J. 594=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 440; 2 A. L. J. 53=2

Made.—The word “proved” in s. 30 must refer to a confession made beforehand : 4 C. 483.

Affecting himself and some other.—To render the confession of one person jointly tried with another, admissible in evidence against the latter, it must appear that the confession implicates the confessing person substantially to the same extent as it implicates the person, against whom it is to be used, in the commission of the offence for which the prisoners are being jointly tried. 10 B. Proved.—This section requires that a confession made by one prisoner which is to be used for the purpose of affecting another must be proved. 24 W. R. 42 ; see also 6 B. 124 ; 7 C. 65 ; 54 M. 788=61 M. L. J. 358=A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 820 ; 45 A. 323. “Proved” means proved before pursuation case ends. A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 820=61 M. L. May take into consideration.—The court has discretion to exclude a confession by an accused altogether from consideration against the co-accused if it is so disposed. A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 242 (F. Confession of a co-accused must be corroborated.—Although a confession of one co-accused may be taken into consideration against another under the provisions of this section, it would be unsafe, if not illegal, to rely on it without further corroboration in material particulars. Retracted confession and co-accused.—A retracted confession is admissible but should have no weight to it unless either corroborated in material particulars or unless the tribunal comes to the conclusion that the statement as a whole is a truthful statement. Confession of co-accused and evidence of an accomplice.—A confession of an accused person implicating a co-accused under section 30, cannot be considered as the same thing as "testimony of an accomplice" which is referred to in section 133 of the Act. Section 133 contemplates that the accomplice shall be examined as a witness. 109 Ind. Cas. 801=29 Cr. L. J. 609=A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 213 ; 9 C. P. L. R. 37 Cr. ; 9 C. P. L. R. 35 Cr. ; 21 Ind. 31. Admissions are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted, but they may operate as estoppels under the provisions hereinafter contained.

Admissions not conclusive proof, but may estop.

Scope.—An admission made before a Registrar or contained in a deed of sale that the consideration has been received by the vendor, raises only a rebuttable presumption, the weight of which varies with the circumstances of each case. A. W. N. 1899, 142. Admission must be taken as a whole. 60 Ind. Cas. 483. Under this section admissions are not conclusive evidence of the matters admitted. 8 Pat. 776=10 Pat. L. T. 191.

STATEMENTS BY PERSONS WHO CANNOT BE CALLED AS WITNESSES.

32. Statements, written or verbal, or relevant facts made by a person

Cases in which statement of relevant fact by person who is dead or cannot be found, etc., is relevant.

who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance can not be procured without an amount of delay or expense which under the circumstances of the case appears to the Court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in the following cases :—

(1) When the statement is made by a person as to the cause of his death, or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death, in cases in which the cause of that person's death comes into question.

When it relates to cause of death.

Such statements are relevant whether the person who made them was or was not, at the time when they were made, under expectation of death, and whatever may be the nature of the proceeding in which the cause of his death comes into question.

(2) When the statement was made by such person in the ordinary course of business, and in particular when it consists of any entry or memorandum made by him in books kept in the ordinary course of business, or in the discharge of professional duty ; or of an acknowledgement written or signed by him of the receipt of money, goods, securities or property of any kind ; or of a document used in commerce written or signed by him ; or of the date of a letter or other document usually dated, written or signed by him.

(3) When the statement is against the pecuniary or proprietary interest or against interest of maker ; of the person making it, or when if true, it would expose him or would have exposed him to a criminal prosecution or to a suit for damages.

(4) When the statement gives the opinion of any such person as to the existence of any public right or custom or matter of public or general interest, of the existence of which, if it existed, he would have been likely to be aware, and when such statement was made before any controversy as to such right, custom or matter has arisen.

(5) When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship * [by blood, marriage or adoption] between persons or relates to existence of as to whose relationship* [by blood, marriage or adoption] the person making the statement had special means of knowledge, and when the statement was made before the question in dispute was raised.

(6) When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship * [by blood, marriage or adoption] between persons or is made in will or deed deceased and is made in any will or deed relating to family affairs ; relating to the affairs of the family to which any such deceased person belonged, or in any family pedigree, or upon any tombstone, family portrait or other thing on which such statements are usually made, and when such statement was made before the question in dispute was raised.

or in document relating to transaction mentioned in section 13, clause (a) or is made by several persons and expresses feelings relevant to matter in question.

(7) When the statement is contained in any deed, will or other document which relates to any such transaction as is mentioned in section 13, clause (a)

(8) When the statement was made by a number of persons, and expressed feelings or impressions on their part relevant to the matter in question.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is whether A was murdered by B ; or A dies of injuries received in a transaction in the course of which she was ravished. The question is whether she was ravished by B ; or The question is, whether A was killed by B under such circumstances that a suit would lie against B by A's widow. Statements made by A as to the cause of his or her death, referring respectively to the murder, the rape and the actionable wrong under consideration, are relevant facts.

(b) The question is as to the date of A's birth.

An entry in the diary of a deceased surgeon, regularly kept in the course of business, stating that on a given day, he attended A's mother and delivered her of a son is a relevant fact.

(c) The question is, whether A was in Calcutta on a given day.

* These words in s. 32, cls. (5) and (6), were inserted by the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872).

A statement in the diary of a deceased solicitor, regularly kept in the course of business, that on a given day, the solicitor attended A at a place mentioned in Calcutta, for the purpose of conferring with him upon specified business, is a relevant fact.

(d) The question is, whether a ship sailed from Bombay harbour on a given day.

A letter written by a deceased member of a merchant's firm by which she was chartered to their correspondents in London to whom the cargo was consigned, stating that the ship sailed on a given day from Bombay harbour is a relevant fact.

(e) The question is, whether rent was paid to A for certain land.

A letter from A's deceased agent to A saying that he had received the rent on A's account and held it at A's orders, is a relevant fact.

(f) The question is, whether A and B were legally married.

The statement of a deceased clergyman that he married them under such circumstances that the celebration would be a crime, is relevant.

(g) The question is, whether A, a person who cannot be found, wrote a letter on a certain day. The fact that a letter written by him is dated on that day is relevant.

(h) The question is, what was the cause of the wreck of a ship.

A protest made by the Captain, whose attendance cannot be procured, is a relevant fact.

(i) The question is whether a given road is a public way.

A statement by A, a deceased headman of the village, that the road was public, is a relevant fact.

(j) The question is, what was the price of grain on a certain day in a particular market. A statement of the price, made by a deceased banya in the ordinary course of his business, is a relevant fact.

(k) The question is, whether A, who is dead, was the father of B.

A statement by A that B was his son, is a relevant fact.

(l) The question is, what was the date of the birth of A.

A letter from A's deceased father to a friend, announcing the birth of A on a given day, is a relevant fact.

(m) The question is, whether, and when, A and B were married.

An entry in a memorandum-book by C, the deceased father of B, of his daughter's marriage with A on a given date, is a relevant fact.

(n) A sues B for a libel expressed in a painted caricature exposed in a shop window. The question is as to the similarity of the caricature and its libellous character. The remarks of a crowd of spectators on these points may be proved.

Scope.—This section is also an exception to the hearsay evidence. Secondary evidence of any oral statement is called hearsay. The repetition by a witness of that which he was told by some one else who is called as a witness is hearsay, and is therefore, as a general rule inadmissible. The reasons for this rule are obvious. We can generally trust a witness who states something which he himself has either seen or heard; but when he tells us something which he has heard from another person, his statement is obviously less reliable and satisfactory. A multitude of probable contingencies diminish its value. The witness may have misunderstood or imperfectly remembered, or even may be wilfully misrepresenting the words of the third person; or the latter may have spoken hastily, inaccurately or even falsely. Moreover the person who is really responsible for the statement did not make it on oath; he was not cross-examined upon it, and the Court had no opportunity of observing his demeanour when he made it. It is a fundamental principle of our law that evidence has no claim to credibility, unless it be given on oath, or what is equivalent to an oath, and unless the party to be affected by it has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness. (Powell Ev. 305). There are various exceptions to this general rule and they are based on good reasons. The exceptions as stated in this section are as follow:—Statements written or verbal, of relevant facts when made by a person who is (a) dead or (b) who cannot be found, or (c) who has become incapable of giving evidence or (d) whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which under the circumstances of the case appears to the Court unreasonable are admissible; (1) when it relates to the cause of his death, or (2) when it is made in course of business; or (3) when it is made against the interest of the maker; or (4) when it gives opinion as to public right or custom, or matters of general interest; or (5) when it relates to existence of relationship; or (6) when it is made in will or deed relating to family affairs; or (7) when it is made in document relating to transaction mentioned in section 13, clause (a) ; or (8) when it is made by several persons and expresses feelings relevant to the matter in question. Dying declaration is relevant under s. 32 even though maker does not expect to die. 35 Bom L. R. 1021=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 479.

Cause of death.—In England such declarations are admissible only in trials for murder or man-slaughter made under a sense of impending death. The grounds of admissions there are (1) death (2) necessity and (2) the sense of impending death which creates a sanction equal to obligations of an oath. But this clause states that the accused need not be in expectation of death. 6 C. L. R. 278. Moreover according to this clause such a statement is admissible irrespective of the nature of the proceedings. The admission of dying declarations is not limited to cases in which the death of the injured party is the sole object of inquiry. It is admissible in all criminal cases. 3 N. W. P. 212 : 13 P. Such declarations need not be made in the presence of the accused. 2 Weir 750. Oral evidence of such declarations is admissible. 2 Weir 755 ; 2 Weir 753 ; 6 C. W. N. 621. Form of dying declarations.—Where a dying declaration is made by signs in response to questions put, it is admissible in evidence. 2 P. R. 1886 Cr. ; 7 A. 385 (F. B.) ; 1 Pat. 401=3 Pat. L. Although a dying declaration if properly recorded is a valuable piece of evidence, but if while the statement is being recorded a third person is present and prompts the deceased to give out names of certain accused it would be exceedingly unsafe to attach any weight to such a dying statement. 8 L. Condition of receiving dying declaration.—The death of the declarant is the condition precedent of receiving dying declaration in evidence. 25 B. 45 ; 10 C. 1047 ; 4 Bom. L. R. 434.

First information report.—The first information report is admissible under this section as a dying declaration where it is the statement of a person who is since dead relating to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in death. Nature of the proceeding in which dying declaration is admissible.—A dying declaration as to the cause of death is admissible even when the charge is not one of homicide. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 162=6 Pat. 747=106 Ind. Cas. 698 ; see also 6 W. R. Cr. 75.

Dying declaration made by an accomplice.—The statement of an accomplice incriminating himself and others just prior to his being hanged, is not admissible under this clause but is admissible under clause (3). 31 Cr. Proof of dying declaration.—A dying declaration may be either verbal or written. A verbal dying declaration recorded by a Magistrate cannot be accepted in evidence, when it has not been proved by taking the statement of the Magistrate. 17 P. R. 1911 Cr.=14 Cr. L. J. 131 ; 11 B. H. C. 247 ; 7 C. P. L. R. Cr. 14 ; 7 Lah. 91=92 Ind. Cas. 167=27 Cr. L. J. 215 ; 49 C. 358. The statement may be proved by a person who heard it. 52 C. 446=88 Ind. Cas. 860. Dying declaration can be proved by examining persons recording it or persons who heard it being made. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 218=50 C. L. J. 584 ; 6 C. W. N. 921 ; 5 O. C. 246.

Value of dying declaration.—The weight to be attached depends not upon the expectation of death which is a guarantee of its truth, but upon the circumstances and surroundings under which it was made. 29 C. W. N. 738=52 C. 987=88 Ind. Cas. 100=42 C. L. J. 247. So statements made by a dying man relating to the cause of his death are admissible in evidence against person causing his death, but too much reliance cannot be placed upon the details of such statements as they are hearsay. 76 Ind. But much weight must be given to the dying declaration recorded by a Magistrate where it is supported by the concerted evidence led on behalf of the prosecution. 10 Lah. L. J. 281; see also 4 P. W. R. 1909 Cr.=9 Cr. L. J. 156=1 Ind. Cas. 100. It is not safe to base a conviction on the dying declaration of the deceased, when the other evidence in the case is tainted and has to be rejected. A. I. Must be taken as a whole.—As regards a dying declaration to accept a portion and reject the rest is entirely out of the question; there must be absolute guarantee of the accuracy of the record and the truth of the entire statement before it can be acted upon. 29 C. W. N. 738=42 C. L. J. 247=88 Ind. Cas. 100=26 Cr. L. J. 1256=52 C. 987. It must be taken as a whole and a portion of it cannot be allowed. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 211=50 C. L. J. 584; 22 M. L. J. 435.

Dying declaration—Cases. One of the dacoits engaged in a dacoity was captured in a seriously wounded state and before his death he made a dying declaration as to the circumstances of the dacoity before the Magistrate and also so as to the circumstances causing his death. Held, that the statement of the declarant was admissible to prove his own participation in the dacoity but was not admissible against the other accused. L. R. 5 A. 201 Cr. Where the declaration of a person wounded by the accused in committing dacoity was made on the 13th August 1899, and he died on the 20th of that month, and there was no other evidence to prove that the death was caused or accelerated by the wounds, received at the dacoity, or that it was the transaction which resulted in his death, the High Court held, that his declaration ought not to have been admitted in evidence. 25 B. 45=2 Bom. L. R. 331. In a case of murder the statement made by the deceased before his neighbours and in the presence of a head constable was admitted as evidence under s. 32 (1) of Act I of 1872, that section providing that such statement is relevant, whether the person who made the statement was or was not, at the time it was made, under expectation of death. 19 W. R. Cr. 44. Where the police recorded certain statements relating to the cause of the death, made by the deceased during the investigation of a criminal case, held, that they were admissible in evidence. 17 P. R. 1886 Cr. A declaration made by a person who was dying at the time he made it is a dying declaration in the legal sense of the term and is admissible under this section, though the person making it may have lingered for six days afterwards and then died. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 64=10 L. L. J. 463. The statement of a deceased person was recorded in the absence of the accused. Subsequently in the presence of the accused, the statement was read over and the accused were allowed to cross-examine the dying person. Held, that the statement was not a dying deposition under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, and was not admissible under section 32 (1) unless it was proved by examining the Magistrate who recorded it or some one who heard it made. 14 Cr. L. J. 396=20 Ind. Cas. 220=6 Bur. L. T. 68. The statement of a deceased person that she was confined in the house of an accused, that H was keeping watch over her and that another accused had raped her on account of which she had become pregnant and that they were getting ready to give her medicine to miscarry and so to put an end to her life is admissible under s. 32 (1), as a statement made by a person as to the circumstances of a transaction which resulted in her death, in a case in which the cause of death comes into question. A. I. R. 1929 Sind. 250.

Course of business.—The grounds for reception of such evidence is the presumption of truth which arises from the mechanical and generally disinterested nature of entries made in the course of duty, and from their constant liability, if false, to be detected by the declarant's superiors (Phipson, Ev. 250). The phrase 'course of business' does not apply to any particular transaction of an exceptional kind, such as the execution of a deed of mortgage, but to business of professional employment in which the declarant was ordinarily or habitually engaged. The business referred to may be of a temporary character. 13 C. W. N. 71=1 Ind. Cas. 376. The law under this clause does not require corroboration as under s. 34. 16 C. L. J. 24.

Clause (3).—The reception of this evidence is based upon the presumption that what a man states against his interest is probably true. But the interest involved must be pecuniary or proprietary. Any statement by a person tending to show that he owes money, or has received money, owing to him, is considered to be against his interest. (Higham v. Ridgway, 10 East, 109; Cockle Cas. 196). In Sussex Peerage Case, 11 C and F. 108 it was laid down that where the statement was made under circumstances, which showed that the person making it would be liable to criminal prosecution, it was not sufficient to come under this clause. But the Indian Legislators departed from that view of the law and distinctly laid down that such statements are relevant. If any part of a statement by a deceased person is against his interest, the whole statement is admissible. (Taylor v. Witham, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 605). The declarations must also have been against such interest at the time they were made; it is not sufficient that they might possibly turn out to be so afterwards. (Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326. Massey v. Allen, 13 Ch. D. 558. Edwards v. Tollemache, 14 Q. B. D. 415)—Phipson 241. A statement by a deceased landlord that there was a tenant on the land, is a statement against the landlord's proprietary rights. 31 C. 965. See also, 23 B. 63; 32 C. 6; 11 Ind. Cas. 380; 8 Ind. Cas. 268; 35 C. 751; 30 I. A. 94=7 C. W. N. 465 (P. C.); 68 Ind. Cas. 314; 78 I. C. 1033; 78 Ind. Cas. 219; 53 Ind. Cas. 863; 63 Ind. Cas. 685.

Clause (4).—The ground of admission are :—(1) death. (2) necessity, ancient facts being generally incapable of direct proof; and (3) the guarantee of truth afforded by the public nature of the rights, which tends to preclude individual bias, and to render mis-statements difficult by exposing them to constant contradiction. (Phipson Ev. 257). Public rights are rights of highway, ferry, fishery in a tidal river etc. General rights are those affecting any considerable section of the community—e.g., questions of boundaries of a parish or manor. (Ibid). In proof of public or general rights or customs, or matters of public or general interest, statements made by a deceased person of competent knowledge as to the existence of such rights, etc., and as to the general reputation thereof in the neighbourhood, if made "ante litem motam," are admissible. (Weeks v. Parks, 1 M. & S. 679; Cockle Cas. 212). Such evidence is not admissible as to private rights. 25 B. 433. Public or general rights must be common to all persons interested, as to all the inhabitants of a particular manor. A right is not within this rule simply because it is enjoyed by many persons in their own individual capacities, such as a right of common enjoyed by several persons, in the same manner in their individual capacities on an aggregate of private rights. Evidence of reputation, or declarations, is admissible although no actual enjoyment of the right be proved. (19 L. J. Q. B. 388=15 Q. B. 791; Cockle Cas. 215.) But it is only to be received as showing a general reputation and not as evidence of particular facts. (R. v. Bliss 7 L. J. Q. B. 4; Mercer v. Dunne (1904) 2 Ch. 534). Persons whose statements are receivable in evidence as declarations must be shown to have been "competent declarants" that is, they must have been so situated as to the place in question, by residence, duty or other connection that it may be concluded they had both the means and the motive for giving a true account of the matter. (Newcastle v. Broxtowe, 4 B. and Ad. 273; Cockle Cas. 219). But this clause is not applicable to a case where the evidence is required to prove a fact in issue, and not merely a relevant fact. 15 B. 565. Where the question was whether certain property was dedicated to a wakf and certain documents which related to the neighbouring lands and which contained recitals as to the character of the suit property, were put in, held that they were admissible in evidence under this clause. 33 C. W. N. 439=119 Ind. Cas. 116.

Clause (5).—According to English law, the statements, verbal or written, and conduct of deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage with a family in question, if made "ante litem motam," are admissible to prove relationship, or family succession, or facts upon which such matters depend such as births, marriages and deaths (Vide Cockle Cas. 202; Berkley Peerage Case, 4 Campbell, 401). A controversy in a family, though not at that moment the subject of a law suit, is sufficient to exclude evidence of declarations as to pedigree made at the time of such controversy on the ground that they were not made "ante litem motam"

(Butler v. Mountgarrett, 7 H. L. Cas. 633 : Cockle Cas. 206). In a case where there is no question of relationship, no question of descent, no question of pedigree, none as to the position of any person in any family, such evidence is not admissible (Harries v. Guthrie, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 818. According to English law statements made by servants or intimate acquaintances, whatever their position or knowledge may be, are not admissible (Johnson v. Lanson 9 Moore. 183 : Cockle Cas. 209). But herein the Indian Legislators departed also from the English law and laid down that statement of persons having special means of knowledge would be relevant. So a statement as to the age of a member of a family made by another member is no doubt admissible after the latter's death under this clause. 25 M. 183. But special means of knowledge should be shown. 10 Ind. Cas. 199. The statement in a pedigree made by a deceased member of one branch of a family, regarding the descendants of another branch thereof, before any dispute arose as to the latter, is relevant and admissible in evidence. 32 C. 6. But this clause does not cover statements of facts made by interested parties in denial, in the course of litigation, of pedigrees set up by the opposite parties. 9 A. 467. The effect of the section is to make a statement made by a deceased person, relating to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption, admissible, to prove the facts contained in the statements on any issue. 24 C. 265=1 C. W. N. 270. A family priest's statement is also admissible. 4 C. L. R. 473. But a Muktear's statement is not admissible. 12 C. 219=12 I. A. 183 (P. C.) see also 20 C. 758 ; 13 C. W. N. 1 P. C. ; 20 C. 115 ; 24 A. 94 P. C.=29 I. A. 1 ; 8 Ind. Cas. 728 ; 27 I. A. 238 ; 66 Ind. Cas. 66 ; 9 O. L. J. 186 ; 11 O. L. J. 164 ; 22 A. L. J. 657 ; 10 O. & A. L. R. 1226 ; 10 L. W. 67.

Clause (6)—Horoscope to prove age is not admissible under this clause. 17 C. 849. The words 'family pedigree' do not necessarily include such a pedigree as is in the possession of a member of the family concerned, nor do they indicate that the actual possession of the record need be with the family concerned. In order that a "family pedigree" be admissible in evidence under this clause, it is not essential that all the writers of the pedigree should have special means of knowledge. 63 Ind. Cas. 968.

Clause (7)—A deed of mortgage containing an assertion of title as owner by the mortgagor is relevant under s. 13 as evidence of the title asserted. Where the mortgagor is dead, the recitals in the deed as to how he got the title are also evidence under this clause as statements made by a deceased person in a document relating to a transaction mentioned in s. 13—1921 M. W. N. 560.

Clause (8)—The meaning of this clause is that where a number of persons assemble together to give vent to a common statement expressing the feelings or impressions made in their minds at the time of making it, that statement may be repeated by the witness and is evidence. 23 W. R. 35 C. R.

33. Evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding, or before any person authorized by law to take it, is relevant for the purpose of proving, in a subsequent judicial proceeding, or in a later stage of the same judicial proceeding, the truth of the facts which it states, when the witness is dead or cannot be found, or is incapable of giving evidence, or is kept out of the way by the adverse party or if his presence cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which under the circumstances of case, the Court considers unreasonable ;

Provided—
that the proceeding was between the same parties or their representatives in interest ; that the adverse party in the first proceeding had the right and opportunity to cross-examine ;
that the questions in issue were substantially the same in the first as in the second proceeding.

Explanation.—A criminal trial or inquiry shall be deemed to be a proceeding between the prosecutor and the accused within the meaning of this section.

Scope.—It has long been settled as one of the exceptions to the general rule excluding hearsay that the testimony of a witness given in a former action or at a former stage of the same action is competent in a subsequent action or in a subsequent proceeding in the same action, where it is shown that the witness is dead or that a valid legal reason exists for his non-production, that the parties and questions in issue are substantially the same and that such former testimony can be substantially reproduced upon the second hearing, (Burr Jones J 336). It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule for the application of section 33 of the Evidence Act. Jati Mati v. Emperor, 33 C. W. N. 918.

Parties.—The rule is that such evidence is proper, not only when the point in issue is the same in a subsequent suit between the same parties, but also for or against persons standing in the relation of privies in blood, privies in state or privies in law. The testimony will not necessarily be rejected, although there were other parties to the record in the former proceedings, when the issues are substantially the same and the parties affected by the second suit had the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. But the parties must be substantially the same and it is for the party offering the testimony to establish this. (Burr Jones § 338). In two suits the parties must be the same or their representatives in interest. 12 C. 627, See. 7 C. 42 ; 8 A. 672 ; A. W. N. 1896, 182.

Form of proceedings.—If the parties and the issues are the same in each case, it is not necessary to the admission of the testimony that the form of the second proceeding should be the same as that of the first. Nor that the former trial should be a trial immediately preceding that in which the testimony is offered. The rule covers any former trial, where evidence was given by a party since deceased which it is subsequently desired to use. A testimony given in a preliminary examination on a criminal charge may be admitted at the trial. (Burr Jones § 339). Evidence in section 9 case is admissible in a subsequent suit. 23 C. 44. Depositions given before a counsel is admissible. 3 B. 334.

Criminal cases.—The application of this section in criminal cases, ought to be confined within the narrowest limits. 17 Bom. L. R. 570. See also 18 Bom. L. R. 284 ; 25 O. C. 142 ; 2 A. 696 ; L. B. R. (1872-1892), 134 ; 3 B. 334 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 347 ; A. W. N. 1898, 72 ; A. W. N. 1881, 138 ; 2 Weir, 755 ; 17 P. R. Cr. 1919 ; 42 A. 24 ; 12 P. L. R. 1919 ; 52 Ind. Cas. 385 ; 35 M. L. J. 657.

Cross Examination.—The ground upon which the exception stands is that, in an authorized action or proceeding, testimony being given under the solemnity of an oath, where the witness was or might have been cross-examined, the probabilities of the truth having been told are so great as to justify the resort to that testimony when the witness has died or become insane since the former trial. It is immaterial to the admission of the evidence whether the party actually cross-examined, or did not cross-examine, if he were bound so to do. All that is required is that he had an opportunity to cross examine the witness. (Burr Jones § 341). So where a plaintiff was examined in chief but died before cross-examination his deposition is not admissible. 20 M. L. J. 400. See also 23 W. R. 42. The words "opportunity to cross examine" include the method of cross-interrogatories. 19 B. 749. See 6 A. 224 ; 25 B. 168=2 Bom. L. R. 761 ; 71 C. W. N. 230.

Incapable of giving evidence.—These words denote incapacity of a permanent character, and not of a momentary or temporary character. 4 C. L. R. 504 ; contra 6 C. 774. See 22 W. R. 343 ; 2 A. L. J. 91 ; 7 C. 42=8 C. L. R. 273. A party's deposition is not admissible under this section. 14 B. L. R. App. 3. It is only in extreme cases of expense or delay that the personal attendance of a witness should be dispensed with. 2 A. 646. For meaning of "could not be found," vide A. W. N. 1905, 202. See 21 W. R. Cr. 56 ; 20 W. R. Cr. 69 ; 21 W. R. Cr. 12.

STATEMENTS MADE UNDER SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES.

34. Entries in books of account, regularly kept in the course of business, are relevant whenever they refer to a matter into which the Court has to inquire, but such statements shall not alone be sufficient evidence to charge any person with liability.

Illustration.

A sues B for Rs. 1,000 and shows entries in his account books showing B to be indebted to him to this amount. The entries are relevant, but are not sufficient, without other evidence to prove the debt.

Scope.—Entries to be admissible as evidence by way of corroboration of other testimony must be made in the regular course of business. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 344. Although this section makes an entry in a book of account relevant, such a book is not by itself relevant to disprove an alleged transaction by the absence of any entry concerning it. 10 C. 1024. It must be kept in regular course of business in order to be admitted under this section. 8 Ind. Cas. 81; A. W. N. 1881, 65; 2 O. C. 311; 63 P. R. 1897; 29 C. 334; 45 P. R. 1899; 25 B. 433; 52 Ind. Cas. 704. It is only the account books that are properly kept that are admissible in evidence as relevant. 51 A. 519=27 A. L. J. 115.

35 An entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact.

Scope.—This section only provides that “any entry in an official book, which is duly made by a public servant in the execution of his duty, is itself a relevant fact.” But it is no evidence for the purpose of proving the absence in them of any particular entry. 7 C. L. R. 356. The entries must be in a book, register or record and they must be made by public servants in the discharge of their official duties. 5 Ind. Cas. 827. See also 59 P. R. 1901; 18 C. 534; 6 C. L. R. 139; 15 M. 19; 17 C. 849; 23 C. 366; 25 C. 90; 8 B. 543; 35 M. 21; 9 C. 431; 9 C. 586; 2 S. L. R. 82; U. B. R. 1906, Ev. 3; 15 M. 378; 25 A. 90; 14 O. C. 68; 9 Ind. Cas. 963; 10 Pat. L. T. 399.

36. Statements of fact in issue or relevant facts, made in published maps or charts generally offered for public sale, or in maps or plans made under the authority of Government, as to matters usually represented or stated in such maps, charts or plans, are themselves relevant facts.

Scope.—Topographical Survey Map of 1869, in which the boundary lines between two villages is given is admissible under this section. 11 C. W. N. 220. Entries in thakbust survey is relevant under this section. 7 C. W. N. 849. Kistwari, maps are under this section, evidence between the parties quantum valet. 64 Ind. Cas. 326.

37. When the Court has to form an opinion as to the existence of any fact of a public nature, any statement of it, made in a recital contained in any Act of Parliament, or in any Act of the Governor General of India in Council, or of “any other legislative authority in British India constituted for the time being under the Indian Council Act, 1861, the Indian Councils Acts, 1861 and 1892 or the Indian Councils Acts, 1861 to 1909”* or in a notification of the Government appearing in the Gazette of India, or in the Gazette of any Local Government, or in any printed paper purporting to be the London Gazette or the Government Gazette of any colony or possession of the Queen, is a relevant fact.*

38. When the Court has to form an opinion as to a law of any country, any statement of such law contained in a book purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of such country and to contain any such law, and any report of a ruling of the Courts of such country contained in a book purporting to be a report of such rulings, is relevant.

Scope.—Unauthorised translation of the Code Napoleon is not a work to which reference can be made under this section. 26 C. 931=3 C. W. N. 614. But Ceylon Insolvency Ordinance can be looked into. 14 Ind. Cas. 560.

HOW MUCH OF A STATEMENT IS TO BE PROVED.

39. When any statement of which evidence is given forms part of a longer statement, or a conversation or part of an isolated document, or is contained in a document which forms part of a book, or of a connected series of letters or papers, evidence shall be given of so much and no more of the statement, conversation, document, book or series of letters or papers as the Court considers necessary in that particular case to the full understanding of the nature and effect of the statement, and of the circumstances under which it was made.

Principle.—If a part of the conversation or transaction has been given in direct testimony, the remainder, so far as it is relevant, may be called out by the cross-examination, as the inquiry and answer in such case may tend to impeach, rebut, explain or qualify the testimony already given. A party will not be permitted to glean out certain facts from his witness, which without explanation would give a false colouring to the matter about which he testifies, and then save his witness from the shifting process of cross-examination by which the real transaction could be shown Burr, Jones Ev. § 822). This section cannot be invoked for the purpose of letting in a confusion in respect of which the bar created by ss. 24, 25 and 26 has not been removed by s. 27. 10 Lah. 283=11 Lah. L. J. 159=115 Ind. Cas. 6.

JUDGMENT OF COURTS OF JUSTICE WHEN RELEVANT.

40. The existence of any judgment, order or decree which by law prevents any Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial, is a relevant fact when the question in whether such Court ought to take cognizance of such suit or to hold such trial.

Judgment.—Judgments are of two kinds—in Rem and in Personam. The former term seems never to have been clearly defined, but if it is commonly understood to apply to all judgments affecting the legal status of some subject-matter, person or thing; e.g. Admiralty judgments in cases of forfeiture or prize, Divorce Court decrees, grant of Probate and Administration, and adjudications in Bankruptcy. Such judgments are conclusive against all persons, whether parties or strangers. Judgments in personam are all ordinary judgments between persons not so affecting status. Such judgments bind only parties and privies as to the facts in issue. But all judgments are conclusive against all persons of their legal effect, as distinguished from the facts upon which they are based. (Cockle Cas. 44). All judgments whatever are conclusive proof as against all persons of the existence of that state of things which they actually effect when the existence of the state of things so effected is a fact in issue or is or is deemed to be relevant to the issue. (Stephen's Digest § 40.)

* The last paragraph added by s. 2. of the Indian Evidence Act, 1899 (5 of 1899) was repealed by the Schedule No. 11. of Act 10 of 1914.

Scope.—This section lays down that judgment, order or decree in a previous suit is a relevant fact, i. e. admissible in evidence if it operates as res judicata or prevents any Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial. According to the phraseology of English lawyers such judgments, are admissible when they operate as estoppel by record. A person who was a party to legal proceedings in which judgment was given or who claims under a person who was a party thereto, is estopped from denying the facts upon which such judgment was based, if such judgment be pleaded as estopped. But a judgment "in personam" does not estop persons who were neither parties nor privies thereto. Nor are parties or their privies estopped from denying matters which merely came collaterally into question in such legal proceedings, or which were incidentally cognizable, or which might be inferred by argument from the judgment. The Duchess of Kingston's Case, (20 How. St. Trial 355; Cockle Cas. 40). A former judgment between the same parties on the same subject matter will operate as an estoppel and be conclusive only when it is so pleaded, or there is no opportunity of so pleading it. Otherwise it is only a relevant fact from which the Court may draw a conclusion in favour of the person who tenders it in evidence. (Vooght v. Winch, 2 B. & Ald. 662; Cockle Cas. 44). This section was intended to include all judgments which by law operate to prevent a Court, whether civil or criminal, from taking cognizance of a suit, or trying any particular issue, and admit as evidence all judgments inter partes which would operate as res judicata in a second suit. 6 C. 171. This section applies to a case in which the Court has been decided before. 49 C. L. J. 441=33 C. W. N. 795=118 Ind. Cas. 857=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 374 (F. B.); 23 C. 533; 19 A. 277; 25 C. 522.

Cases.—A finding in a former suit where the question was tried between all the parties to the subsequent suit, is admissible as evidence. 22 W. R. 457. "It is not competent for the Court, in the case of the same question arising between the same parties, to review a previous decision." Per Lord Macnaghten, in Badar Bee v. Habin Merican Noordin (1909) A. C. at p. 623.

"The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties exercising reasonable diligence might have brought forward at the time." Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare, 115.

41. A final judgment, order or decree of a competent Court, in the exercise of probate, matrimonial, admiralty or insolvency jurisdiction, which confers upon or takes away from any person any legal character, or which declares any person to be entitled to any such character, or to be entitled to any specific thing, not as against any specified person but absolutely, is relevant when the existence of any such legal character, or the title of any such person to any such thing, is relevant.

Such judgment, order or decree is conclusive proof—that any legal character which it confers accrued at the time when such judgment, order or decree came into operation; that any legal character to which it declares any such person to be entitled, accrued to that person at the time when such judgment, order or decree declares it to have accrued to that person; that any legal character which it takes away from any such person ceased at the time from which such judgment, [order or decree] declared that it had ceased or should cease; and that anything to which it declares any person to be so entitled was the property of that person at the time from which such judgment, [order or decree] declares that it had been or should be his property.

Legislative changes.—The words within brackets have been inserted by Act 18 of 1872.

Scope.—These are judgments in rem. They are conclusive on every body, and as such admissible against every body. Such adjudication, being the solemn declaration of the property accredited Court, which has the best right so to adjudicate, concludes not merely the parties to the action and their privies, but all persons, from asserting the contrary. (Powell Ev. 66.) Such judgments are conclusive "not merely as to the point actually decided, but as to a matter which it was necessary to decide, and which was actually decided as the ground work of the decision itself, though not then directly the point at issue." Per Coleridge, J. in R. v. Hortington 4 E. and B. at p. 794. But it must clearly appear that a decision on such matter was actually necessary to the judgment. Concha v. Concha, 11 App. Cas. 541. Ballantyne v. Mackinnon, (1896) 2 Q. B. 455. Judgments in rem i. e. affecting the status of a person or of thing e. g. a decision of a Prize Court, Probate, Divorce or Admiralty Court, or Ecclesiastical Court, bind all the world. A judgment in bankruptcy proceeding has the effect of a judgment in rem. (Ex parte Learoyd In re Foulds, 10 Ch. D 2.) Such judgments are binding not only on the parties to the proceedings but upon all the world, and not only on the tribunals of the country where pronounced, but on the tribunals of other countries; but such a judgment must not have been obtained by fraud, must not carry a manifest error on its face, and must not be contrary to natural justice. (Powell Ev. 451). A final judgment or order of a competent Court, in the exercise of probate jurisdiction, as conferring the status of executor on the grantee of a probate, is conclusive proof of the existence of such status and the fact that the Will is genuine. It operates as a judgement in rem, and its effect can not be nullified except by a proceeding for revocation of probate. 31 C. 357=8 C. W. N. 197; see also 14 C. 861; 16 M. 380; 14 P. R. 1912; 22 A. 270 (F. B.) The expression "legal character" when it has reference to a judgment of a Court of Probate, means the status of an Administrator of executor and that only, though, when it has reference to a Matrimonial Court, it includes wifehood and widowhood, and a judgment of a Court of probate is conclusive proof that the person to whom letters or probate have been granted has been clothed with the powers and the responsibilities of the deceased and with nothing else; and a question of status decided by a Court of Probate cannot be raised again. U. B. R. 1910, 4th Qr. 61. No judgment except that passed by a Court in the exercise of probate, matrimonial, admiralty or insolvency jurisdiction, upon any matters indicated in this section can have the effect of a judgment in rem. 26 A. L. J. 797=A. I. R. 1928 A. 395.

Relevancy and effect of judgments, order or decrees, other than those mentioned in section 41.

42. Judgments, orders or decrees other than those mentioned in section 41 are relevant if they relate to matters of a public nature relevant to the inquiry; but such judgments orders or decrees are not conclusive proof of that which they state.

Illustrations.

A sues B for trespass on his land. B alleges the existence of a public right-of-way over the land, which A denies.

The existence of a decree in favour of the defendant, in a suit by A against C for a trespass on the same land, in which C alleged the existence of the same right-of-way is relevant, but it is not conclusive proof that the right-of-way exists.

Scope.—Judgments are not deemed to be relevant as rendering probable facts which may be inferred from their existence, but which they neither state nor decide—as between strangers;

as between parties and privies in suits where the issue is different even though they relate to the same occurrence or subject matter;
or in favour of strangers against parties and privies.

But a judgment is deemed to be relevant as between strangers;

(1) if it is an admission, or
(2) if it relates to a matter of public or general interest, so as to be a statement under s. 13.—Stephen's Dig. § 44.

Where any question of rights or custom is to be decided, opinion of persons who would be likely to know its existence are under s. 48 admissible in evidence. A judgment of the High Court, regarding the transferability of tenures held under similar conditions in an adjoining village of the same pergana, is evidence of the usage of transferability, 23 C. 427. When a question of status is in issue, judgment and orders between the parties in mutation cases, succession certificate cases, rents suits, suits for possession, etc. are admissible in evidence. 1924 Nag. 387.

43. Judgments, orders or decrees, other than those mentioned in sections 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the judgments, etc., other than those mentioned in sections 40 to 42 when relevant. The existence of such judgment, order or decree is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of this Act.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B separately sue C for a libel which reflects upon each of them. C in each case says the matter alleged to be libellous is true and the circumstances are such that it is probably true in each case, or in neither.

A obtains a decree against C for damages on the ground that C failed to make out his justification. The fact is irrelevant as between B and C.

(b) A prosecutes B for adultery with C, A's wife.

B denies that C is A's wife, but the Court convicts B of adultery.

Afterwards, C, is prosecuted for bigamy in marrying B during A's lifetime. C says that she never was A's wife.

The judgment against B is irrelevant as against C.

(c) A prosecutes B for stealing a cow from him. B is convicted.

A afterwards sues C for the cow, which B had sold to him before his conviction. As between A and C, the judgement against B is irrelevant,

(d) A has obtained a decree for the possession of land against B. C, B's son, murders A in consequence.

The existence of the judgment is relevant, as showing motive for a crime.

(e) A is charged with theft and with having been previously convicted of theft. The previous conviction is relevant as a fact in issue.

(f) A is tried for the murder of B. The fact that B prosecuted A for libel and that A was convicted and sentenced is relevant under section 8 as showing the motive for the fact in issue.

Legislative changes.—Illustrations (e) and (f) were added by Act 3 of 1891.

Scope.—“Having now disposed of judgments which render the matter res judicata between the parties, judgments which from their special character are conclusive against all the world, and judgment which as relating to matters of a public nature, are relevant though not conclusive, between strangers to the suit, we come to the general rule of exclusions viz., that all other judgments are irrelevant. To this rule however, there is a highly important limitation. A judgment, though inadmissible for proving the truth of what it asserts, may be valuable as evidence for some other purpose. Its very existence may be a fact in issue, and then, of course, evidence of it may be given; or it may be a fact relevant within some one of the classes of relevant facts given in the Act, and then, again, evidence of it can be given.” (Cunningham Ev. 190). “The cases contemplated by s. 43 are those where a judgment is used not as res judicata or as evidence more or less binding upon an opponent by reason of the adjudication which it contains. But the cases referred to in s. 43 are such, I conceive, as the section itself illustrates viz., when the fact of any particular judgment having been given in a matter to be proved in the case. As for instance, if A sued B for slander, in saying that he had been convicted of forgery and B justified it upon the ground that the alleged slander was true, the conviction of A for forgery would be a fact to be proved by B, like any other fact, in the case, and quite irrespective of whether A had been actually guilty of the forgery or not. This I conceive, would be one of the many cases alluded to in s. 43.” Per Garth C. J. in Gujjural v. Fatehlal 6 C. 171 (F. B.) Similarly Straight J., in 12 A. 25 observed: “Section 43 of the Evidence Act declares that judgments, orders and decrees other than those mentioned in ss. 40, 41 and 42 are of themselves irrelevant that is, in the sense that they can have any such effect or operation as is mentioned in those recited sections as qua judgments, orders and decrees, but I do not take this to make them absolutely inadmissible, when they are the best evidence of something that may be proved aliunde.”

Cases.—Decrees in former suits are relevant under this section, but not sufficient to bind those who are not parties to the suits. 61 P. R. 1875. A judgment between the plaintiff and other parties is not admissible though the facts found therein may support plaintiff's title disputed in the present suit. 1925 Pat. 68, The judgment of Criminal Court is inadmissible in evidence. 1922. Rang. 143.

44. Any party to a suit or other proceeding may show that any judgment, order or decree which is relevant under section 40, 41, or 42, and which has been proved by the adverse party, was delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it, or was obtained by fraud or collusion.

Scope.—In the Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 H.S. T. 355 Sir William De Grey C J., observed: "Yet, like all other acts of the highest judicial authority, it is impeachable from without; although it is not permitted to show that the Court was mistaken, it may be shown that they were misled. Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act which vitates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal." This section lays down not only a rule of law relating to evidence, but also a rule of procedure. 27 C. 11=3 C. W. N. 660. A judgment of a Court, which has no jurisdiction is not binding. The words 'not competent' refer to a Court acting without jurisdiction. 12 M. 228. So long as letters of administration are not revoked by a competent Court, the allegation that it is invalid cannot be entertained. 10 C. W. N. 422. This section does not enumerate the grounds on which a decree can be attacked by a separate suit. 9 A. L. J. 1; see 26 A. 272; 27 C. 11; 21 B. 205; 3 N. L. R. 185; 8 Ind. Cas. 1197; 1 C. L. Judgments in rem.—Having regard to the wide terms of this section it is possible to say that it is not open to a Court other than the Court from which a grant has been issued in cases of fraud or collusion, to deal with the matter and decide whether the grant has been obtained by fraud or collusion. But the better course in such cases would be, when it is open to the party alleging fraud to apply to the Court from which the grant is issued to stay the suit to enable an application to be made to revoke the grant. 15 C. W. N. 207.

OPINIONS OF THIRD PERSONS RELEVANT.

45. When the Court has to form an opinion upon a point of foreign law, or of science or art, or as to identity of handwriting [or finger impression] *the opinions upon that point of persons specially skilled in such foreign law, science or art, † [or in questions as to identity of handwriting] or finger impression] * are relevant facts.

Such persons are called experts.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is, whether the death of A was caused by poison.

The opinions of experts as to the symptoms produced by the poison by which A is supposed to have died, are relevant.

(b) The question is, whether A, at the time of doing a certain act, was by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law.

The opinions of experts upon the question whether the symptoms exhibited by A commonly show unsoundness of mind, and whether such unsoundness of mind, usually renders persons incapable of knowing the nature of the acts which they do or of knowing that what they do, is either wrong or contrary to law, are relevant.

(c) The question is whether a certain document was written by A. Another document is produced which is proved or admitted to have been written by A.

The opinions of expert on the question whether the two documents were written by the same person or by different persons, are relevant.

* The word "or finger impressions" in both places where they occur in s. 45, were added by the Indian Evidence Act, 1899 (5 of 1899). For discussion in Council as to whether "finger impressions" "thumb impressions" see Gazette of India 1898 Pt. VI, p. 24.

† The words within brackets in s. 45 were inserted by the Evidence Act Amendment Act (18 of 1872.)

Scope.—An expert witness is one who has devoted time and study to a special branch of learning, and thus is specially skilled on those points on which he is asked to state his opinion. His evidence on such points is admissible to enable the tribunal to come to a satisfactory conclusion. An expert may be called to answer questions on any matters of science, art, medicine architecture, handwriting, valuation, or foreign law—indeed, any matter on which special skill or learning is necessary in order that a reliable opinion may be formed. He need not be a paid professional expert who makes a living by giving such evidence, but he must have devoted sufficient time and study to the subject to render his evidence trustworthy. The Judge decides on the competency of an expert witness; the jury decides on the weight of his evidence. (Powell Ev. 41). The matters upon which such opinion evidence can be given include inter alia causes of death, insanity, effects of opinion, genuineness of works of art, value of articles, genuineness of hand-writing, proper navigation of vessels, meaning of trade terms, foreign law, etc. And in support of such opinion evidence the witness may prove experiments, inspections and other acts upon which he bases his opinion although they were made or done in the absence of the party. (See R. v. Heseltine. 12 Cox. 404); Cockle Cas. Ev. 119. An expert can cite books of admitted authority. Nelson v. Beidport, 8 Beav. 527; Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. and F. at p. 114. The opinions of experts are not binding on the jury, for it is with the jury, and not with the experts, that the determination of the case rests; the weight due to their testimony is a matter to be determined by the jury, and it will be proportionate to the soundness of the reason adduced in its support. 1 C. W. N. 465; 32 C. 759.

Cases.—To base a conviction on the evidence of an expert in hand-writing, as a general rule, is very unsafe. There may be cases in which the hand-writing is of such a peculiar character that the conclusion as to the identity of the writer is irresistible. 1 A. L. J. 184=19 Cr. L. J. 498; 15 Ind. Cas. 979; see also 2 A. L. J. 444. 6 A. L. J. 184; 11 Cr. L. J. 114; 36 M. 159; 37 C. 467; 8 Ind. Cas. 93; 86 Ind. Cas. 993; 26 C. W. N. 113; A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 408. 46. Facts, not otherwise relevant, are relevant if they support or are Facts bearing upon opinion inconsistent with the opinions of experts, when of experts such opinions are relevant.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is whether A was poisoned by a certain poison.

The fact that the other persons, who were poisoned by that poison, exhibited certain symptoms which experts affirm or deny to be the symptoms of that person, is relevant.

(b) The question is whether an obstruction to a harbour is caused by a certain sea-wall.

The fact that the other harbours similarly situated in other respects, but where there were no such sea-walls, began to be obstructed at about the same time, is relevant.

Scope.—Facts not otherwise relevant, have in some cases been permitted to be proved as supporting or being inconsistent with the opinion of experts. (Step. Dig. art. 50). Facts although otherwise irrelevant, may be given in evidence in corroboration, illustration, or rebuttal of opinion. So, on cross-examination he may be asked, inter alia whether he has not expressed opinions inconsistent with his present testimony ; and if he deny the fact it may be independently proved. (Phipson, Ev. 347).

47. When the Court has to form an opinion as to the person by whom any document was written or signed, the opinion as to hand-writing, when relevant, of any person acquainted with the hand-writing of the person by whom it is supposed to be written or signed that it was or was not written or signed by that person, is a relevant fact.

Explanation.—A person is said to be acquainted with the handwriting of another person when he has seen that person write, or when he has received documents purporting to be written by that person in answer to documents written by himself or under his authority and addressed to that person, or when in the ordinary course of business, documents purporting to be written by that person have been habitually submitted to him.

Illustrations.

The question is, whether a given letter is in the hand-writing of A, a merchant in London.

B is a merchant in Calcutta, who has written letters addressed to A and received letters purporting to be written by him, C is B's clerk, whose duty it was to examine, and file B's correspondence. D is B's broker, to whom H habitually submitted the letters purporting to be written by A for the purpose of advising with him thereon.

The opinions of B, C and D on the question whether the letter is in the hand-writing of A are relevant, though neither B, C nor D ever saw A write.

Scope.—Hand-writing may be proved not only by the person who saw the particular document signed but also by any person acquainted in any manner with the hand-writing of the person said to have signed the document in question.

e. g. by (a) having seen him write at any time, (b) having received documents purporting to be in his hand-writing, or (c) having, in the ordinary course of business, observed or dealt with documents purporting to be his hand-writing, Doe v. Suckermore, 7 L. J. K. B. 33; Cockle's Cas. 327. "The only evidence of hand-writing which is entitled to be called direct is the evidence of a witness who proves that he himself wrote or signed the document in question, or that of a witness who proves that he saw the document signed or written. All other evidence of hand-writing must rest in greater or less degree upon inferences drawn from the appearance of the writing in question or other circumstances", (Wills. Civ. Ev. 184).

Cases.—A witness need not state in the first instance how he knew the hand-writing, since it is the duty of the opposite party to explore on cross-examination the sources of his knowledge, if he be dissatisfied with the testimony as it stands. It is permissible and may often be expedient that the matters referred to in the explanation should be elicited on the examination-in-chief. Yet, it is within the power of the presiding Judge and often may be expedient to permit the opposite advocate to intervene and cross-examine so that the Court may be in a position to come to a definite conclusion on adequate materials as to the proof of the hand-writing. 5 Bom. L. R. 663=28 B. 58. The ordinary methods of proving hand-writing are (i) by calling as a witness a person who wrote the document or saw it written or who is qualified to express an opinion as to the hand-writing by virtue of s. 47; (ii) by a comparison of hand-writing as provided in s. 73; and (iii) by the admission of the person against whom the document is tendered. A comparison of hand-writing is a mode of ascertaining the truth which ought to be used with very great caution. 26 C. W. N. 113. The opinions of those who have not carefully studied the art of caligraphy is not as a rule of very great utility. 64 Ind. Cas. 234.

48. When the Court has to form an opinion as to the existence of any general custom or right, the opinions, as to the existence of such custom or right, of persons who would be likely to know of its existence if it existed are relevant.

Opinion as to existence of right or custom, when relevant.

Explanation.—The expression "general custom or right" includes customs or rights common to any considerable class of persons.

Illustrations.

The right of the villagers of a particular village to use the water of a particular well is a general right within the meaning of this section.

Scope.—By s. 98, evidence may be given with reference to a document, to show the meaning of technical, local and provincial expressions, abbreviations and words used in a peculiar sense. For this purpose the opinions of persons having special means of knowledge on the subject would be the best evidence. (Cun. Ev. 202). Section 32, clause (4) makes the statement of dead persons, as regards the existence of public right or custom or matters of public or general interest, relevant. These are all exceptions to the rule of rejection of opinion evidence. So the statements made by persons who are in a position to know of the existence of a custom or usage in their locality are admissible under this section. 26 C. 184. A general custom or general right may be proved by evidence, under this section—by the opinions of persons who would be likely to know of its existence, if it existed such opinions are relevant, but such opinions must be given by witnesses who gave evidence. 1 L. B. R. 80. It is admissible evidence for a witness to give his opinion on the existence of a family custom. 23 A 37. (P. C.). See 10 C. W. N. 730 P. C. 5 C.; 744 P. C.; 23 C. 427; 12 C. W. N. 74 P. C.

49. When the Court has to form an opinion as to—Opinions as to usages, tenements, ect, when relevant.

the usages and tenements of any body of men or family, the constitution and government of any religious or charitable foundation, or the meaning of words or terms used in particular districts or by particular classes of people.

the opinions of persons having special means of knowledge thereon, are relevant facts.

Cases.—Where witnesses, as members of a family, have special means of knowledge, as to the usages of the family, their evidence will be relevant under this section, so far as the existence of such usage is concerned. 32 C. 6. It is admissible evidence for a witness to give his opinion on the existence of a family custom, and to state, as the grounds of that opinion, information derived from deceased persons. But it must be the expression of independent opinion based on hearsay, and not mere repetition of hearsay. 10 M. L. J. 267 P. C.=23 A 37. As regards proof of paternity of illegitimate child, vide 27 M. 32.

50. When the Court has to form an opinion as to the relationship of one person to another, the opinion, expressed by conduct, as to the existence of such relationship, of any person who, as a member of the family or otherwise has special means of knowledge on the subject, is a relevant fact :

Provided that such opinion shall not be sufficient to prove a marriage in proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act, or in prosecutions under sections 494, 495, 497 or 498 of the Indian Penal Code.

Illustrations.

(a) The question is whether A and B were married.

The fact that they were usually received and treated by their friends as husband and wife, is relevant.

(b) The question is whether A was the legitimate son of B. The fact that A was always treated as such by members of the family, is relevant.

Scope.—The scope of this section, leaving the exception out of consideration, seems to be that the person himself is not to be called to state his own opinion ; but that, when he is dead or cannot be called, his conduct may be proved by others. The section appears to afford an exceptional way of proving a relationship, but by no means to prevent any person from stating a fact of which he or she has special means of knowledge. A husband or wife is not, therefore, precluded from proving his or her marriage. 9 M. 9=1 Weir. 572. Under the proviso to this section, in proceedings of the kind therein specified, opinion relevant under this section is not by itself sufficient to prove marriage which must, in consequence, be proved in some other way. 5 P. R. 1894 Cr. ; see also 5 A. 233=A. W. N. 1883. 1. Where marriage is an ingredient in any offence, e. g., adultery, bigamy and the like, there must be, according to this section, strict proof, in the regular way of the fact of the marriage. 5 C. 566 (F. B.). A person claiming as an illegitimate son must establish his alleged paternity like any other disputed question of relationship, and can, of course, rely upon statements, of deceased persons under s. 32, cl. (5), upon opinion expressed by conduct under s. 50. 27 M. 32. The proof as to whether there was a marriage between two parties is to include a consideration of the character and conduct of various relatives. 56 I. A. 201=10 Lah. 725=31 Bom. L. R. 346=117 Ind. Cas. 17=50 C. L. J. 89.

51. Whenever the opinion of any living person is relevant, the grounds on which such opinion is based are also relevant.

Illustration.

An expert may give an account of experiments performed by him for the purpose of forming his opinion.

Object.—An important test of the value of the expert's evidence is thus provided. The Court is not left to the bare statement of an opinion but can inquire into the grounds on which it is based, and thus ascertain whether there are any grounds or whether they are reasonably adequate. This section is to a great extent a repetition of section 46. (Cun. Ev. 204.) See also, 10 Bom. L. R. 97 ; 26 B. 1 (P. C.). In criminal trial, chemical examiner must give in his report opinion and grounds on which opinion is based. A. I. R. 1933 All. 394=34 Cr. L. J. 754=1933 Cr. C. 664.

CHARACTER, WHEN RELEVANT.

52. In civil cases the fact that the character of any person concerned is such as to render probable or improbable any conduct imputed to him is irrelevant, except in so far as such character appears from facts otherwise relevant.

In civil cases, character to prove conduct imputed, irrelevant.

Principle.—"The general character is not in issue. The business of the Court is to try the case, and not the man; and a very bad man may have a very righteous cause." (Thompson v. Church, 1 Rost. 312 : Wig. Cas. 29).

Criticism.—"The accepted general rule is that evidence of the general character of parties to civil actions, where character is not a part of the issue, is inadmissible. The rule seems to be one of practical convenience, for the purpose of avoiding the confusion of issue. On principle, however, it would seem that there ought to be exceptions to this general rule. In as much as the general rule is not based upon any philosophical reason, but is merely one of convenience, it ought not to be applied to cases where justice to the defendant requires that the inconvenience arising from a confusion of the issues should be disregarded, and he be permitted to give evidence of his previous good character, or, in other words, that such evidence ought to be received in a civil action when it is of a character to bring it within all of the reasons for admitting such evidence in criminal cases. Civil actions for an indecent assault, for seduction, and kindred cases, are of this character; such cases are not infrequently mere speculative and black-mailing schemes. The consequences to the defendant of a verdict against him in such a case are most serious, for the issue as to him involves his fortune, his honour, and his family. From the very nature of the charge, it often happens that an innocent man can only meet the issue by a denial of the charge and proof of his previous good character. Ought a defendant in such a case to be deprived of the right to lay before the jury evidence of his previous good character, because it will tend to confuse the issue, while a defendant in a case where the State charges him with a simple assault, involving no more serious consequences than the payment, perhaps, of a fine of five dollars, is accorded the absolute right to give such evidence?—Per Start C. J. in Hein v. Holdridge (1900) 81 N. W. 522. See also 6 W. R. Cr. 62; 7 W. R. Cr. 7; 59 Ind. Cas. 560; 1 C. W. N. 146; 26 Ind. Cas. 625; 62 Ind. Cas. 545; 13 Ind. Cas. 102; 16 C. W. N. 69.

Scope.—The character of the parties to civil action is generally irrelevant and inadmissible. Attorney General v. Bowman 2 B. and P. 532.

53. In criminal proceedings the fact that the person accused is of a good character is relevant.

In criminal cases previous goods character relevant.

Principle.—The accused in a criminal case can always give evidence of his good character. R v. Rowton, 34 L. J. M. C. 57. A man's character is often of the utmost importance in explaining his conduct and judging of his innocence or criminality. Many acts, which standing alone, would be suspicious, are freed from all suspicion when we come to know the circumstances and character of the person by whom they are done. (Cunningham Ev. 205). No importance can be attached to evidence of good character when the case against the accused is clear.

Evidence of character.—Evidence of character is admissible for the prisoner, who may show by general evidence that his character is such that he is not likely to have committed the offence which is imputed to him. He can only support that part of his character which is impeached, and only by general evidence not by evidence of his conduct on particular occasions. The proper form of the question is from your knowledge of the prisoner does he bear a good character for honesty, humanity, etc., as the case may be. (Roscoe. Ev. 95.)

54. In criminal proceedings the facts that the accused person has a bad character is irrelevant, unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, in which case it becomes relevant.

Previous bad character not relevant, except in reply.

Explanation. 1.—This section does not apply to cases in which the bad character of any person is itself a fact in issue.

Explanation 2.—A previous conviction is relevant as evidence of bad character.

Legislative changes.—This section has been substituted by Act 3 of 1891.

Scope.—It is generally stated, that evidence of a prisoner's good character is admissible, but evidence of his bad character is inadmissible, except in answer to evidence of his good character. But why cut up the rule into two parts? It seems to be simply this—evidence of the prisoner's character, good or bad, is always admissible at the prisoner's option whenever his good character is admitted his bad character is admissible. (Cockle's Cas. 112). "Evidence of character must, of course, be applicable to the particular nature of the charge; to prove for instance, that a party has borne a good character for humanity and kindness, can have no bearing in reference to a charge of dishonesty. The correct mode of inquiry is as to the general character of the accused." (Will's Circumstantial Ev. p. 226). Evidence of bad character should not be put before the jury. 15 W. R. Cr. 37; 7 W. R. Cr. 7; 8 W. R. Cr. 11; 6 W. R. Cr. 72; 2 B. H. C. R. 125; 5 L. B. R. 4; 15 P. R. 1888 Cr.; 5 Bom. L. R. 1034 52 M. 358. Under this section the fact that the accused has a bad character is irrelevant and cannot be admitted whether elicited by the prosecution or by the defence. 6 L. B. R. 4=9 Cr. L. J. 576=2 Ind. Cas. 349; 54 B. 524=A. I. R. 1930 B. 157; 15 P. R. 1888 (F. B.); But this restriction does not apply to cases where bad character of any person is itself a fact in issue. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 455=128 Ind. Cas. 739; see also 7 P. R. 1895 Cr.; A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 474; A. I. R. 1933 All. 674. Except for the purposes of awarding enhanced punishment in cases falling within the provisions of s. 75, Penal Code, evidence of previous convictions after amendment by Act III of 1891, s. 6 stands upon the same footing, as regards admissibility, as other evidence of bad character. 7 P. R. 1895 Cr.; 5 Bom. L. R. 105=28 B. 129; 5 Bom. L. R. 1035. Previous conviction may be admissible when such conviction is a relevant fact under s. 14 of the Act. 1 C. W. N. 146; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 430; 16 C. W. N. 69. The evidence of a police-officer that the accused person was under police surveillance in order to make the prosecution story sound and probable, is hopelessly inadmissible. A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 345=12 Pat. L. T. 471. But if evidence is otherwise relevant it is not inadmissible. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 474.

Explanation 1.—In all actions or proceedings in which a plaintiff's character, is actually in issue, as in actions for defamation, evidence of the plaintiff's character may be given. Scott v. Sampson, L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 491; see also A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 430; 46 C. 700=54 Ind. Cas. 53; A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 157. In prosecution for rape, or assault to commit rape, or indecent assault evidence of the bad character of the prosecutrix, may be given in defence, her character, under the circumstances, being considered, to some extent, in issue. (R. v. Clarke, 2 Starkie 241; Cockle's Cas. 112). In a bad livelihood case, the character of the accused is a fact in issue and as such evidence of his bad character is admissible in evidence. See 11 C. W. N. 789. Upon the conviction of an accused, the Court has to determine what punishment to award, and, to do this should take into consideration, not only the nature and gravity of the offence committed, but also the character of the accused, the bad character of the accused then becomes a fact in issue. Evidence of bad character being admissible as affecting the sentence, evidence may be given only of general reputation and general disposition and not of particular acts by which reputation or disposition is shown. Evidence as to previous convictions is an exception to this rule. Evidence of departmental punishment is inadmissible for the purpose. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 352.

Explanation 2.—It has been held that if a prisoner's counsel elicited on cross-examination, from witnesses for the prosecution that the prisoner has borne a good character, a previous conviction might be put in evidence against him, in like manner as if witness to his character had been called. Per Park B., in R. v. Gadbury, 8 C. and P. 676. See also R. v. Shrimton, 8 Den. C. C. R. 319=21 L. J. M. C. 37. Where a man is being tried upon a specific charge, unless within the four corners of the law, proof of a previous conviction is allowed for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge, or whatever it might be, no question ought to be permitted and no evidence allowed to show that he is a man of bad and dishonest character. But if the accused at his trial, choose to put in issue the question of his good character, it is then competent to rebut such evidence by giving evidence of general evil reputation. 14 A. 25. This section has no bearing whatever upon the question of the relevancy of a previous conviction after an accused has been convicted of the offence with which he has been charged, and for the purpose of enhancing the sentence to be passed upon him. It refers solely to the relevancy of a previous conviction as evidence to prove that the accused is guilty, and should be convicted of the particular offence with which he is charged. L. B. R. (1872-1892). 449.

The Evidence Act gives the Court a discretion to admit previous conviction as evidence of character, at any stage of the trial, in all cases in which there is such a connection between the act of which the prisoner was found guilty on the previous conviction and the facts to be proved, as bears upon the probability of the prisoner having committed the act charged, and in those cases where the previous conviction is of a kind falling within any of the classes of connection with the facts to be proved stated in ss. 6 to 16.—2 Weir 760. See also 14 C. 721. But in other cases the proof of previous convictions as evidence giving rise to an inference regarding the character of the prisoner is not admissible. 5 C. 768=6 C. L. R. 219 : L. B. R. (1893-1900), 93 ; 5 Pat. L. J. 706.

The proof of a previous conviction not contemplated by s. 75 Penal Code, may be adduced after the accused is found guilty, provided the previous conviction is relevant under the Act. 16 Bom. L. R. 934=26 Ind. Cas. 996.

Cases.—The fact that the accused had a bad character is not irrelevant under this section when the evidence relating to it is not given for the purposes of showing that the accused was a bad character and therefore likely to commit offences of the kind of which he has been convicted. 2 Lah. L. J. 653. Evidence of previous conviction is admissible not as evidence of character but to prove habit and association. 10. O. W. N. 686=A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 355.

55. In civil cases the fact that the character of any person is Character as affecting dam- such as to affect the amount of damages which ages. he ought to receive, is relevant.

Explanation.—In sections 52, 53, 54, and 55, the word “character” includes both reputation and disposition ; but [except as provided in section 54.] evidence may be given only of general reputation and general disposition, and not of particular acts by which reputation or disposition were shown.

Legislative changes.—The words within brackets have been substituted by Act 3 of 1891.

Scope.—In all actions or proceedings in which a plaintiff's character is actually in issue, as in actions for defamation, evidence of the plaintiff's character may be given. (Scott v. Sampson. L. R. 8. Q. B. D. 491.) In a few cases, where the amount of damages depends upon character, as in seduction and breach of promise of marriage, evidence may be given of the character of the woman seduced, or the female plaintiff, but upon the question of damages only. Very v. Watkins, 7 C. and P. 308. In general, in actions unconnected with character, evidence as to the character of either of the parties to a suit is inadmissible, being foreign to the point in issue, and only calculated to create prejudice. For the same reason, where particular acts of misconduct are imputed to a party, evidence of general character is excluded but it is otherwise where general character is put in issue ; (Doed Foar v. Hicke, per Buller J.) ; for evidence of bad character is admitted in some actions with a view to the amount of damages. Thus, in actions of criminal conspiracy, the defendant could adduce evidence of the wife's bad character for chastity, and even of particular acts of adultery committed by her before her intercourse with him ; for by bringing the action, the husband put her general behaviour in issue. So in seduction the defendant may show the previous bad character of the person seduced. But even in such cases it has been held that the plaintiff cannot give evidence of the good character of the wife or daughter, until evidence has been offered on the other side to impeach it. Bamfield v. Massey, 1 Camp. 460 ; and if such evidence be not general, but go only to a specific instance, it has been ruled that the plaintiff cannot, in reply, give evidence of general character, but must be restricted to disproof of the specific instance. Ibid ; Dodd v. Norris, 3 Camp 519. So, in an action for slander imputing dishonesty to the plaintiff, he cannot adduce evidence, in the first instance, of good character. Stuart v. Lovell, 2 Stark. 93 ; Cornwall v. Richardson, Ry. and M. 305 = Roscoe Ev. 87.

Explanation.—It seems that this explanation is based upon the dissenting judgment of Wills, J. in R. v. Rawton. 10 Cox. Cr. 25. Therein he observed : “I apprehend that the man's disposition is the principal matter to be inquired into, and that his reputation is merely accessory, and admissible only as evidence of disposition. The judgment of the particular witness is superior in quality and value to mere rumour. Numerous cases may be put in which a man may have no general character—in the sense of any reputation or rumour about him—at all, and yet may have a good disposition. For instance, he may be of a shy, retiring disposition, and known only to a few, or again, he may be a person of the vilest character and disposition, and only his intimates may be able to testify that this is the case. One man may deserve that character [reputation] without having acquired it, while another man may have acquired without deserving it. In such cases the value of the judgment of a man intimates upon his character becomes manifest. In ordinary life, when we want to know the character of a servant, we apply to his master. A servant may be known to none but members of his masters family; so the character of a child is only known to its parents and teachers, and the character of a man of business to those with whom he deals. According to the experience of mankind one would ordinarily rely rather on the information and judgment of a man's intimates than on general report; and why not in a Court of law?" But the English law is based upon the judgment of the majority according to which evidence of character must not be evidence of particular facts, but must be evidence of general reputation only having reference to the nature of the charge; not evidence of disposition. The Indian Legislature more wisely accepted the views of the minority so far as disposition is concerned but laid down that only general reputation and general disposition are admissible.

PART II.

On Proof

CHAPTER III.

FACTS WHICH NEED NOT BE PROVED.

Fact judicially noticeable need not be proved.	56. No fact of which the Court will take judicial notice need be proved.
---	---

Principle.—There are certain matters which are considered too notorious to require proof; such matters are therefore "judicially noticed," that is to say, the Judge takes notice of their existence and nature without requiring any evidence thereof. English law is dealt with in the same way, as, although it may not be so notorious to the public generally, it is taken to be within the knowledge or rather, in the "breast" of the Judge. (Cockle's Cas. 13). "The maxim that what is known need not be proved, manifesta (or notoria) non indigent probatione, may be traced far back in the civil and the common law; indeed, it is probably coeval with legal procedure itself. We find it as a maxim in our own books, and, it is applied in every part of our law. It is qualified by another principle, also very old, and often overtopping the former in importance—non report quid notum sit iudice, si natum non sit in fama iudici. These two maxims seem to intimate the whole doctrine of judicial notice." Thayer Pre. Treat. on Ev. 277. When a cause is presented at the bar for trial, the Court and Jury are presumed to be unformed concerning the facts involved in the case, and it is incumbent upon the litigant parties to establish by evidence facts relied upon by them respectively. There is, however, a large class of facts which need not be proved, since they are "judicially noticed" by the Court and Jury, that is to say, there are a great many things of such common knowledge that the Courts ought to be presumed to know them,—such as the Declaration of Independence; the earthquake and the great fire of San Francisco in 1906, and other matters of past history; the existence and procedure of their own Court; the public laws: the calendar, the public mortality tables; treaties entered into by their own government, and many other matters of such general notoriety that every well-informed man or woman within the limits of the Court's jurisdiction must or should know. If it so happened that the proof of any such facts formed part of a litigant's case, he is excused from proving them, as it is said the Court will take judicial cognizance of their existence, or in other words they will be taken as proved. And the importance of the subject of judicial notice can hardly be over-estimated, for there is no case in which there are not some matters which will fall within the judicial cognizance of the tribunal before which it is tried.

since the very law itself which is administered by the forum is a subject of judicial notice. (Burr Jones Ev. § 105).

Facts of which Court must take judicial notice.

57. The Court shall take judicial notice of the following facts;—

(1) all laws or rules having the force of law now or heretofore, in force, or hereafter to be in force, in any part of British India :

(2) all public Acts passed or hereafter to be passed by Parliament, and all local and personal Acts directed by Parliament to be judicially noticed :

(3) Articles of War for Her Majesty's Army or Navy :

(4) the course of proceeding of Parliament and of the Councils for the purposes of making Laws and Regulations established under the Indian Councils Act, * or any other law for the time being relating thereto.

Explanation.—The word "Parliament" in clauses (2) and (4) includes—

(1) the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland ;

(2) the Parliament of Great Britain ;

(3) the Parliament of England ;

(4) the Parliament of Scotland ; and

(5) the Parliament of Ireland ;

(5) the accession and the sign manual of the Sovereign for the time being of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland ;

(6) all seals of which English Courts take judicial notice, the seals of all the Courts of British India, and of all Courts out of British India, established by the authority of the Governor-General or any Local Government in Council ; the seals of Courts of Admiralty and Maritime Jurisdiction and of Notaries Public, and all seals which any person is authorized to use by any Act of Parliament or other Act or Regulation having the force of law in British India :

(7) the accession to office, names, titles, functions and signatures of the persons filling for the time being any public office in any part of British India, if the fact of their appointment to such office is notified in the Gazette of India, or in the official Gazette of any Local Government :

(8) the existence, title and national flag of every State or Sovereign recognised by the British Crown :

(9) the divisions of time, the Geographical divisions of the world, and public festivals, fasts and holidays notified in the official Gazette ,

(10) the territories under the dominion of the British Crown :

(11) the commencement, continuance and termination of hostilities between the British Crown and any other State or body of persons :

(12) the names of the members and officers of the Court and of their deputies and subordinate officers and assistants, and also of all officers acting in execution of its process, and of all advocates, attorneys, proctors, vakils, pleaders other persons authorized by law to appear or act before it :

(13) the rule of the road † [on land or at sea].

In all these cases and also on all matters of public history, literature, science or art, the Court may resort for its aid to appropriate books or documents of reference

If the Court is called upon by any person to take judicial notice of any fact, it may refuse to do so, unless and until such person produces any such book or document as it may consider necessary to enable it to do so.

Scope.—It will be readily seen that the subjects of judicial notice are so numerous and varied that it is next to impossible to classify them, or to say further than that they embrace subjects, "judicial, legislative, political, historical, geographical, commercial, scientific and artistic, in addition to a wide range of matters, arising in the ordinary course of nature, or the general current of human affairs, which rest entirely upon acknowledged notoriety for their claims to judicial recognition." (Burr Jones § 105). The matters enumerated in this section are by no means exhaustive. In this section certain matters are mentioned of which judicial notice should be taken. But the Courts can take judicial notice of facts not mentioned in this section. (See also Stephen's Dig Art. 58). A Court can not take judicial notice of a Government Notification under s. 57 of the Evidence Act. 107 Ind. Cas. 578=A. I. R. 1928 A. 355. A Court can not take judicial notice of theft in a railway. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 837.

* 24 & 25 Vict., c. 67

Clause (1).—The English Courts take judicial notice of the Laws of England and Ireland nor that of the Channel Islands, nor of Scotland, except in the House of Lords, nor that of the colonies and India except in the Privy Council, and, naturally, nor that of foreign countries. (Cockle's Cas. 16.) The law thus noticed includes both public and private Acts of Parliament, general customs and some local customs of well known extensive application, such as Gavelkind and Borough-English customs; but generally local or particular customs must be proved (Ibid). A Judge may refer to authorities to refresh his memory. So far as Indian law is concerned, the English rule should serve as a guide.

Clause (2).—As has been mentioned in clause (1) the English Court takes judicial notice of all Public Acts passed by the Parliament and since 1850 Private Acts also. It was customary, before 1850, to insert a clause in Private Acts of Parliament declaring that the same should be deemed public and be judicially noticed. The effect of this clause was to dispense with the necessity, not only of pleading the Act specially but of producing an examined copy or a copy printed by the Printer of the Crown; a public Act requiring neither to be specially pleaded nor proved. By 13 and 14 Vict. c. 12, it was enacted: "That every Act made after the commencement of this Act shall be deemed and taken to be public Act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such, unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such Act." This provision is now repealed by the Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 and 53 Vict. c. 63, which provides, by s. 8, that every Act passed after 1850 "shall be a Public Act and shall be judicially noticed, as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the Act." So now every personal Act or local Act should be taken notice of by the Indian Courts.

Clause (3).—Vide the Indian Army Act (VIII of 1911).

Clause (4).—The English Courts will judicially notice the Law of England and Ireland, including the Law and Custom of Parliament and the privileges and course of proceedings of each House of Parliament. Stockdale v. Hansard, 9 A. and E. 1=2 P. and D. 1. The Court should take judicial notice of debates of Parliament. 14 C. W. N. 713=37 C. 760.

Clause (5).—The English Courts take judicial notice of the great privy seal (Lord Melville's Case, 29 How. St. Tr. 707); of royal proclamation; of the signature of the Clerk of the Parliaments (Badische v. Levinstein, 4 R. P. C 470); seal of the Corporation of London (Doe v. Mason, 1 Esp. 53); seal of the Apothecaries Company (14 and 15 Vict. C. 99. s 81); the seal of the Board of Trade; seals of district registries. (Judicature Act, 1873, S. 61); seals and signatures of Commissioners for Oaths (Ex parte Magee) 15 Q. B. D. 332; the seal of a notary public in any part of His Majesty's dominions, but not of a foreign notary public. In re Davis, (1910) W. N. 212; seals of county Courts, etc.

Clauses (6) and (7)—10 C. L. R. 469.

Clause (7)—5 Ind. Cas. 537.

Clause (8)—4 O. C. 182; 51 P. R. 1886.

Clause (9).—The Court can take judicial notice of public holidays. 59 Ind. Cas. 926; 16 N. L. R. 198.

Clause (13).—It is provided by the Indian Evidence Act that than on all matters of public history, literature, science or art, the Court may resort for its aid to appropriate books of reference. 1 M. L. J. 326. Under the penultimate paragraph of this section and of the first proviso of this section Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence may be referred to. 12 C. L. R. 86.

The statement by H. M.'s Commissioner and Consul General for Uganda is sufficient for the Courts taking judicial notice, of the existence of hostilities between Katuga, the king of Unyad and Her Majesty the Queen, and the protected State of Uganda. 23 B. 54. See also. 46 Ind. Cas. 119; 22 C. W. N. 745=28 C. L. J. 32.

Case.—13 Ind. Cas. 599.

58. Not fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties there-
Facts admitted need not be proved. to or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule or pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings.

Provided that the Court may, in its discretion require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions.

Scope.—Any matters which have been admitted for the purpose of the trial need not be proved. Admissions thus expressly made in the proceedings prior to or at the trial are sometimes called formal or express admissions, to distinguish them from those informal or casual statements made by a party against his interest, which may, at the trial, be proved by witnesses. Formal or Express admissions may be made (a) on pleadings; (b) on notice to admit facts or documents, served by one party on another; (c) in answer to interrogatories administered by one party to another; (d) by Solicitor or counsel, in the exercise of his discretion, at or before trial. (Cockles Cas 37.) It should, however be noted here that express admissions are only allowed in civil cases. They are never allowed in criminal cases, unless a plea of "guilty" can be treated as such. (Ibid, 37.) But see Rat. Un. Cr. C. 769. Under this section no fact need be proved which the parties agree to admit at the hearing or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings. U. B. R. (1897-1901). Vol. 11. 379. When an agreement sued upon is admitted by the defendant, proof of it is dispensed with. 11 Ind. Cas. 810. Where a document is by reference included in the plaint or written statement, and its terms and execution admitted on the record by the pleadings it is not necessary to prove it or put it in evidence and its non-registration is immaterial. U. B. R. 1904, 3rd Qr. Evidence 1. See also 9 Ind. Cas. 470; 12 Bom. L. R. 712; 11 Ind. Cas. 850; U. B. R. 1907, Ev. 1; 9 Ind. Cas. 970.

An accused person is bound by an unqualified admission made at the trial by his solicitor. In England, a formal admission by the counsel at a trial has been allowed in order to dispense with mere formal proofs. In India there is nothing to prevent a prisoner, on being questioned under s. 342, to make an admission; and it is obvious that some admissions on formal matters of law can be better trusted to his legal adviser, and there seems to be no reason in principle why, when the admission has been so made in his presence at the trial so as to dispense with the attendance of witnesses for the prosecution, it should not be held to bind him. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 769. When an agreement sued upon is admitted by the defendant, proof of it is dispensed with. A Court cannot dismiss a suit based on an admitted document, on the ground that the document was not sufficiently stamped. 11 Ind. Cas. 810.

CHAPTER IV.

OF ORAL EVIDENCE.

59. All facts, except the contents of documents, may be proved by oral evidence.

Scope.—All facts except the contents of a document may be proved by oral evidence. The sworn testimony of a witness should not be ignored and disbelieved unless discredited or broken down by contrary proof, or by matter elicited in cross-examination, which may tend to show that the persons giving such evidence have deliberately perjured themselves, or have made a false and concocted statement, or unless the evidence is, upon the face of it, so absurd or improbable that no person ought to believe it. A. W. N. 1887, 189; 26 A. 108 (P. C.)=31 L. A. 38. It is not correct to hold that, for the determination of the merits of cases, oral testimony unsupported by documentary evidence is of no value. 18 W. R. 328. The evidence of one witness, if reliable, is not insufficient to prove a fact. 11 W. R. 94.

Discrepancies in evidence must be carefully considered and their effect allowed for, but when they can be fairly reconciled by explanation or can be naturally and reasonably accounted for, evidence, otherwise trustworthy, cannot be put aside, although its value may be pro tanto impaired, solely because of their concurrence. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 162.

60. Oral evidence must, in all cases
Oral evidence must be direct. whatever, be direct ; that is to say—if it refers to a fact which could be seen, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he saw it ;

if it refers to a fact which could be heard, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he heard it :

if it refers to a fact which could be perceived by any other sense or in any other manner, it must be the evidence of a witness who says he perceived it by that sense or in that manner ;

if it refers to an opinion or to the grounds on which that opinion is held, it must be the evidence of the person who holds that opinion on those grounds :

Provided that the opinions of experts expressed in any treatise commonly offered for sale, and the grounds on which such opinions are held, may be proved by the production of such treatises if the author is dead or cannot be found, or has become incapable of giving evidence, or cannot be called as a witness without an amount of delay or expense which the Court regards as unreasonable :

Provided also, that, if oral evidence refers to the existence or condition of any material thing other than a document, the Court may, if it thinks fit, require the production of such material thing for its inspection.

Direct.—The term is used in two senses ; as evidence of fact actually in issue i. e. opposed to circumstantial evidence and evidence of a fact actually perceived by a witness with one of his senses, or of an opinion actually held by himself (as distinguished from hearsay evidence.) (Cockle's Cas. 3).

Scope.—Direct evidence, as opposed to hearsay evidence is generally required. The evidence must be given by a witness who perceived directly by one of his senses the fact to which he deposes. Hearsay evidence, that is the evidence of a witness as to a fact which he did not himself perceive, but which he proves was stated by any other person, is not admissible, except in a few special cases. (Stokhart v. Dryden, 5 L. J. Ev. 218 ; Cockle Cas. 149) ; see also 12 B. L. R. App. 18 ; 1924 Rang. 363 ; 1924 Lah. 733.

Principle.—The grounds commonly assigned for the rejection of hearsay evidence are—(1) the irresponsibility of the original declarant ; (2) the depreciation of truth in the process of repetition ; (3) the opportunities for fraud its admission would open ; to which may be added the tendency of such evidence to protract legal inquiries, and to encourage the substitution of weaker for stronger proofs. (Phipson Ev. 189). In the Berkeley Peerage case, 4 Camp. 415, Sir James Mansfield C. J. observed : "By the general rule of law, nothing that is said by any person can be used as evidence between contending parties, unless it is delivered upon oath in the presence of those parties. If material witnesses happen to die before the trial, the person whose cause they would have established may fail in the suit ; but although all the bishops on the bench should be ready to swear to what they heard those witness to declare, and add their implicit belief of the truth of the declarations, the evidence would not be received."

It was not intended by this section to exclude the circumstantial evidence of things which can be seen, heard or felt. 12 B. L. R. App. 18.

Where information was given to the Police that the first three accused were collecting in the house of the fourth accused with intent to commit dacoity, and the person who gave the information was not produced before the Court, held the Judge had wrongly admitted the hearsay evidence of the Police officers as to the intention of the accused to commit dacoity, although the Judge was not wrong in allowing the officers to name the person who told them that they would find the first three accused in the house of the fourth. 2 Weir 702.

Cases.—22 C. W. N. 75 ; 38 M. 466 ; 4 Ind. Cas. 579.

CHAPTER V. OF DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

Proof of contents of documents. 61. The contents of documents may be proved either by primary or by secondary evidence.

Scope.—There are two methods of proving a document—either by primary or by secondary evidence. When primary evidence is available secondary evidence is not admissible. Where a copy of a document is admitted in the Court below without any objection, objection to the admissibility of the same should not be allowed in the appellate Court. 31 C. 155.

Primary evidence.

62. Primary evidence means the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court.

Explanation 1.—Where a document is executed in several parts, each part is primary evidence of the document.

Where a document is executed in counterpart, each counterpart being executed by one or some of the parties only, each counterpart is primary evidence as against the parties executing it.

Explanation 2.—Where a number of documents are all made by one uniform process, as in the case of printing, lithography, or photography, each is primary evidence of the contents to the rest, but where they are all copies of a common original, they are not primary evidence of the contents of the original.

Illustration.

A person is shown to have been in possession of a number of placards, all printed at one time from one original. Any one of the placards is primary evidence of the contents of any other, but no one of them is primary evidence of the contents of the original.

Explanation 1.—Where a mortgage deed has been executed in duplicate, each part would be primary evidence of the document under this section. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. 11, 234. "Duplicate originals" or copies executed by all parties are primary evidence against all such parties. Counterparts or copies executed by certain parties only, are primary evidence against such parties only (Cockle Cas. 308).

Secondary evidence.

63. Secondary evidence means and includes—

- (1) certified copies given under the provisions hereinafter contained ;
- (2) copies made from the original by mechanical processes which in themselves insure the accuracy of the copy, and copies compared with such copies ;
- (3) copies made from or compared with the original ;
- (4) counterparts of documents as against the parties who did not execute them ;
- (5) oral accounts of the contents of a document given by some person who has himself seen it.

Illustrations.

(a) A photograph of an original is secondary evidence of its contents, though the two have not been compared, if it is proved that the thing photographed was the original.

(b) A copy compared with a copy of a letter made by a copying machine is secondary evidence of the contents of the letter, if it is shown that the copy made by the copying machine was made from the original.

(c) A copy transcribed from a copy, but afterwards compared with the original, is secondary evidence; but the copy not so compared is not secondary evidence of the original, although the copy from which it was transcribed was compared with the original.

(d) Neither an oral account of a copy compared with the original, nor an oral account of a photograph or machine-copy of the original, is secondary evidence of the original.

Scope.—This section is exhaustive of the kinds of secondary evidence admissible under the Act. 43 M. L. J. 37; see also 10 Ind. Cas. 852.

Clause (1).—Certified copies mean copies signed and certified as correct by officials having custody of originals. They are allowed as evidence by various statutes. (Cockle Cas. 323).

Clause (2).—Vide Illustrations (b) and (c).

Clause (3).—This clause includes copies proved by oral evidence to have been examined with and to correspond with the originals. The witness may either have examined the copy which another person, not called as a witness read from the original. All public documents may be proved in the manner, but certified or office copies are generally used when available. (Cockle Cas. 323). See also 1924 Nag. 375; 20 L. W. 719. Printed copy of the depositions of a party to the former suit made in English, which depositions came up to the Madras High Court in 1900 on appeal, is admissible in evidence. A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 187=115 Ind. Cas. 147.

Clause (4).—"Counterparts" or copies executed by certain parties only, are primary evidence against such parties only. Cockle Cas. 308.

Clause (5).—66 Ind. Cas. 557; 36 Ind. Cas. 696. "Seen" includes also "read over." 73 Ind. Cas. 654. See also 71 Ind. Cas. 654; 3 Bur. L. J. 172; 22 A. L. J. 864=80 Ind. Cas. 939=(1924) All. 792.

Illustration (c).—A copy of a copy is inadmissible in evidence. 54 Ind. Cas. 941=1 P. L. T. 47; 7 A. 738.

Cases.—No secondary evidence can be given of a document, which is not proved to have been written by the accused or to have ever existed. 8 A. L. J. 302=12 Cr. L. J. 259=10 Ind. Cas. 852. It is not open to the appellate Court to consider whether the provisions as to secondary evidence have been complied with. 3 Pat. L. T. 397. A statement made by a party or his authorised agent in a previous suit, in which he refers to a document which is against his interest, is secondary evidence of that document. 53 Ind. Cas. 667. See also, 25 M. L. T. 19. A translation of a purwanah or grant is not secondary evidence of that grant and so it is not admissible in evidence. 35 Ind. Cas. 201=4 L. W. 331.

Proof of documents by primary evidence.

64. Documents must be proved by primary evidence except in the cases herein-after mentioned.

Scope.—Secondary evidence is not admissible where loss of primary evidence is not proved. U. B. R. (1892-1896). As regards documents the best evidence in the possession or power of the party tendering it must be given. Generally, the best evidence of a document is the original document, which is "primary evidence" of its contents. Such original must be produced unless its absence is accounted for. Macdonald v. Evans, 21 L. J. C. P. 141. The original document must be produced whenever there is a question as to its contents or terms, unless for special reasons secondary evidence is allowed. R. v. Ekworthy, L. R. 1 C. G. R. 103=37 L. J. M. C. 3; R. v. Hunt 3 B. and Ald. 566. But when the loss of the original has not been proved and in spite of that the Court of first instance admitted a copy of the sale certificate, without any objection from the other party, no objection can be taken in the appellate Court. 3 L. B. R. 40.

Cases in which secondary evidence relating to documents may be given.

65. Secondary evidence may be given of the existence, condition or contents of a document in the following cases:—

- (a) when the original is shown or appears to be in the possession or power—of the person against whom the document is sought to be proved, or of any person out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court, or of any person legally bound to produce it, and when, after the notice mentioned in section 66, such person does not produce it ;
- (b) when the existence, condition or contents of the original have been proved to be admitted in writing by the person against whom it is proved or by his representative in interest ;
- (c) when the original has been destroyed or lost, or when the party offering evidence of its contents cannot, for any other reason not arising from his own default or neglect, produce it in reasonable time ;
- (d) when the original is of such a nature as not to be easily moveable ;
- (e) when the original is a public document within the meaning of section 74 ;
- (f) when the original is a document of which a certified copy is permitted by this Act, or by any other law in force in British India, to be given in evidence ;
- (g) when the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents which cannot conveniently be examined in Court, and the fact to be proved is the general result of the whole collection.

In cases (a) (c) and (d) any secondary evidence of the contents of the document is admissible.

In case (b), the written admission is admissible.

In case (e) or (f), a certified copy of the document, but no other kind of secondary evidence, is admissible.

In case (g), evidence may be given as to the general result of the documents by any person who has examined them, and who is skilled in the examination of such documents.

Clause (a)—Secondary evidence of a document is admissible when the original is in the possession of an adverse or opposite party, who refuses to produce it after a proper notice to produce. The object of a notice to produce is merely to give the other party sufficient opportunity to produce the document if he pleases, and not that he may have time to consider the terms of the document and to prepare evidence or argument in support of or against it. Therefore, where the document is in Court at the time of the trial, a notice to produce it immediately is sufficient to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible if it be not produced. 21 L. J. Ex. 925 ; Cockle Cas. 314. Secondary evidence of a document is also admissible when the original is in the hands of a stranger, or third person, who is, on the ground of privilege, not compellable by law to produce it, and who refuses to do so, either when summoned as a witness with a "subpoena duces tecum" or when sworn as a witness without a subpoena if he admits that he has the document in Court. Mills v. Oddy, 6 C. and P. 728 ; Cockle Cas. 316. But where he can be compelled to produce the document, secondary evidence is not competent. R. v. Inhabitants of Leanfaethly, 23 L. J. M. C. 33 = Cockle Cas. 317. The law requires that a party shall do all that he can legally do to compel production of a document by a stranger before he puts in secondary evidence against an opponent. Cockle Cas. 318 ; see also 12 Ind. Cas. 861 ; 31 Ind. Cas. 892.

Cas. 568 ; 16 C. 753 ; 26 C 53.

Clause (c)—Secondary evidence of the contents of a document is admissible when the original is lost. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. II. 382. But it must be shown that proper search has been made for it. What is proper search depends on the nature and value of the document. More careful search will be required for a valuable than for a useless document. (Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296 ; Cockle Cas. 318). Such evidence is not admissible by mere assertion of loss. L. R. 3 A. 539 ; see also 67 Ind. Cas. 565 ; 4 Lah. 416 ; 49 Ind. Cas. 1006 ; 32 Ind. Cas. 399 ; 45 Ind. Cas. 888. Whether or not sufficient proof of search for or loss of an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of the first instance and depends very much on his discretion. A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 288.

Clause (d).—Secondary evidence of a document is admissible where the original cannot be brought to Court ; because it is physically impossible to bring the original, as in the case of writings on walls, tombstone and the like. Mortimer v. Macallan, 4 Jur. 172 = Cockle Cas. 321.

Clause (e).—Secondary evidence of a document is admissible where the original cannot be brought to Court, because the law does not allow, or require, the original to be brought to Court, on grounds of public convenience, as in the case of public registers and other "Public Documents" including the books of the Bank of England. Mortimer v. Macallan, 4 Jur. 172 = Cockle Cas. 321. So long as the original is in existence no secondary evidence other than a certified copy is admissible. 63 P. R. 1878. See also 17 C. P. L. R. 161 ; 2 Bom. L. R. 533 ; 10 C. P. L. R. 59 ; 34 C. 293 ; 22 C. W. N. 742.

Clause (f).—A registration office-copy of sale deed is admissible. 11 Ind. Cas. 50 ; 36 Ind. Cas. 673.

Clause (g).—Vide 2 Lah. L. J. 714 ; 6 M. 80 ; 5 C. 568.

66. Secondary evidence of the contents of the documents referred to in Rules as to notice to produce. section 65, clause (a), shall not be given unless the party proposing to give such secondary evidence has previously given to the party in whose possession or power the document is [or to his attorney or pleader,] such notice to produce it as is prescribed by law ; and if no notice is prescribed by law, then such notice as the Court considers reasonable under the circumstances of the case :

Provided that such notice shall not be required in order to render secondary evidence admissible in any of the following cases, or in any other case in which the Court thinks fit to dispense with it :—

- (1) when the document to be proved is itself a notice ;
- (2) when from the nature of the case, the adverse party must know that he will be required to produce it ;
- (3) when it appears or is proved that the adverse party has obtained possession of the original by fraud or force ;
- (4) when the adverse party or his agent has the original in Court ;
- (5) when the adverse party or his agent has admitted the loss of the document ;
- (6) when the person in possession of the document is out of reach of, or not subject to, the process of the Court.

Legislative changes.—The words within brackets have been inserted by Act. 18 of 1872.

Scope.—Secondary evidence of a document is admissible when the original is in possession of an adverse or opposite party, who refuses to produce it after proper notice to produce. Dwyer v. Collins, 21 L. J. Ex. 225 ; See also 34 Cr. L. J. 305. A Court can in exercise of the discretion reserved to it by this section, dispense with the issue of a notice to produce it. 36 Ind. Cas. 696. No objection should be allowed to be taken in the Appellate Court as to the admissibility of a copy of a document which was admitted in evidence in the first Court without any objection. 34 Ind. Cas. 539 = 216 P. W. R. 1912. It is doubtful if a proforma defendant who is not interested in suit property or in the decision of the case is an "adverse party" within the meaning of Proviso (2). 27 A. L. J. 1091 = 118 Ind. Cas. 663 = A. I. R. 1929 A. 680.

67. If a document is alleged to be signed or to have been written wholly or in part by any person, the signature or the handwriting of so much of the document as is alleged to be in that person's handwriting must be proved to be in his handwriting.

Proof of signature, and handwriting of person alleged to have signed or written document produced.

Scope.—To prove the execution of a bill of sale executed in their favour by the plaintiff's father, the defendant called a Kagi who deposed that the vendor came before him accompanied by witnesses, and acknowledge the execution of the deed, which was then registered. The lower appellate Court found it was sufficiently proved. On special appeal to the High Court it was contended that the execution was not sufficiently proved under this section. Held, that the proof of execution was sufficient : direct evidence of handwriting of the executant was not necessary under s. 67. 12 B. L. R. App. 16. This section does not require the subscribing witnesses to a document to be necessarily produced. 21 W. R. 429. Although under s. 67 no particular kind of proof is required for the purpose of establishing the fact of execution, it must nevertheless be shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the mark or signature denoting execution was actually fixed to the document by the person who professed to execute it. A Court is not bound to treat registration or endorsement as conclusive proof of the fact of execution. 46 Ind. Cas. 279= 5 O. L. J. 191.

68. If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence.

Proof of execution of document required by law to be attested.

"Provided that it shall not be necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of any document, not being a Will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied."*

Scope.—When a document is (required by law to be) attested, one of the attesting witnesses must be called in order to prove it, if he be alive and capable of giving evidence. Abott v. Plumbe, 1 Douglas, 216 ; Cockle Cas. 931. A scribe is not an attesting witness. 35 A. 254 ; 20 C. W. N. 699 ; 5 N. L. R. 3. Contra 41 M. 535. Where only an attester proved a mortgage bond attested by more than two witnesses and where its due execution was not denied, held that having regard to s. 68, the document may be taken as properly proved. 29 C. 355=6 C. W. N. 395. Sale-deed and surety bond do not require to be proved by attesting witnesses. 30 Ind. Cas. 64 ; 26 C. 222=3 C. W. N. 228. An unattested mortgage document cannot be proved even as containing a personal covenant to pay. 18 M. 29. Such objection cannot be taken for the first time in the appeal. 13 M. L. J. 143.

Where the requisite attestation is wanting that involves a question conclusively as to the validity of the transaction ; whereas, where an attesting witness, who ought to have been called, has not been called, that raises a question exclusively as to proof and admissibility. 2 M. L. T. 175=17 M. L. J. 213=30 M. 251. It is not necessary that two attesting witnesses should be called when two are alive nor that even assuming that one only need be called, he should at least be made to prove that another attesting witness besides himself saw the execution. 39 M. L. J. 463=21 M. L. T. 213=58 Ind. Cas. 80. Mere proof of the genuineness of the signature if the executant of a document does not dispense with the proof of its proper attestation of the document is one required by law to be attested before it can effectuate a transfer. 55 Ind. Cas. 501.

Proviso.—The effect of this proviso is that if the document in question be not a Will and if it be a registered document, no attesting witness need be called to prove its execution unless its execution is specifically denied by the other party. All the cases laying down a contrary principle are made obsolete by this proviso.

* This proviso has been added by Act 31 of 1926.

A. I. R. 1922 Sind. 235 ; 33 C. W. N. 248. The amendment of s. 68 of the Evidence Act by Act XXXI of 1926 is a provision relating to processual law and not to substantive law and therefore must be taken to be retrospective in its operation. 57 M. L. J. 588=1929 Mad. 881.

Cases.—6 N. L. R. 152 ; 2 C. W. N. 603 ; 5 C. W. N. 454 ; 29 C. 355 ; 5 C. W. N. 454 ; A. W. N. 1897. 146 ; 14 C. W. N. 1046 ; 22 Bom. L. R. 136 ; 67 Ind. Cas. 87 ; 35 C. L. J. 473 ; 14 L. N. 263 ; 1923 Nag. 322 ; 1923 Lah. 174.

69. If no such attesting witness can be found, or if the document purports to have been executed in the United Kingdom, it must be proved that the attestation of one attesting witness at least is in his handwriting, and that the signature of the person executing the document is in the handwriting of that person.

Scope.—This section is applicable only in cases where the document in question is a Will or an unregistered document or if it be any other document in that case if its execution is specifically denied. Vide proviso to section 68. In order that a case may attract the operation of s. 69 of the Evidence Act it must be proved that no such attesting witness can be found. 7 Pat. 312=110 Ind. Cas. 756=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 356.

Notes.—The plaintiffs sued the heirs of a mortgagor on a mortgage-deed, execution of which was denied. In order to prove the deed, witnesses were examined who were acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, who were admittedly dead. There was no evidence on record to show that the other attesting witnesses were not alive or were not subject to the process of the Court. There was only a statement by the plaintiff's pleader to the effect that he had been unable to ascertain their whereabouts. Held, that under the provisions of the Evidence Act, evidence could not be admitted to prove the signature of the attesting witnesses until the absence of all the attesting witnesses had been duly accounted for. 21 Ind. Cas. 225. See also 34 A. 615 ; 10 A. L. J. 217 ; 35 A. 364 ; 27 Ind. Cas. 866. When the Court of first instance comes to a finding as to a document having been "legally proved" within the meaning of this section, it cannot be legally interfered with by the appellate Court, especially when no objection was taken to the admissibility of the document at the time of the hearing. 32 Ind. Cas. 766. Ss. 68 and 69 read together were intended to lay down how a document which was required by law to be attested, could be proved, and the intention was, that if the provisions of the sections as to proof was complied with the document, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary must be considered proved, and that it was not the intention of the legislature that an attesting witness or some other witnesses should have to prove further that the document was in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses. 39 A. 109=41 Ind. Cas. 171. An illiterate witness may be an attesting witness. 12 A. L. J. 1114.

70. The admission of a party to an attached document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested.

71. If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence.

Scope.—Now this section is to be read subject to the proviso to section 68 supra. According to English law a document which requires attestation must be proved by one of the attesting witnesses and this is so even if the person by whom the document was executed has admitted its execution by himself. But this section deviates from that view and lays down that where its execution is admitted by the party an attesting witness need not be called. The term "admission" relates only to the admission of party in the course of the trial of a suit, and not to the attestation of a document by the admission of the party executing it. 27 C. 190; 7 N. L. R. 85; 7 C. W. N. 384. Non-admission of execution is effectual under this section unless it amounts to an acknowledgment of the formal validity of the instrument. 36 C. L. J. 373. The word "execution" in this section means that the party by affixing his signature or mark has signified his assent to the contents of the document, and if a party admits that he has done this, he admits execution. 24 Bom. L. R. 1296. This section was intended to dispense with the necessity of calling attesting witnesses and with formally proving execution in a case where the party admitted it. 19 A. L. J. 855. Where there are two executants to a mortgage-deed attestation may be according to law in respect of one of them but not in respect of the other. 47 Ind. Cas. 9. The admission referred to in this section is an admission made in the course of the proceedings in which the attested document is produced. 13 N. L. R. 197; see 47 B. 137; 38 C. L. J. 114; 1 Rang. 557; 74 Ind. Cas. 969; 74 Ind. Cas. 839; 27 C. 19; 38 A. 1=13 A. L. J. 881=30 Ind. Cas. 376; 47 Ind. Cas. 9; 11 Ind. Cas. 689=7 N. L. R. 85; 49 C. L. J. 347; 109 Ind. Cas. 576.

Scope.—This section is also to be read subject to the proviso of section 68. Where in a mortgage suit it was found that one of the attesters was dead and the other either denied or did not recollect the execution of the document, the execution of the same can be proved by other evidence. 1 Pat. 154. The mere fact that the attesting witnesses repudiate their signatures or make statement suggesting that they attested at the instance of persons other than the executants or in their absence, does not invalidate the document, if it can be proved by evidence of a reliable character that they have given false testimony. 48 Ind. Cas. 538. See 48 Ind. Cas. 624; 41 All. 250. The endorsements made by the registering officer amount to some prima facie evidence at least under this section, that the executant himself and as one representing, or personating him appeared before the registering officer and that upon being examined by the officer with reference to the document, he admitted he had executed it. Subject to compliance with the provisions of s. 68 an admission of execution, once it becomes admissible under this section, is good evidence in proof of execution, and there is nothing in law which prohibits a Court from treating it as sufficient by itself to establish the fact admitted. 13 N. L. R. 197.

Proof of document not required by law to be attested.

72. An attested document not required by law to be attested may be proved as if it was unattested.

Cases.—A suit was brought for sale of the mortgaged property. It was found that the mortgage was not executed in accordance with law and the suit was dismissed. In appeal the plaintiff gave up his right under the mortgage and asked for and obtained a simple money decree. Held, that the document not being properly attested the provisions of s. 68 of the Act and did not apply, and that it was admissible in evidence under this section. 13 A. L. J. 553; 29 Ind. Cas. 363.

73. In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing or seal is that of the person by whom it purports to have been written or made, any signature, writing or seal admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been written or made by that person may be compared with the one which is to be proved, although that signature, writing or seal has not been produced or proved for any other purpose.

The Court may direct any person present in Court to write any words or figures for the purpose of enabling the Court to compare the words or figures so written with any words or figures alleged to have been written by such persons.

This section applies also, with any necessary modification to finger-impression.

Legislative changes.—The last para was added by Act 5 of 1899.

Scope.—Under this section it is not necessary that the writing which is in dispute must itself be in terms express or indicate that it was written by the person to whom the writing is attributed. The word "purports" in the section means "alleged." 14 Bom. L. R. 313=15 Ind. Cas. 649. See also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 491; See also 48 Ind. Cas. 68=53 M. L. J. 698. Comparison of signatures is one of the modes of proving handwriting. Although where there is no other evidence, such proof would be regarded hazardous and inclusive, it cannot be regarded as an error in law to base the conclusion on such proof alone, and a Court of Second Appeal would have no power to set aside a finding based on such comparison. 11 M. L. T. 424=14 Ind. Cas. 741; see also 10 C. 1042; 37 C. 467; 16A. 151 (P. C.); 62 Ind. Cas. 882.

Finger-impression—A Court has power to direct an accused person to make finger-impression and the same is admissible in evidence. So also is the evidence of an expert concerning finger-impression. 2 Bur. L. J. 270; 1 Rang. 759 (F. B.); 1924 Rang. 115; 17 Cr. L.:J. 616=35 Ind. Cas. 492.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Public documents.

74. The following documents are public documents:—

- (1) documents forming the acts or records of the acts—
 - (i) of the sovereign authority,
 - (ii) of official bodies and tribunals, and
 - (iii) of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive whether of British India, or of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions or of a foreign country:
- (2) Public records kept in British India of private documents.

Cases.—Census Registers are not public documents within the meaning of this section. 6 Bom. L. R. 535. All the papers filed in a suit, in which a compromise is effected by a decision, form part of the record. Such a record is a public document. 25 W. R. 68. Letters between district authorities are public documents as they form records of acts of public authorities. Hence they are admissible in evidence under s. 74. 23 W. R. 272. Documents purporting to be abstract from, or copies of Government measurements, chittas, produced from the collectorate, there being nothing to show that they were the records of measurements by any Government officer, are not public documents. 7 C. 76. A circular by which the Director General of Post and Telegraphs notified that stamps of a certain kind would soon be issued to Post offices for sale to the public was not an act or record of an act of a public officer within the meaning of s. 74 of the Evidence Act or an order of Government within the meaning of s. 78. 115 Ind. Cas. 809=1929 M. W. N. 193.

Municipal proceedings are also public documents. 19 A. 293; but see 30 Ind. Cas. 643=16 Cr. L. J. 659.

Will filed in the office of the Registrar General of Ceylon is not a public document. 23 M. 499=10 M. L. J. 310. The loan Register of the Public Debt office in the Bank of Bengal is a public document. 31 C. 284=8 C. W. N. 125. Registers prepared and kept under the Land Registration Acts are public documents and admissible in evidence. 2 Pat. 839. A public document is one prepared by a public servant in the discharge of this official duty. Mahtab v. Kasar, 107 Ind. Cas. 618.

Private documents.

75. All other documents are private.

Private documents.—The list of public documents has been given in s. 74. That list is complete. All other documents besides those mentioned in s. 74 are private documents.

76. Every public officer having the custody of a public document, which any person has a right to inspect, shall give that person on demand a copy of it on payment of the legal fees therefor, together with a certificate written at the foot of such copy that it is a true copy of such document or part thereof, as the case may be, and such certificates shall be dated and subscribed by such officer with his name and his official title, and shall be sealed whenever such officer is authorized by law to make use of a seal, and such copies so certified shall be called certified copies.

Explanation.—Any officer who, by the ordinary course of official duty is authorised to deliver such copies, shall be deemed to have the custody of such documents within the meaning of this section.

Notes.—A right to inspect public documents is, however, assumed in this section of the Evidence Act. 20 M. 189. Ss. 76 and 77 refer to public documents, and are not applicable to kobalas. 22 W. R. 355. The contents of the jama bandi can be proved by the production of certified copies furnished as provided by ss. 76 and 77 of the Act. L. R. 3 A. 386 (Rev.).

77. Such certified copies may be produced in proof of the contents of the public documents or parts of the public documents of which they purport to be copies.

Scope.—Public documents can be proved by producing certified copies of the same. 3 O. C. 205. A certified copy of the order of a Court passed upon a compromise should be received in evidence, if offered in proof of the compromise, under this section, as it is a copy of a document forming the record of an act of a public judicial officer. 1 A. L. J. 369. See also 22 W. R. 355; 14 C. 486 (P. C.); 10 C. L. R. 469; 10 C. 608.

78. The following public documents may be proved as follows :—

Proof of other official documents.

- (1) Acts, orders or notifications of the Executive Government of British India in any of its departments or of any Local Government or any department of any Local Government,— by the records of the departments, certified by the heads of those departments respectively, or by any document purporting to be printed by order of any such Government :
- (2) The proceedings of the Legislatures,— by the journals of those bodies respectively, or by published Acts or abstracts, or by copies purporting to be printed by order of Government :
- (3) Proclamations, orders or regulations issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council, or by any department of Her Majesty's Government,— by copies or extracts contained in the London Gazette, or, purporting to be printed by the Queen's Printer :
- (4) The Acts of the Executive or the proceedings of the Legislature of a foreign country,— by journals published by their authority, or commonly received in that country as such, or by a copy certified under the seal of the country or sovereign, or by a recognition thereof in some public Act of the Governor General of India in Council :
- (5) The proceedings of a municipal body in British India,— by a copy of such proceedings, certified by the legal keeper thereof, or by a printed book purporting to be published by the authority of such body :
- (6) Public documents of any other class in foreign country,— by the original, or by a copy certified by the legal keeper thereof, with a certificate under the seal of a notary public, or of a British Consul or diplomatic agent, that the copy is duly certified by the officer having the legal custody of the original, and upon proof of the character of the document according to the law of the foreign country.

Scope.—Besides certified copies there are special ways of proving certain public documents which are pointed out in this section (Cunningham Ev. 170.).

Clause—(5)—30 Ind. Cas. 643=16 Cr. L. J. 659; 17 C. W. N. 531=18 Ind. Cas. 651.

Clause. (6)—15 C. W. N. 1053=14 C. L. J. 375.

PRESUMPTIONS AS TO DOCUMENTS.

79. The Court shall presume every document purporting to be a certificate, certified copy or other document, which is by law declared to be admissible as evidence of any particular fact and which purports to be duly certified by any officer in British India, or by any officer in any Native State in alliance with Her Majesty, who is duly authorized thereto by the Governor-General in Council, to be genuine:

Provided that such document is substantially in the form and purports to be executed in the manner directed by law in that behalf.

The Court shall also presume that any officer by whom any such document purports to be signed or certified, held, when he signed it, the official character which he claims in such paper.

Scope.—The registering officer's evidence is not necessary to prove the certificate of registration the genuineness of which is to be presumed under this section. 71 Ind. Cas. 805.

80. Whenever any document is produced before any Court, purporting to be a record or memorandum of the evidence, or of any part of the evidence, given by a witness in a judicial proceeding or before any officer authorized by law to take such evidence or to be a statement or confession by any prisoner or accused person, taken in accordance with law, and purporting to be signed by any judge or Magistrate, or by any such officer as aforesaid, the Court shall presume—that the document is genuine; that any statements as to the circumstances under which it was taken, purporting to be made by the person signing it, are true; and that such evidence, statement or confession was duly taken.

Scope.—The statements as to which this section says that certain presumptions shall be drawn, are statements or confessions taken in accordance with the law. The section does not render admissible any particular kind of evidence, but only dispenses with the necessity for formal proof in the case of certain documents taken in accordance with law. Section 80 does not operate to render it admissible. The section merely gives legal section to the maxim "Omnia praesumantur rite esse acta" with regard to documents taken in the course of a judicial proceeding. 9 M. 224=2 Weir. 125. But it must purport to be signed by a Judge or Magistrate, and where the person taking the deposition omits to claim the position of a Judge or Magistrate, the presumption that he is so, does not arise. The defect may be supplied by oral evidence. 1 L. B. R. 268. A confession by an accused person recorded by a Magistrate, who had no jurisdiction is also admissible. 10 C. P. L. R. Cr. 16. The attestation of a deposition by a Magistrate in the presence of the accused is not obligatory. 10 A. 174=A. W. N. 1888, 11; contra 18 C. 129. This section has no bearing on the question of the admissibility of a statement made by the deceased as a dying declaration. 9 P. R. 1900 Cr. See also. 11 B. H. C. R. 247.

81. The Court shall presume the genuineness of every document purporting to be the London Gazette or the Gazette of India, or the Government Gazette of any Local Government, or of any colony, dependency or possession or the British Crown, or to be a newspaper or journal or to be a copy of a private Act of Parliament printed by the Queen's Printer, and of every document purporting to be a document directed by any law to be kept by any person, if such document is kept substantially in the form required by law and is produced from proper custody.

Presumption as to Gazettes, newspapers private Acts of Parliament and other documents.

English Law.—The Government Gazettes of London, Edinburgh, and Dublin are admissible (and some times conclusive) evidence of the public, but not of the private matters contained therein. Phipson Ev. 296.

82. When any document is produced before any Court purporting to be a document which, by the law in force for the time being in England and Ireland, would be admissible in proof of any particular in any Court of justice in England or Ireland without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating it, or of the judicial or official character claimed by the person by whom it purports to be signed, the Court shall presume that such seal, stamp or signature, is genuine and that the person signing it held, at the time when he signed it, the judicial or official character which he claims.
and the document shall be admissible for the same purpose for which it would be admissible in England or Ireland.

Scope.—"The object of this section is to give currency in the Courts of India to the presumptions which with regard to certain classes of documents are recognised in the English Courts. Such documents are declared to be admissible in India as they would be in England, and it is no more necessary in an Indian Court than it would be in an English Court to prove the seal or signature or to prove that the person signing it held the office which he claims. This is founded on the Evidence Act, 1851 (14 and 15 Vict. c. 99), the effect of which is to make admissible in any part of the King's dominions, documents which without proof of the seal or signature or of the official character of the person by whom they purport to have been signed are admissible in English law." Cunningham Ev. 175-176. This section enacts that the document shall be admissible in India for the same purpose for which it would be admissible in England and Ireland. (Woodroffe Ev.)

83. The Court shall presume that maps or plans purporting to be made by the authority of Government were so made, and are accurate; but maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause must be proved to be accurate.

Principle.—The general ground of reception is that such documents contain the results of inquiries made under competent public authority and concerning matters in which the public are interested. Phipson 313.

Accuracy.—Accuracy of Amin's map means accuracy of drawing and measurement. It has no reference to correctness of boundaries etc., in relation to rights of parties. 25 W. R. 179. Government map is admissible under this section. 9 M. L. T. 415. But Government chittas made for its private use are not admissible in evidence against private parties for proving the character or tenure of the lands described therein. 9 C. 741. A thak bust map is presumed to be accurate under this section. 22 W. R. 519; 5 C. 822; 30 C. 291 (P. C.)=7 C. W. N. 193; 34 C. L. J. 205.

84. The Court shall presume the genuineness of every book purporting to be printed or published under the authority of the Government of any country, and to contain any of the laws of that country.

and of every book purporting to contain reports of decisions of the Courts of such country.

Scope.—The general rule, as to the proof of foreign laws, is that the law which is written, that is, statute law, must be proved by a copy properly authenticated; and that the unwritten law must be proved by the testimony of experts, that is, by those acquainted with the law. (Burr Jones, § 502) Lord Chief Justice, Denham observed in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Clark and F. 85: "There does not appear to be in fact any real difference of opinion; there is no question raised here as to any exclusive mode of getting at this evidence, for we have both materials of knowledge offered to be. We have the witness, and he states the law, which he says is correctly laid down in these books. The books are produced; but the witness describes them as authoritative, and explains them by his knowledge of the actual practice of the law. A skilful and scientific man must state what the law is, but may refer to books and statutes to assist him in so doing," California Civil Pro. Code lays down. "The oral testimony of witnesses skilled therein is admissible as evidence of the unwritten law of a sister state or foreign country, as are also printed and published books of reports of decisions of the Courts of such state or country, or proved to be commonly admitted in such Courts."

85. The Court shall presume that every document purporting to be a power of attorney, and to have been executed before, and authenticated by, a Notary Public, or any Court, Judge, Magistrate, British Consul or Vice-Consul, or representative of Her Majesty, or of the Government of India, was so executed and authenticated.

Cases.—A power-of-attorney given by the executors under a will to a certain person authorising him to apply for letters of administration, did not purport to have been executed in the presence of a Notary Public or any other of the persons designated in this section. 21 M. 492. In order to comply with the provisions of this section, the power-of-attorney must be executed before or be authenticated by one of the persons mentioned in the section. 16 C. 776. This section is mandatory. When a document purporting to be a power-of-attorney and to have been executed before, and authenticated by, a Notary Public is produced before the Court, an affidavit of identification as to the person purporting to make the power-of-attorney being the person named therein is unnecessary. 9 C. W. N. 985=33 C. 635. The language of the section does not warrant the assumption that the provision contained in this section is of an exhaustive character and that other legal modes of proving the execution of a power-of-attorney are not admissible. 21 M. 492. A registered power-of-attorney is admissible in evidence to prove the agency under this section and unless its genuineness is suspected in which case proof of its execution can be called for, the agent should be allowed to appear and act within meaning of O. III rule 2 of C. P. Code. 33 Ind. Cas. 661.

86. The Court may presume that any document purporting to be a certified copy of any judicial record of any country not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions is genuine and accurate, if the document purports to be certified in any manner which is certified by any representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India [in or for] such country to be the manner commonly in use in that country for the certification of copies of judicial records.

[An officer who, with respect to any territory or place not forming part of Her Majesty's dominions is a Political Agent therefor, as defined in section 3, clause (40), of the general Clauses Act, 1897, shall for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a representative of the Government of India in and for the country comprising that territory or place].

Legislative changes.—The words within brackets in para 1, have been substituted by Act 3 of 1891. The last para has been substituted by Act V of 1899, s. 4.

Scope.—This section lays down that if a copy of a foreign judicial record purports to be certified in a given way, the Court may presume it to be genuine and accurate. The section, however, does not exclude other proof. 2 Bom. L. R. 562; 27 C. 639=4 C. W. N. 429 (P. C.); 8 Mad. Jur. 14; 22 W. R. 303. The certificate required by law under this section cannot be dispensed with here because it can be obtained at any time. 5 Lah. 105.

Cases.—It is doubtful whether the notification in the Calcutta Gazette of the 8th April, 1879, by the then Deputy Commissioner of Cooch Behar, regarding the mode of certifying copies of judicial records as correct copies, after the Governor General in Council had, under s. 434 of the Civil Pro. Code, notified that decrees of Cooch Behar Courts might be executed as if they were decrees of British Indian Courts, was a compliance with the provisions of this section of the Evidence Act, when there was a representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar. 14 C. 546.

87. The Court may presume that any book to which it may refer for information on matters of public or general interest, and that any published map or chart, the statements of which are relevant facts and which is produced for its inspection was written and published by the person, and at the time and place, by whom or at which it purports to have been written or published.

Scope.—A Court is justified in referring to books published long before the suit, in which the usage of the institution and its history are described both being matters relevant to the suit. 15 M. 241.

88. The Court may presume that a message, forwarded from a telegraphic office to the person to whom such message purports to be addressed, corresponds with a message delivered for transmission at the office from which the message purports to be sent; but the Court shall not make any presumption as to the person by whom such message was delivered for transmission.

Scope.—This section allows the Courts to treat telegraphic messages received, as if they were the original sent, with the exception, that a presumption is not to be made as to the person by whom they were delivered for transmission and, unless the non-production of the original is accounted for secondary evidence of their contents is inadmissible. U. B. R. (1847-1901). Vol. 11, 384. The Court is forbidden by the express provisions of this section to make any presumption as to the person by whom the telegram was sent. 42 M. 885=37 M. L. J. 81.

Presumption as to due execution, etc., of documents not produced.

89. The Court shall presume that every document, called for and not produced after notice to produce, was attested, stamped and executed in the manner required by law.

Notes.—Where the attesting witnesses of a mortgage deed were dead, where it was proved that the mortgagor had executed the deed and that it had been returned to him at the time of the sale of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee and where the mortgagor failed to produce the deed before Court, though called upon to do so: Held that the execution of the mortgage deed was in view of this section of the Evidence Act satisfactorily established irrespective of the provisions of s. 68. 34 Ind. Cas. 168.

90. Where any document, purporting or proved to be thirty years old, is produced from any custody which the Court in the particular case considers proper, the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such document, which purports to be in the hand-writing of any particular person, is in that person's handwriting, and, in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested.

Explanation.—Documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which and under the care of the person with whom, they would naturally be; but no custody is improper if it is proved to have had a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the particular cases are such as to tender such an origin probable.

This explanation applies also to section 81.

Illustrations.

(a) A has been in possession of landed property for a long time. He produces from his custody deeds relating to the land, showing his titles to it. The custody is proper.

(b) A produces deeds relating to landed property of which he is the mortgagee. The mortgagor is in possession. The custody is proper.

(c) A, a connection of B, produces deeds relating to lands in B's possession which were deposited with him by B for safe custody. The custody is proper.

Scope.—A document thirty years old i. e. a document dated thirty years back proves itself, if produced from proper custody as an ancient document. Anderson v. Weston, 9 L. J. C. P. 194. The rule that "ancient documents" or those thirty years old, prove themselves, or in other words, are presumed to have been duly executed applies only to those coming from proper custody; that is, not necessarily from the strictly legal or most proper custody but from any custody consistent with their genuineness and legitimate origin, in which they might reasonably be expected to be found if they are what they purport to be. Bishop of Meath v. Mayor of Winchester, 3 Bingham, N. C. 183; Cockle Cas. 333. Under this section the Court can presume the genuineness of a document which was not thirty years old either on the date of the suit or in the date of its production but was thirty years old on the date when arguments were heard. 54 Ind. Cas. 368; see also 33 C. L. J. 382; 60 Ind. Cas. 96; 41 M. L. J. 310; 57 Ind. Cas. 786; 61 Ind. Cas. 959; 61 Ind. Cas. 125; 52 Ind. Cas. 314; 49 Ind. Cas. 419; 15 N. L. R. 192; 6 O. L. J. 311; 26 Ind. Cas. 117; 13 A. L. J. 921; 2 L. W. 509; 5 P. W. R. 1915.

No presumption can be made in favour of a copy of a document under this section. 16 N. L. R. 106=55 Ind. Cas. 426; contra, 16 L. W. 462; 16 L. W. 839; 29 C. L. J. 577. The fact that a document is more than 30 years old and is registered and that the genuineness of the signature of its executant on it is admitted may go to raise a presumption as to its genuineness. But such a presumption does not exclude the right of the person against whom the document is set up to rebut that presumption by showing that it was not properly attested and was therefore inoperative. 55 Ind. Cas. 501. It is open to a party when producing an old document to rely on the presumption under this section and also on its proof and the Court may presume a deed to be genuine even though it is not satisfied with the evidence tendered to prove its execution. 49 Ind. Cas. 419. In the case of a copy of a document 30 years old this section empowers the Court to presume that the copy is in the hand-writing of the person in whose handwriting it purports to be. 31 Ind. Cas. 579. A Court is entitled to presume under this section that a sale deed more than 30 years old is genuine. 35 Ind. Cas. 598. In practice a Court does not generally decide whether it will make the presumption or not under this section, until all the evidence in the case is before it. 10 A. L. J. 87. Where the Court of first instance presumed a document to be genuine under this section, it was competent for the first appellate Court to hold that it should not be presumed to be genuine and to reject it without calling for further proof of the same. 22 M. L. J. 217=14 Ind. Cas. 394.

Cases.—75 Ind. Cas. 57; 73 Ind. Cas. 66; 32 M. L. T. (H. C.) 89; 50 C. 526; 75 Ind. Cas. 660; 1923 Bom. 364; 1923 Bom. 293; 45 Mad. 92; 1923 A. 420 (2); 27 C. W. N. 964; 9 O. & A. L. R. 893; 13 A. L. J. 921; 19 O. C. 321; 97 P. W. R. 1916=34 Ind. Cas. 168.

OF THE EXCLUSION OF ORAL BY DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

91. When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other disposition of property, have been reduced to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or of such matter, except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions hereinbefore contained.

Exception 1.—When a public officer is required by law to be appointed in writing, and when it is shown that any particular person has acted as such officer, the writing by which he is appointed need not be proved.

Exception 2.—Wills [admitted to probate in British India] may be proved by the probate.

Explanation 1—This section applies equally to cases in which the contracts, grants or dispositions of property referred to are contained in one document and to cases in which they are contained in more documents than one.

Explanation 2.—Where there are more originals than one, one original only need be proved.

Explanation 3.—The statement, in any document whatever, of a fact other than the facts referred to in this section, shall not preclude the admission of oral evidence as to the same fact.

Illustrations.

(a) If a contract be contained in several letters, all the letters in which it is contained must be proved.

(b) If a contract is contained in a bill of exchange, the bill of exchange must be proved.

(c) If a bill of exchange is drawn in a set of three one only need be proved.

(d) A contracts, in writing, with B, for the delivery of indigo upon certain terms. The contract mentions the fact that B had paid A the price of other indigo contracted for verbally on another occasion.

Oral evidence is offered that no payment was made for the other, indigo. The evidence is admissible.

(e) A gives B, a receipt for money paid by B.

Oral evidence is offered of the payment.

The evidence is admissible.

Legislative Changes.—The words within brackets in exception 2, were substituted for the words “under the Indian Succession Act” by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (18 of 1872) s. 7.

Scope.—The general rule laid down in this section is that when the terms of a contract have been reduced to writing no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of a contract except the document itself, or in certain cases, secondary evidence of its contents. But this rule is subject to the important exceptions contained in ss. 95 and 97. 30 M. 397; L. B. R. (1872—1892), 650. Where the document containing the transaction is inadmissible for want of registration, no other evidence of the terms of the contract can be received. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 133. When the contract between the parties has been reduced to writing no evidence of it is admissible except the writing itself. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. 11, 396. A question is to who the contracting parties are not a question as to the terms of the contract within the meaning of this section. 31 M. 45.

Principle.—This rule is founded on the best evidence principle. (Phipson Ev. 506).

Contract.—It seems more probable that the word “contract” was employed in a wide and general sense with reference to the whole of the transaction or transactions between all the parties in their several respective relations. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. 11. 354.

Grant.—It is doubtful whether the word ‘grant’ in this section means a grant of property only or refers to other grants also. 27 M. 30.

Application.—Where a private transaction is required by law to be in writing. e. g. a Will, contract under the statute of frauds, or marine insurance, or where a contract, grant or other disposition of property though not so required, has been reduced to writing by agreement of the parties and is intended to be complete and operative as such,—no extrinsic evidence is admissible to supersede the document, or to prove the transaction independently. (Phipson Ev. 508). This rule is applicable even when the real terms were acted upon before reduction to writing and, although the document itself is inadmissible e. g., a bill of sale void for want of registration or stamp. Where, however, the oral transaction is independent of the document, e. g. where the possession of goods was taken on a certain understanding, although a receipt and inventory was also signed, or, where a loan of money is secured collaterally by a promissory note, oral evidence of the former is admissible. Even between strangers, the terms of the transaction can only be shown by the production of the document itself and not by oral testimony. (Phipson Ev. 509).

Exception (1).—The law assumes that any act done in public or any formal act privately performed will be done in due form by the person authorised to perform it. Harris v. Knight, 15 P. D. 170.

Exception (2).—The probate of a Will is in the nature of a public document, for it records the act of the Court in admitting the Will to probate. Moreover, a copy of the probate can be seen by any one at Court on payment of requisite fees. It constitutes the legal proof of the title of an executor and it is conclusive against all the world. It is a copy of the Will sealed with the seal of the Court granting the probate, and attached to a certificate which states that the Will has been proved and registered, and that administration of the goods of the deceased has been granted to one or more of the executors named therein. (Vide Powell Ev. 258).

Explanation (1).—Vide illustration (a).

Explanation (2).—Vide illustration (c).

Explanation (3).—Vide illustration (d) and (e)—Extrinsic evidence is sometimes admissible to prove the existence as distinguished from the terms of a transaction or relationship which has been reduced to writing. Payments of money may be proved by oral testimony, although a receipt for the same exists. 7 W. R. 384 ; 4 B. 126 ; 1 A. 442 ; 3 M. 533 ; 27 C. 951 (P. C.) = 4 C. W. N. 631.

92. When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms ;

Proviso (1).—Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto ; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, [want or failure] of consideration, or, mistake in fact or law.

Proviso (2).—The existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, may be proved. In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document.

Proviso (3).—The existence of any separate oral agreement, constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved.

Proviso (4).—The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved, except in cases in which such contract, grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents.

Proviso (5).—Any usage or custom by which incidents not expressly mentioned in any contract are usually annexed to contracts of that description, may be proved :

Provided that the annexing of such incident would not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract.

Proviso (6).—Any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts.

Illustrations.

(a) A policy of insurance is effected on goods "in ships from Calcutta to London." The goods are shipped in a particular ship which is lost. The fact that particular ship was orally excepted from the policy cannot be proved.

(b) A agrees absolutely in writing to pay B Rs. 1,000 on the first March, 1873. The fact, that at the same time an oral agreement was made that the money should not be paid till the thirty-first March cannot be proved.

(c) An estate called "the Rampore tea estate" is sold by a deed which contains a map of the property sold. The fact that land not included in the map had always been regarded as part of the estate and was meant to pass by the deed cannot be proved.

(d) A enters into a written contract with B to work certain mines, the property of B upon certain terms. A was induced to do so by a misrepresentation of B's as to their value. This fact may be proved.

(e) A institutes a suit against B for the specific performance of a contract, and also prays that the contract may be reformed as to one of its provisions, as that provision was inserted in it by mistake. A may prove that such a mistake was made as would by law entitle him to have the contract reformed.

(f) A orders goods of B by a letter in which nothing is said as to the time of payment, and accepts the goods on delivery. B sues A for the price. A may show that the goods were supplied on credit for a term still unexpired.

(g) A sells B a horse and verbally warrants him sound. A gives B a paper in these words: "Bought of A a horse for Rs. 500." B may prove the verbal warranty.

(h) A hires lodgings of B, and gives B a card on which is written—"Rooms, Rs. 200, a monthly." A may prove a verbal agreement that these terms were to include partial board.

A hires lodgings of B for a year, and a regularly stamped agreement, drawn up by an attorney, is made between them. It is silent on the subject of board. A may not prove that board was included in the term verbally.

(i) A applies to be for a debt due to A by sending a receipt for the money. B keeps the receipt and does not send the money. In a suit for the amount A may prove this.

(j) A and B make a contract in writing to take effect upon the happening of a certain contingency. The writing is left with B, who sues A upon it. A may show the circumstances under which it was delivered.

Legislative changes.—The words "want or failure" were substituted for the words "want of failure" by s. 8 of the Indian Evidence Act Amendment Act, 1872 (18 of 1872).

Notes.—The rule contained in this section is very ancient. Lord Bacon observed: The law will not couple and mingle matter of speciality, which is of higher account, with matter of averment which is of inferior account in law." (Bacon's Maxims, Reg. 23). "It would be inconvenient that matters in writing made by advice and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth of the agreement of the parties should be controlled by averment of the parties to be proved by the uncertain testimony of slippery memory." (Countess of Rutland's case, 5 Coke 256.)

Scope.—Parol evidence is not admissible to add to, vary, or contradict a written agreement, or any transaction in writing. Meres v. Ansel, 3 Wilson, 275; Cockle Cas. 339. "Another and a most important rule of evidence is also based upon the fact that the best method of preserving a clear recollection of the details of any transaction is to set them down in writing. It is for this reason that whenever the parties to any contract or grant or other disposition of property have set out its terms and conditions in writing, which they presumably intended to be a record of the transaction, the law forbids any attempt to establish any other terms by means of oral evidence. It would be manifestly unjust to allow either party to alter his liability by introducing terms which are not to be found in the document. Hence it is a clear rule of law that whenever a document purports to be the record of the final intention and agreement of two parties, who have entered into any contract or made any grant or transfer of property, no parol evidence is admissible to contradict or vary its terms." (Powell, Ev. 181) Oral evidence cannot be adduced to contradict the terms of a written document. 6 M. H. C. 393; see also L. B. R. (1872—1892), 538; 11 W. R. 450; 12 W. R. 264;

W. R. 1864, 388. Verbal evidence is not admissible to vary or alter the terms of a written contract in cases in which there is no fraud or mistake, and in which the parties intend to express in writing what their words import—as for instance to show that a deed of sale was intended to operate as a mortgage. 5 W. R. 68; 9 W. R. 251.

Proviso (1)—Parol evidence is admissible to show that a writing is not really the valid transaction which it purports to be. Such evidence may therefore be given to prove fraud, mistake illegality, incapacity, failure of consideration, or other matter affecting the validity of a writing as a document. (Dobell v. Stevens, 3 L. J. K. B. 89; Cockle Cas. 341).

Case.—82 Ind. Cas. 816.

Proviso (2)—Parol evidence is admissible to prove any collateral verbal agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, which is separable from it and not inconsistent with its terms, and which might naturally be omitted from the writing. (L. R. 3 Ex. 70=Cockle Cas. 343). There is no rule that there shall be only one agreement upon any subject. There may be two or more as in the case, if they can consistently stand together; and one may be written and the other oral. If proceedings are taken on the written agreement evidence may be given of the oral agreement. This is not “adding to” the written agreement although it may, at first sight look like it. (Cockle Cas. 343). In order that the parol evidence may be admissible to prove a collateral agreement, it must not conflict with, or be inconsistent, with the written document; the evidence must not amount in effect to adding additional terms to the writing. Angell v. Duke, 32 L. T. 320. This proviso applies where the document is of an informal character. 7 N. L. J. 25. In order to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement, oral evidence of subsequent conduct can under no circumstances be admitted. 4 Lah. 258.

Proviso (3)—Parol evidence to prove any collateral verbal agreement to the effect that a document, apparently complete and operative on its face, should be conditioned upon, and not operate until the happening of, a certain event, which has not occurred. Pym v. Campbell, 25 L. J. Q. B. 277. The case of a condition precedent to the performance of a contract in writing is different and evidence to prove such an oral agreement is admissible. It is open to a person who admits the execution of a promissory note to plead want of consideration. 45 A. 679. See also 25 Bom. L. R. 867.

Case.—1925 Rang. 83; 1924 A. 70; 26 O. C. 36; 71 Ind. Cas. 477.

Proviso (4)—Parol evidence is admissible to prove any subsequent verbal agreement rescinding or altering the terms of a written document, unless writing required by law to render the transaction in question enforceable, in which case such evidence cannot be given to alter the terms of such written document. (Goss v. Lord Nugent, 2 L. J. K. B. 127. Cockle Cas. 350). The clause does not exclude evidence of oral agreement substituting a new contract for a previous one in writing and registered. The clause refers only to an oral agreement to rescind or modify such contract. 169 P. R. 1883. The proviso does not exclude a distinct subsequent new oral agreement superseding the old one in toto. 14 P. R. 1889.

Cases.—2 Mys. L. J. 124; 74 Ind. Cas. 154.

Proviso (5)—Parol evidence is admissible to prove any local custom of general application, in order that it may be applied to the subject-matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing. (Wigglesworth v. Dallison Douglas, 201; Cockle Cas. 351). Parol evidence is admissible to prove any trade or mercantile custom or usage, either as to the obligations of the parties in such transactions as that in question, or as to the meaning of words or terms used, in order that it may be applied to the subject-matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing. (Brown v. Byrne, 23 L. J. Q. B. 313). Extrinsic evidence of custom and usage is admissible to annex incidents to written contracts, only when the incidents which it is sought to import into the contract are consistent. 17 B. 129. Notwithstanding an admission in a sale deed that the consideration has been received, it is open to the vendor to prove that no consideration has been actually paid. 22 A 370 P. C.; 10 C. L. J. 27.

Ind. Ev.—16

Proviso. (6)—A contract reduced to writing must be construed on a consideration of the document itself, with only such extrinsic evidence of circumstances as may be required to show the relation of the written language to existing facts. 36 Ind. Cas. 597.

In a suit for bond, evidence of non-payment of consideration is admissible. 82 Ind. Cas. 347. Where a bill of lading evidences a contract of shipping no evidence of any oral agreement varying its terms is admissible. 79 Ind. Cas. 456. Where a date is fixed in the contract for performing the contract oral evidence to extend the periods is not so absolutely repugnant to the express terms of the contract as to make it inadmissible. 76 Ind. Cas. 62. Evidence of subsequent oral agreement not to charge compound interest is admissible, where the document is a registered one. 1924 Cal. 38. In cases of patent ambiguity no evidence can be given to supply the defect. 80 Ind. Cas. 944. But parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of explaining latent ambiguities. Doe v. Needs, 6 L. J. Ex. 59. The view that there has been introduced into the law of India such a radical change in the Law of Evidence as would have the effect of excluding from the class of mortgages many transactions which before the Evidence Act would have been held to be within that clause is not correct. 47 M. 429 (P. C.). Evidence of acts and conduct of parties to show that certain terms of a contract were never intended to be acted upon from the beginning is not precluded by this section. 27 C. W. N. 336.

Cases.—4 Pat. L. T. 577 ; 36 Ind. Cas. 7.

Exclusion of evidence to explain or amend ambiguous document.

93. When the language used in a document is, on its face, ambiguous or defective, evidence may not be given of facts which would show its meaning or supply its defects.

Illustrations.

(a) A agrees, in writing, to sell a horse to B for Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,500.

Evidence cannot be given to show which price was to be given.

(b) A deed contains blanks. Evidence cannot be given of facts which would show how they were meant to be filled.

Notes.—There are two sorts of ambiguities, patent and latent. A latent ambiguity is one which does not appear from the words of the document itself, but is created or shown by extrinsic evidence. Obviously, similar evidence should be allowed to explain or remove it. A patent ambiguity is one apparent on the face of the document. Parol evidence is inadmissible to explain such an ambiguity. (Cockle Cas. 356). "A good test of the difference is to put the instrument into the hands of an ordinarily intelligent educated person. If on perusal he sees no ambiguity, but there is nevertheless an uncertainty as to its application the ambiguity is latent ; if he detects the ambiguity from merely reading the instrument, it is patent. Thus in illustration (b), the blanks would be patent ambiguities and they could not be filled in by parol testimony as to the intention of the parties etc. In illustration to s. 95, no one could detect any ambiguity from merely reading the instrument. The ambiguity does not consist in the language, but is introduced by extrinsic circumstances, and the maxim is quod ex facie oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur." Norton Ev. 279.

Scope.—Parol evidence is admissible to show the subject-matter to which for the persons to whom, a written document applies or refers ; and for such purpose to explain latent ambiguities. Such parol evidence may be of the surrounding circumstances or apparently, of statements of intention made by parties to a document. Doe v. Needs (1836) 6 L. J. Ex. 59. But parol evidence is not admissible to supply total blanks in written documents, or to explain the meaning of words or expressions so defective or ambiguous as to be meaningless in themselves, by showing what a party to such document intended to say. Baylies v. Attorney General, 2 At. 239. See 1, A. 875 ; 35 Cr. L. J. 87.

Exclusion of evidence against application of document to existing facts.

94. When language used in a document is plain in itself, and when it applies, accurately to existing facts, evidence may not be given to show that it was not meant to apply to

Illustration.

A sells to B, by deed, "my estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas." A has an estate at Rampur containing 100 bighas. Evidence may not be given of the fact that the estate meant to be sold was one situated at a different place and of a different size.

Scope.—"This section falls under the more general rule of English law that where the words of a document are free from ambiguity, and external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty, as to the proper application of the words, the document is to be construed according to the plain and common meaning of the words, and that, in such case, extrinsic evidence, for the purpose of explaining the document according to the supposed intention of the parties is inadmissible." Cunn Ev. 281. When the language used in a document is plain and applies accurately to existing facts, evidence is not admissible for the purpose of showing that it was not meant to apply to those facts. 29 Ind. Cas. 201. When a Court is executing an award it is only in cases where the words are ambiguous, or capable of more than one interpretation that oral evidence can be given as to their meaning. 78 Ind. Cas. 80.

Evidence as to the document unmeaning in reference to existing facts.

95. When language used in a document is plain in itself, but is unmeaning in reference to existing facts, evidence may be given to show that it was used in a peculiar sense.

Illustration.

A sells to B, by deed "my house in Calcutta."

A had no house in Calcutta, but appears that he had a house at Howrah, of which B had been in possession since the execution of the deed.

These facts may be proved to show that the deed related to the house at Howrah.

Scope.—This section and sections 96 and 97 lay down the rule as regards latent ambiguities. Parol evidence is admissible to show the subject-matter to which, or the persons to whom, a written instrument applies or refers; and for such purpose to explain the latent ambiguities. Such parol evidence may be of the surrounding circumstances, or apparently, of statements of intention made by parties to a document. Doe v. Needs, 6 L. J. Ex. 59. Cockle Cas. 355. Where the description of property sold in such that one portion of it applies to the whole of the house but the boundaries given below apply only to a portion of the same and both read together do not apply correctly either to the whole house or to a portion of it, a case of latent ambiguity arises. Extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of solving the question whether by the description of the property taken as a whole the intention was to convey the whole house or only a portion of it. 66 Ind. Cas. 442. See also 1923 S. 42; 71 Ind. Cas. 589.

96. When the facts are such that the language used might have been meant to apply to any one, and could not have been meant to apply to more than one of several persons of things, evidence may be given of facts which show which of those persons or thing it was intended to apply to.

Illustrations.

(a) A agrees to sell to B. for Rs. 1,000, "my white horse." A has two white horses. Evidence may be given of facts which show which of them was meant.

(b) A agrees to accompany B to Haidarabad. Evidence may be given of facts showing whether Haidarabad in the Deccan or Haidarabad in Sind was meant.

Scope.—Where there are two or more persons or things, and each of them exactly answers to the description in the will, then all manner of parol evidence is admissible (Powell Ev. 463.). When an instrument appears on its face to be free from ambiguity, but upon the endeavour being made to apply it to the persons or things indicated it transpires that the words are equally applicable to two or more things, this is called a latent ambiguity. In such a case extrinsic evidence is admissible to resolve it. The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties employed the language used applies to a modern as well as an ancient instrument. 36 C. L. J. 242. See also 72 Ind. Cas. 696. If the language of a document directly describes two sets of circumstances but cannot have intended to apply to both, evidence may be given to show to which it is intended to apply. 10 Bur. L. T. 246.

97. When the language used applies partly to one set of existing facts, and partly to another set of existing facts, but the whole of it does not apply correctly to either, evidence may be given to show to which of the two it was meant to apply.

Evidence as to application of language to one of two sets of facts, to neither of which the whole correctly applies.

Illustrations.

A agrees to sell to B "my land at X, in the occupation of Y." A has land at X, but not in the occupation of Y, and he has land in the occupation of Y, but it is not at X. Evidence may be given of facts showing which he meant to sell.

Scope.—This section is the converse of the preceding one in that there is language partially applicable to two sets of facts : here there is language partially applicable to two sets of facts, but wholly applicable to neither. In this case, as in the former, extrinsic evidence is admissible for discovering the meaning. It is an extension of the rule laid down in section 95. Cunningham's Evidence, 280. Such parol evidence may be of the surrounding circumstances, or apparently, of statements of intention made by parties to a document. Doe v. Needs, 6 L. J. Ex. 59. Parol evidence is admissible only when the ambiguities cannot be otherwise explained by construction of the contents. (Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jacob, 451; Cockle Cas. 356). Where in a sale certificate there are two descriptions of the property which cannot be reconciled, it is open to the Court to look at the decree and decide which governs the sale. 1924 A. 856.

98. Evidence may be given to show the meaning of illegible or not commonly intelligible characters of foreign, absolute, technical, local and provincial expressions, or abbreviations and words used in a peculiar sense.

Evidence as to meaning of illegible characters etc.

commonly intelligible characters of foreign, absolute, technical, local and provincial expressions, or abbreviations and words used in a

Illustration.

A, a sculptor, agrees to sell to B, "all my models." A has both models and modelling tools. Evidence may be given to show which he meant to sell.

Scope.—Put the case of short-hand writers' notes, when a Court, unskilled in the art of stenography must have explained or interpreted, before it can attach any meaning to the arbitrary signs. So, where the writing is that in ordinary use, but illegible, the evidence of experts may be adduced to decipher it; as also in the case of foreign laws; and all the other instances brought together in this section (Norton Ev. 284.) In order to interpret or ascertain the meaning of a written document parol evidence may be given of the meanings or sense in which, not only words, but also signs, symbols, private marks, or nicknames, have been used. Such evidence may be given although the words, etc., the meaning of which is in question, appear to have been used in a particular meaning only by the person whose document is under construction; and not so used by any class of persons or in any locality. Kell v. Charmer, 23 Beav. 195; Cockle Cas. 362. Various words in written documents which prima facie present no ambiguity may be interpreted by extrinsic evidence of usage; and their peculiar meaning, when found in connection with subject matter of the transaction, has been fixed, by parol testimony of the sense in which they were usually received. 34 C. L. J. 160. See also 68 Ind. Cas. 138.

Who may give evidence of agreement varying terms of document.

99. Persons who are not parties to a document, or their representatives in interest, may give evidence of any fact tending to show a contemporaneous agreement varying the terms of the document.

Illustration.

A and B make a contract in writing that B shall sell A certain cotton, to be paid for on delivery. At the same time they make an oral agreement three months' credit shall be given to A. This could not be shown as between A and B, but it might be shown by C, if it affected his interests.

Scope—This section, being merely an enabling provision, cannot be held to prohibit the reception of evidence as to a fact in issue or a relevant fact admissible independently thereof. 27 M. 329. The rule of exclusion of oral evidence, embodied in s. 92 of the Act, is limited in its operation to parties to the instrument, which is sought to be contradicted or varied, and to the representatives in interest. This section enables strangers to an instrument to prove the real nature of the transaction by parol evidence. 2 C. L. J. 338. This section gives free hand to persons who are not parties and by necessary implications when read with section 92, gives similar freedom to the executants of documents against such strangers. 4 N. L. R. 115. See also 8 Ind. Cas. 501; 3 A. L. J. 314. Section 99 is an enabling, section 92 is a disqualifying section. The word "varying" in this section covers the same ground as the word "contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from" in s. 92. 53 Ind. Cas. 242.

100. Nothing in this Chapter contained shall be taken to affect any of the provisions of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1895) as to the construction of wills.

Saving of provisions of Indian Succession Act relating to wills.

Scope—Act X of 1865 and Act XXI of 1870 have been repealed and re-enacted by Act 39 of 1925. So the provisions of this chapter is applicable to all instruments other than wills and to all wills which are not made in accordance with the provisions contained in that Act.

PART III.Production and effect of Evidence.

CHAPTER VII.OF THE BURDEN OF PROOF.

101. Whoever desires any Court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove that those facts exist.

Burden of proof.

When a person is bound to prove the existence of any fact, it is said that burden of proof lies on that person.

Illustrations.

(a) A desires a Court to give judgment that B shall be punished for a crime which A says B has committed.

A must prove that B has committed the crime.

(b) A desires a Court to give judgment that he is entitled to certain land in the possession of B, by reason of facts which he asserts, and which B denies, to be true.

A must prove the existence of those facts.

Different meaning of the term.—The expression "burden of proof" has been used in a double sense; (a) as meaning the duty of the person alleging the cause to prove it, (b) as meaning the duty of the one party or the other to introduce evidence.

The first is proper meaning of the term.—"The theory of burden of proof finds its application in the trial of every case; yet it is a simple principle and one easily understood. It relates to our way of trying a case, and has become from long usage so thoroughly a part of our system that it seems the only reasonable and natural method. The burden of proving a case is naturally upon the person who puts it forward. The burden of proof in any action is fixed by the pleadings upon the shoulders of the one party or the other. If the pleadings consist of the allegations of certain facts by the plaintiff, and their denial by the defendant the burden of proving the facts, be they negative or affirmative, is upon the plaintiff. In order to recover he must prove his case. If the plaintiff alleges certain facts, and the defendant admits those facts, but alleges other facts, which he claims to be a defence, the burden of proof is on the defendant. It is not upon the plaintiff, because it is not necessary for him to prove his case, on account of the admission of all the facts. An admission upon the trial does not affect the burden of proof. To relieve the plaintiff it must be a formal admission in the defendant's pleading of the facts which constitute the plaintiff's case. The defendant, if he sets up in his answer other facts which he claims to be a defence, is then the one who has alleged the facts which are in issue, and he must prove them." McKelvey's Law of Evidence p. 68.

Burden of proof—Before a Court can proceed to hear a case, it is obviously, necessary to determine which party shall begin, or upon whom the burden of proof of the whole case lies. The general rule is that the party who alleges any matter in issue must prove it. This would be simple enough if there were only one fact in issue, but there may be several facts in issue, the burden of proof of some being on one party and of others on the other party. The position is practically this, that the burden of proof lies at first on the party against whom judgment would be given if no evidence at all were adduced. When such party has given sufficient evidence to entitle him to judgment if no further evidence were given, the burden of proof shifts to the other party, and may be repeatedly so shifted. In a criminal case there is generally no difficulty, as all the allegations are invariably made by the prosecution, on whom the general burden of proof invariably lies. So the burden of proof of any particular fact in issue is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments. (Cockle's Cas. 123—124). See also, 35 C. 1051; 9 W. R. 192; 39 C. 245; 47 M. 337 (P. C.)=46 M. L. J. 546; 75 Ind. Cas. 733; 3 U. P. L. R. 44.

On whom burden of proof lies.

102. The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side.

Illustrations.

(a) A sues B for land of which B is in possession, and which, as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C, B's father.

If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession.

Therefore the burden of proof is on A.

(b) A sues B for money due on a bond.

The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud, which A denies.

If no evidence were given on either side, A would succeed as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved.

Therefore the burden of proof is on B.

Scope.—The general burden of proof is upon the party who would be unsuccessful in the case if no evidence at all were given, and such party has the right to begin. The burden of proof of any particular fact in issue is upon the party who alleges the affirmative thereof (Amos v. Hughes, 1 M. and Rob. 464; Cockle's Cas. 125). In determining burden of proof the Court should consider what is the substantive fact to be made out, and on whom it lies to make out. It is not so much the form of the issue which ought to be considered, as the substance and effect of it. Soward v. Leggath, 7 C. and P. 613. "The test, therefore, as to the burden of proof or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this: to ask one-self which party will be successful if no evidence is given, (or if no more evidence is given)...the parties from moment to moment may reach points at which the onus of proof shifts. As soon as he brings evidence which, until it is answered, rebuts the evidence against which he is contending, then the balance descends on the other side, and the burden rolls over until again there is evidence which once more turns the scale." Per Bowen L. J. in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Co., L. R. 11 Q. B. D. 440. In the same case Brett, M. R. says: "But, then, it is contended (I think fallaciously) that if the plaintiff has given prima facie evidence which, unless it be answered, will entitle him to have the case decided in his favour, the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant as to the decision of the question itself...I cannot assent to it. It seems to me that the proposition ought to be stated thus. The plaintiff may give prima facie evidence, which, unless it be answered either by contradictory evidence or by the evidence of additional facts, ought to lead the jury to find the question in his favour. The defendant may give evidence either by contradicting the plaintiff's evidence or by proving other facts. The jury have to consider, upon the evidence given upon both sides, whether they are satisfied in favour of the plaintiff with respect to the question which he calls upon to answer. If they are, they must find for the plaintiff; but if upon a consideration of the facts, they come clearly to the opinion that the question ought to be answered against the plaintiff, they must find for the defendant. Then comes the difficulty; Suppose that the jury, after considering the evidence, are left in real doubt as to which way they are to answer the question put to them on behalf of the plaintiff; in that case, also, the burden lies on the plaintiff. And if the defendant has been able by the additional facts which he has adduced to bring the minds of the whole jury to a real state of doubt, the plaintiff has failed to satisfy the burden of proof which was upon him." So the burden of proof fixes upon the party who has the duty of first going forward with the case. If he fails to introduce any evidence at all, or if he fails to introduce sufficient evidence to justify a submission of a case to the Court, the case, without any evidence being introduced by the other party, must go against him. If he introduces enough evidence to justify a submission of the case to the Court, the case may still be, as it were, hanging in the balance. The Court may or may not find from the evidence introduced that he has proved his case. If however, he has introduced sufficient evidence to make out what is known as a "prima facie case," then in the absence of evidence to controvert such a case, the Court, would be bound to find in his favour.

Right here we run up against the other sort of burden of proof noticed above, which is not really burden of proof at all, but only the use of that term to express something very different. When the plaintiff has introduced enough evidence to make out a prima facie case, the defendant unless he would see the verdict for the plaintiff, must take up the case, and introduce evidence to controvert or weaken the effect of that which the plaintiff has introduced. This is the burden of going forward with the evidence, or the "burden of proceeding," as it may be called to distinguish it from the "burden of proof." "The question of burden or onus of proof is only a rule for deciding on whom the obligation of going further, if he wishes to win, rests." Per Bowen, L. J. in Abrath v. North Western Railway, ubi supra.

103. The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person.

Illustrations.

(a) A prosecutes B for theft, and wishes the Court to believe that B admitted that theft to C. A must prove the admission.

B wishes the Court to believe that, at the time in question, he was elsewhere. He must prove it.

Scope.—The term "burden of proof" is used in two senses as regards (1) the whole case (2) particular facts. Section 102 deals with burden of proof of the first class and this section deals with burden of proof of the second class. The burden of proof of any particular fact in issue is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. It is only necessary to add, and to emphasise, that the substance, and not the mere form of the pleading is to be considered. The position can not be altered, nor can the Court be misled by the ingenious manipulation of language. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments unless by reason of their complexity or difficulty of proof or by virtue of some statutory provision the burden is upon the person denying the allegation, as will be seen below (Cockle's Cas. 123). The difference between this section and section 101, consists in this. By section 101 the party has to prove the whole of the facts which he alleges, to entitle him to judgment when the burden of the proof is on him. The present section provides for the proof of some one particular fact. The illustration sufficiently points to the meaning. The whole of the facts, however, numerous and complicated, which go to make up the person's guilt must be proved by the prosecution. If the prisoner wishes to prove a particular fact, his alibi, for instance, he must prove it. If the prosecutor wishes to prove the case, not by independent oral testimony, but by the isolated fact of the prisoner's admission, or if he wishes to throw that in as an additional fact, he must prove it. (Norton Ev. 289-90.)

Burden of proving fact to be proved to make evidence admissible.

104. The burden of proving any fact necessary to be proved in order to enable any person to give evidence of any other fact is on the person who wishes to give such evidence.

Illustrations.

- (a) A wishes to prove a dying declaration by B. A must prove B's death.
- (b) A wishes to prove, by secondary evidence, the contents of a lost document. A must prove that the document has been lost.

Scope.—The meaning of this section is that no person shall be allowed to give evidence before he has shown that he is in a legal position to do so. Vide s. 136, Clause 2, (Norton Ev. 290),

105. When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.

Illustrations.

- (a) A, accused of murder, alleges that by reason of unsoundness of mind he did not know the nature of the act, The burden of proof is on A.
- (b) A accused of murder, alleges that, by grave and sudden provocation, he was deprived of the power of self-control. The burden of proof is on A.
- (c) Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code provides that whoever, except in the case provided for by section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt, shall be subject to certain punishments. A is charged with voluntarily causing grievous hurt under section 325. The burden of proving the circumstances bringing the case under section 335 lies on A.

Scope.—In criminal cases, the general rule is that the prosecution must prove the facts alleged by it. This section is an exception to the general rule. Under the provision of this section, an answer setting up the right of private defence, must be supported by evidence, giving a full and true account of the transaction from which the charge against an accused person arises. No accused person can, at the same time, deny committing an act and justify it. 1 C. L. R. 62; A.W.N. 1898, 209; A. W. N. 1898, 210. The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing a case within any special exception or proviso contained in any part of the Penal Code is upon the person accused, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. 8 Ind. Cas. 259=11 Cr. L. J. 612. See also 7 A. L. J. 438; 11 C. L. R. 232 P. C.

Special exception.—The onus to show that a game is a game of mere skill is on the accused. 15 Cr. L. J. 279=23 Ind. Cas. 484; see 8 C. W. N. 714; U. B. R. (1893-1900; 207) 6 A. 200; 50 C. 318; 45 A. 329.

This section says nothing about pleas but places the burden of proof in certain circumstances on the accused. But if the prosecution has already performed the task for him by letting in evidence circumstances from which such a plea necessarily follows it is the duty of the Court to give him the benefit of it. 81 Ind. Cas. 901.

Burden of proving fact especially within knowledge. 106. When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him.

Illustrations

(a) When a person does an act with some intention other than that which the character and circumstances of the act suggest, the burden of proving that intention is upon him.

(b) A is charged with travelling on a railway without a ticket. The burden of proving that he had a ticket is on him.

Scope.—This is an exception to the general rule. Where the subject-matter of a party's allegation (whether affirmative or negative) is peculiarly within the knowledge of his opponent, it lies upon the latter to rebut such allegation. Phipson Ev. 37. In this connection Bayley J. : observed ; "I have always understood it to be a general rule, that if a negative averment be made by one party, which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the other, the party within whose knowledge it lies, and who asserts the affirmative, is to prove it, and not he who avers the negative." Vide R. v. Turner 5 L. S. 206. Where a suit was brought by the legal representative of a deceased person, who was killed at an accident, while travelling in the train of the defendant company, the onus of proving that there was no negligence on the part of the Railway company, lies on such company. This decision is supported not only by the ruling in the case of the Great Western Railway Company of Canada v. Braid (1 Moore's Privy Council Cases, N. S. P. 101) namely, that the fact of a breach on a line of Railway is prima facie evidence of improper construction or maintenance which is for the Railway Company to rebut, but also by the general rule of the law of evidence that when any fact is specially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that lies upon the person. 4 M.L. T. 251. See also 17 M. L. I. 339 ; 38 C. 127 ; 1 A. 53 (F. B.) 11 Ind. Cas. 202.

Burden of proving death of person known to have been alive within thirty years. 107. When the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is shown that he was alive within thirty years, the burden of proving that he is dead is on the person who affirms it.

Scope.—Where there is proof of the existence of a state of things and no evidence of its cessation, the presumption is that such state of things continues for a reasonable length of time. Hence, if the question is as to the life or death of a person who has been once shown to be living, the burden of proving him dead lies, at first, on the party who asserts the fact. Willson v. Hodges ; 2 East 312 ; if however, there be a question as to the exact date at which a person died, this is for the Jury, (R. v. Willshire, 6 Q. B. D. 366) and proof that he was alive at an antecedent date may or may not afford a reasonable inference that he was living at subsequent date. (Powell Ev. 411).

108. [Provided that when] the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is proved that he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, the burden of proving that he is alive is [shifted in to] the person who affirms it.

Legislative Changes.—The words within brackets were substituted by Act 18 of 1872.

Scope.—There is a presumption that a person who is proved not to have been heard of for seven years, by those who would be likely to hear of him if living is dead ; but there is no presumption that he died at any particular time. Nepeon v. Doe. 2 M. & W. 894 ; Cockle's Cas. 29. In Burden v. Henderson, 2 Sim & G. 360, Sir John Stuart, V. C. said :—"The principle on which the Court presumes the death of a person of whom no tidings have been received for a long period of time, is this—that, if he were living he would probably have communicated with, some of his friends and relatives. It is a conclusion which the Court draws from the probabilities of the case. It is quite clear, therefore, that when no such probability exists, the presumption cannot arise."

But this presumption will not arise if the person in question left his home under circumstances which rendered it improbable that he would communicate with his friends. There is no presumption as to the exact time, during the seven-years, when the person in question died. When that question is material, it must be a subject of distinct proof by the party interested in fixing the time; for there is no presumption as to when, during the seven years, the person in question died. (Powell Ev. 412). Ss. 107, and 108 lay down no rule as to the presumption of the exact time of the death of a missing person, so that whenever the question as regards the exact time of death arises, it must be dealt with according to the evidence and circumstances of each case, when the death is alleged to have occurred at any time not affected by the presumption of law as to the seven years. 8 A. 714=A. W. N. 1886, 239; 23 B. 296; 14 M. L. J. 464. The presumption of death under this section is a presumption that the man was dead when the question was raised, that is at the date of the suit, and not at any earlier period. The English law is otherwise. 37 C. 103=14 C. W. N. 341; 35 C. 25; 8 A. L. J. 1052 (F. B.); contra, 8 Ind. Cas. 55. This section supersedes the rule of Mahomedan Law that a man will be presumed dead only after 90 years from the date of his birth. 42 P. R. 1892.

Cases.—41 M. L. J. 295; 19 A. L. J. 713; 1 Pat. 475; L. R. 3 A. 393 (Rev.); 64 Ind. Cas. 468; 43 A. 673; 1923 Bom. 208; 1923 Lah. 174; 45 A. 466; 1923 M. 182; 47 B. 451.

109. When the question is whether persons are partners, landlord and tenant or principal and agent, and it has been shown that they have been acting as such, the burden of proving that they do not stand, or have ceased to stand, to each other in those relationships respectively, is on the person who affirms it.

Principle.—This presumption of a continuation is clearly one of the most practical importance. It is frequently quite impossible to prove, for instance the existence of a certain thing in a certain state or condition at the particular moment in question. It is sufficient with the aid of this presumption, to prove such existence and state at such an earlier time that, according to its nature it may fairly be presumed to have lasted to the moment in question (Cockle's Cas. 29).

Scope.—Here the presumption arises from the probability of the continuance of things once shown to exist. Price v. Price, 16, M. & W. 232. Where, therefore, partners continue their business as before, after the partnership has expired; Clarke v. Peace, 33 L. J. Ch. 250; or a tenant holds over after the expiration of his lease. Torraino v. Young, 6 C. & P. 8; or if in respect to the relation of principal and agent; Royan v. Lambs, 12 Q. B. D. 460; if the facts existing be once established, the continuance of the partnership, the tenancy or authority on the old footing will be presumed. Norton Ev. 295.

Partners.—11 P. R. 1827.

Tenants.—4 C. 314; U. B. R. (1892-1896). Vol. II. 363; U. B. R. (1892-1901) Vol. II, 414.

110. When the question is whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving, that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner.

Scope.—The fact of possession as owner is sufficient prima facie evidence of ownership without the aid of any documentary proof or title deeds on the subject, until such further evidence is rendered necessary in support of the prima facie case of ownership which they made, in consequence of the adduction of some contrary proof on the other side. Robertson v. French, 4 East, 130. The fact of possession is clearly relevant to the fact of ownership as the former undoubtedly renders the latter probable. The person who possesses and acts as owner is generally the owner. (Cockle's Cas. 85). "The acts of enjoyment from which ownership of real property may be inferred are very various, as for instance the cutting of timber, the repairing offences or banks, the perambulation of boundaries of a manor or parish, the taking of wreck on the foreshore, and the granting to others of licenses or leases under which possession is taken and held; also the receipt of rents from tenants of the property; for all these acts are fractions of that sum total enjoyment of which characterises dominium." (Wills 60). If a person is in actual possession, that is evidence that he is seised in fee. Doe v. Penfold, 8 C. and P. 536; Jones v. Williams 2 M. and W. 526. Possession is prima facie evidence of complete ownership throwing the burden of showing that it is held on some inferior title, upon him who seeks to dislodge the possessor. 1 B. 91. The word "possession" in this section is to be understood as opposed to judicial possession and to denote actual present possession. U. B. R. 1905, Rv. 7; 25 B. 287. The person who wants to oust a person in possession must prove absolute private proprietary title. U. B. R. (1897—1901), Vol. II. 416. Such title must be subsisting title and not previous ownership. U. B. R. (1897—1901), Vol. II. 421. See 13 Bur. L. T. 203.

Cases.—36 C. L. J. 396; 1923 Bom. 361; 27 C. W. N. 305.

111. Where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence.

Illustrations.

(a) The good faith of a sale by a client to an attorney is a question in a suit brought by the client. The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the attorney.

(b) The good faith of a sale by a son just come of age to a father is in question in a suit brought by the son. The burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the father.

Scope.—The principle on which this section is based is a long established doctrine of equity and it has been repeatedly applied with special emphasis by the Lords of Privy Council to transactions to which the women of this country are parties. A. W. N. 1884, 84. This principle is applied by the English Courts to transactions between legal or medical practitioners and their patients, spiritual advisers and members of their congregations, trustees and their cestues quetrustees, guardians and wards. (Cunningham's Evidence, 305). Where the husband stood in a position of active confidence to his wife and she entered into a transaction under his guidance, the burden of proving good faith is on him. To uphold the transaction, it must be shown she was given that care and advice which was due to her in her situation. 78 Ind. Cas. 850.

112. The fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, Birth during marriage con- or within two hundred and eighty days after its clusive proof of legitimacy. dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten.

Scope—"In every case where a child is born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by sentence of divorce, sexual intercourse is presumed to have taken place between the husband and wife, until that presumption is encountered by such evidence as proves, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that such sexual intercourse did not take place at any time, when, by such intercourse the husband could, according to the laws of nature, be the father of such child." Per Sir James Mansfield in Ranbury Peerage Case 1 L. J. Ch. 106. The presumption of legitimacy arising from the birth of a child during wedlock, the husband and wife not being proved to be impotent, and having opportunities of access to each other, during the period in which a child could be begotten and born in the course of nature, may be rebutted by circumstances inducing a contrary presumption. This presumption can be rebutted by proof of non-access or impotence. But such evidence should exclude all doubt. 16 Cr. L. J. 84. A boy born seven months after marriage was also considered legitimate. 26 Ind. Cas. 969.

113. A notification in the Gazette of India that any portion of British territory has been ceded to any Native State, Prince or Ruler, shall be conclusive proof that a valid cession of such territory took place at the date mentioned in such notification.

Notes—It is doubtful whether the Government of India without the sanction of the Parliament can make a valid cession of territory. Vide 10 B. H. C. R. 37 on appeal to Privy Council in B. 367.

114. The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

Illustration.

The court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession;

(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars;

(c) that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed was accepted or endorsed for good consideration;

(d) that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or states of things usually cease to exist, is still in existence;

(e) that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed;

(f) that the common course of business has been followed in particular cases;

(g) that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it;

(h) that, if a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled to answer by law, the answer, if given, would be unfavourable to him;

(i) that when a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligator, the obligation has been discharged.

But the Court shall also have regard to such facts as the following; in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before it:—

as to illustration (a)—a shop-keeper has in his till a marked rupee soon after it was stolen, and cannot account for its possession specifically, but is continually receiving rupees in the course of his business;

as to illustration (b)—A, a person of the highest character, is tried for causing a man's death by an act of negligence in arranging certain machinery. B, a person of equally good character, who also took part in the arrangement, describes precisely what was done, and admits and explains the common carelessness of A and himself; as to illustration (c) a crime is committed by several persons. A, B and C, three of the criminals, are captured on the spot and kept apart from each other. Each gives an account of the crime implicating D, and the accounts corroborate each other in such a manner as to render previous concert highly improbable;

as to illustration (d)—A, the drawer of a bill of exchange, was a man of business. B, the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence; as to illustration (e)—it is proved that a river ran in a certain course five years ago, but it is known that there have been floods since that time which might change its course;

as to illustration (f)—a judicial act, the regularity of which is in question, was performed under exceptional circumstances;

as to illustration (g)—the question is, whether a letter was received. It is shown to have been posted, but the usual course of the post was interrupted by disturbances.

as to illustration (h)—a man refuses to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he is sued, but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family :

as to illustration (i)—a man refuses to answer a question which he is not compelled by law to answer, but the answer to it might cause loss to him in matters unconnected with the matter in relation to which it is asked :

as to illustration (j)—a bond is in possession of the obligor, but the circumstances of the case are such that he may have stolen it.

Scope.—Where the fact giving rise to such a presumption as may be drawn under this section, is undisputed and no explanation negating the presumption is offered, the Court is justified in laying the onus proper where, but for the presumption, the onus could not be laid. But, where explanation negating the presumption is forthcoming, the Court is not in a position to draw the presumption until it has heard the evidence in support of the explanation and, therefore, must ignore the presumption for the purpose of determining where the onus proper lies, on the principle "when conflicting evidence on a point covered by a presumption of law is to be gone into, the presumption of law is functus officio as presumption of law." Such a presumption, therefore, cannot shift "the burden of proof" in the strict sense of that term and the most it can effect is a shifting of "the burden of evidence" the burden of going forward with new evidentiary matter and s. 4 of the Act indicates that it is for the Court which is taking evidence to decide whether such a presumption is strong enough to produce even that limited effect. 1 N. L. R. 169. The illustrations appended to this section are not statements of the law qualified only by particular exceptions. They are merely what they call themselves, illustrations or instances. 69 Ind. Cas. 257.

Illustration (a).—The Court may presume, from the possession of stolen property, that the possessor is either the thief or has received it knowing it to be stolen property, unless the possession is accounted for. 15 P. R. 1891 Cr. Where a deaf mute was found in possession of stolen property a week after the theft, held in the special circumstances of the case, the presumption authorised under this illustration cannot be applied. 25 Ind. Cas. 330. Where after six months after the dacoity some common ornaments were found in the possession of the accused, held, that, having regard to the nature of the ornaments, which were of common description, and were likely to pass from hand to hand, the case was not covered by s. 114, illustration (a), and the accused should not have been called upon to explain their possession. 3 A. L. J. 808=29 A. 138 ; see also A. W. N. 1881, 155. But when stolen property is found in a person's possession soon after the theft the Court may presume that the party is either a thief or a receiver of stolen property. 2 Weir. 489 ; 1 L. B. R. 382 ; 13 Cr. L. J. 140 ; 11 A. L. J. 94 ; 14 L. W. 418 ; 32 C. L. J. 119. Illustration (a) to the section is merely an example, and it cannot be read as limiting the presumptions which may be drawn from recent possession of stolen property. 17 Cr. L. J. 32=32 Ind. Cas. 160 ; see also 14 L. W. 418 ; but see 32 L. L. J. 19=59 Ind. Cas. 204. Before a presumption under this illustration can arise, it must be proved that the goods found in the possession of the accused have been stolen. The presumption cannot arise when it may reasonably be presumed that the property in question is stolen property. In a criminal case the onus is on the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt the guilt of the accused and the burden never changes. 52 C. 223=88 Ind. Cas. 515 ; see also 1 Rang. 520 ; 21 A. L. J. 836 ; A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 180. Presumption referred to in illustration (a) is not confined to charges of theft but extends to all charges however penal not even excluding murder. This presumption relates to offences of dacoity also. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 513=9 Pat. 606. Where accused persons are found in possession of stolen property soon after the theft and they are unable to explain their possession they can be held guilty of receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen. L. R. 5 A. 81. If he gives any explanation which in the opinion of the jury may possibly be true although they do not necessarily believe it then the crown cannot rely upon the presumption and must prove the guilt of the accused just as in any other criminal case accused did not prove his innocence. 35 C. W. N. 291. Where a person is found in possession of stolen property after it was stolen the Court may presume under illustration (a) that he is a thief. A. I. R. 1934 All. 455=35 Cr. L. J. 1092.

Possession must be recent—It is clearly established that, in order to put the accused on his defence, his possession of the stolen article must be recent, although what shall be deemed recent possession must be determined by the nature of the article stolen, i. e. whether they are of a nature likely to pass rapidly from hand to hand; or of which the accused would be likely from his situation in life or vocation, to become possessed innocently. Best Ev. § 211. Possession of stolen goods about nine months after the loss does not give rise to any presumption under this section. 130 Ind. Cas. 800=32 Cr. L. J. 614=A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 85; see also 54 B. 171=A. I. R. 1930 B. 155; A. W. N. 1881, 155; 1912 M. W. N. 97=13 Ind. Cas. 128=13 Cr. L. J. 140; 6 A. 224; A. W. N. 1887, 281; 1912 M. W. N. 362=15 Ind. Cas. 315=13 Cr. L. J. 475. But the presumption would arise where the accused is in possession of the stolen property three weeks after it was stolen. 3 M. L. T. 30=7 Cr. L. J. 30; 12 C. P. L. R. Cr. 5; 1914 M. W. N. 84=25 Ind. Cas. 330. The mere fact that the accused points out the place in which stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under s. 114 or justify his conviction of the offence of receiving stolen property. But that presumption would arise when the accused is not able to account for his possession of such stolen articles. 126 Ind. Cas. 876=31 Cr. L. J. 1104=32 Bom. L. R. 574=A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 244. No fixed time can be laid down to determine whether possession of article is recent or otherwise. But every case must be judged on its own facts. If a few stolen articles are found in possession of a person under circumstances which may give rise to the probability of his coming by them honestly sometime after the theft the presumption under the law might not arise against him. 27 Cr. L. J. 617=94 Ind. Cas. 361=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 925; see also A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 213=109 Ind. Cas. 801; 3 A. L. J. 808=4 Cr. L. J. 436=29 A. 138; 1 L. B. R. 39; 26 M. L. T. 389=11 L. W. 43=53 Ind. Where the possession of the property stolen some years before, reasonably and circumstantially explained, such explanation should not be rejected merely because it is unproved. 15 P. R. 1891 Cr.; see also 19 Cr. L. J. 189=43 Ind. Cas. 605; 8 M. L. T. 418.

Possession must be exclusive—Vide L. B. R. (1872-1892) 397; 111 Ind. Cas. 732=29 Cr. L. J. 924; Ur. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I p. 171.

Clause (b).—When there is no sufficient corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice, a conviction should not be based on such evidence. By this section the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. 22 M. 491; 9 Ind. Cas. 978; 24 Ind. Cas. 146; 14 B. 331; 6 Bom. L. The term "accomplice" signifies a guilty associate in crime; or when the witness sustains such a relation to the criminal act that he could be jointly indicted with the accused he is an accomplice. 27 M. 271. There is no rule of law or practice that the self-incriminating portion of the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of belief unless corroborated. 6 Bom. L. R. 443. The testimony of an accomplice is not required by law to be corroborated. The rule of practice which lays down the requirement should be applied with due regard to the varying circumstances of each particular case. 15 Bom. L. R. 288; see also 28 C. 339; 16 C. W. N. 669; 63 I. C. 612; 2 Pat. L. T. 757. Corroboration need not be direct. A. I. R. 1935 All. 132. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient. A. I. R. 1935 All. 85; A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 125. Corroboration need not be in all details. Corroboration in some particulars, satisfying Court of truth of accomplice's story implicating accused is sufficient. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 125. For further discussion on this topic. Vide notes under s. 133, infra.

Illustrations (c).—This illustration authorises the presumption that a particular judicial or official act has been performed regularly, but it does not authorise the presumption without any evidence that the act has been performed. 6 C. W. N. 845.

Illustration (d).—This illustration does not compel, but certainly permits, the Court to make a presumption as to the continuance of the state of things.

29 Ind. Cas. 294=20 C. W. N. 48. Proof of the existence at a particular time of a fact of a continuous nature gives rise to rebuttable presumption within logical limits that it existed at a subsequent time or has previously existed. The limits of time within which the inference of continuance possesses sufficient probative force to be relevant must obviously vary with each case—always strongest in the beginning, the inference steadily diminishes in force with lapse of time at a rate proportionate to the quality of permanence belonging to the fact in question, until it ceases or perhaps is supplanted by a directly opposite inference. To put the matter shortly it will be inferred that a given set of facts whose existence at a particular time is once established in evidence continues to exist as long as such facts usually exist. 36 C. L. J. 336.

Illustration (e).—There is a well known maxim of law omnia preæsumantur rite esse acta: this is an inference of reasonable probability arising out of the experience of mankind. The law assumes that any act done in public or any formal act privately done will be performed in due form by the person authorised to do it. (Powell Ev. 391). Under this section, it is presumed that official acts have been regularly performed. "Regularly performed" means performed with due regard to form and procedure. 1921 Pat. 343=63 Ind. Cas. 226; 96 Ind. Cas. 571; 68 Ind. Cas. 740; 4 Lah. L. J. 448.

Illustration (f).—The posting of a letter, if proved and if the same is not returned by the Dead Letter Office raises the presumption that it must have reached the addressee. 45 M. L. J. 817.

Illustration (g).—The presumption indicated in this illustration arising from non production of evidence cannot displace the contrary inference supported by adequate evidence. 63 Ind. Cas. 740 (P. C.) In other cases the Court can draw such inference from non-production. 62 Ind. Cas. 697. Non-production of the account books justified the presumption under this section. 25 Ind. Cas. 749; (1922) P. C. 378. Where documents relevant to the case are withheld by the Crown, the Court will be justified in drawing an adverse inference against the Crown. 36 C. L. J. 346; 36 C. L. J. 245.

Illustration (i).—This illustration only refers to presumptions that may be raised. It does not follow that such presumption would shift the onus of proof. 18 M. L. T. 94. Under the clause (1) it is open to the Court to presume that if a document creating an obligation is in the hands of the obligor, the obligation is discharged. But in raising such a presumption the Court has to take into regard any facts or circumstances indicating that it might have been stolen. The burden shifts as the evidence is developed and when both the parties produce their evidence, the question on whom the initial onus lay ceases to be of much importance. 25 O. C. 125.

Presumption of death.—Where among some relations the evidence on the question who died first is quite evenly balanced, the Court is entitled to say the probabilities are in favour of the younger man surviving the elder. 1922 Bom. 347.

CHAPTER VIII.

ESTOPPEL.

115. When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing.

Illustration.

A intentionally and falsely leads B to believe that certain land belongs to A, and thereby induces B to buy and pay for it.

The land afterwards becomes the property of A, and A seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that, at the time of the sale, he had no title. He must not be allowed to prove his want of title.

Estoppels.—Most admissions can be withdrawn ; the fact that they were made remains, but the party who made them can be heard to explain that he made them rashly and carelessly, or under an honest misapprehension, or even that he knew what he said to be false. But an admission or statement may be made in so conclusive a manner or under such special circumstances that the law will not permit the person who made it to contradict it. He is said to be estopped from denying his former statement. In other words, an stoppel is a “bar which the law sometimes sets in the way of one who is endeavouring to maintain the contrary of that which he once asserted in words, or unequivocally implied by his conduct.” The rules of evidence forbid to allege the existence of a state of things inconsistent with his previous representation, when to do so would be inequitable or contrary to the policy of the law. Neither he nor any one claiming under him can give any evidence to contradict it. This is what Lord Coke meant by his quaint definition. “An estoppel is where a man is concluded by his own act or acceptance to say the truth”—Powell Ev. 446.

Kind of estoppel.—According to English law estoppels are of three kinds : (1) By Record ; (2) By Deed ; and (3) By Conduct.

Estoppels by Record.—The judgment of a competent Court is an instance of this kind of estoppel. Vide ss. 40-44 supra.

Estoppels by Deed.—Where a man has entered into a solemn engagement by deed under his hand and seal as to certain facts, neither he nor any one claiming through or under him is permitted to deny the facts. (Phipson Ev. 606).

Estoppels by conduct.—Estoppels by conduct, or, as they are still sometimes called, estoppels by matter in pais, were anciently acts of notoriety not less solemn and formal than the execution of a deed, such as livery of seisin, entry, acceptance of an estate, and the like and whether a party had or had not concurred in an act of this sort was deemed a matter which there could be no difficulty in ascertaining and then the legal consequences followed. The doctrine has, however, in modern times been extended so as to embrace practically any act or statement by a party which it would be unconscionable to permit him to deny. The rule has been authoritatively stated as follows :—“Where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time”—Phipson Ev. 608. This kind of estoppel has been dealt with in ss. 115 to 117. The object of the rule in this. The Court is to dispense justice and the rules of procedure should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice. 46 A. 214.

Scope.—The rule is laid down in Pickard v. Sears (6 A. and E. 469). That rule is that “where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, or to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the time. In Freeman v. Cooke-Parke. B. observed. By the term “wilfully” however, in the rule, we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly ; and if, whatever a man’s real meaning may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true, and believe that it was meant he should act upon it, and did act, upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth ; and conduct by negligence or omission, when there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect.” No actual verbal representation is necessary to give rise to estoppel. It is quite enough that the conduct of the party leads another to act in the belief that he asserts no claim to the property. 19 I. A. 203 ; 80 Ind. Cas. 994 ; see also 34 A. 398 (P. C.) ; 77 Ind. Cas. 214. This section is not exhaustive. 33 C. 915, contra, 35 C. 904. There is no peculiarity in the law of estoppel in India as distinguished from that of England. The law is clearly and substantially set forth in this section. 40 A. 728=51 I. A. 326 P. C. Where all the facts are within the knowledge of both parties there is no scope for the doctrine of estoppel. The phrase “act on such belief” must have altered his position with reference to have the subject-matter of the representation. 25 Bom. L. R. 1170. This section may no doubt override ss. 91 to 94 because the law of estoppel is one which must prevail against a rule of procedure only. 72 Ind. Cas. 931. A person who knows the truth can hardly be allowed to rely upon an estoppel arising from a false representation. (1923) M. W. N. 225 ; 30 C. 539=5 Bom. L. R. 421 (P. C.). Where A and B convey property to C making him believe that they are sole owners of the property and C acting on that representation takes the property for consideration. A and B are estopped from asserting the title of a third person to the property of D who was aware of the title of that third person. 36 C. L. J. 78. Where a statement is relied upon as an estoppel, it must be proved that the statement caused a change of position of the parties setting up the estoppel. 62 Ind. Cas. 869 ; 57 Ind. Cas. 263 ; 4 C. L. J. 323 ; 7 A. 511. The rule of estoppel is a rule of evidence and ought to be pleaded with sufficient clearness. 61 Ind. Cas. 807. The meaning of this section is that no declaration, act or omission will amount to an estoppel unless it has caused the person whom it concerns to alter his position ; and to do this, he must both believe the facts stated or suggested by it and act upon such belief. 7 A. 878 (F. B.) See also 7 C. L. R. 481.

Estoppel—Point of Law.—There is no estoppel by reason of misrepresentation on a point of law and a transaction which is invalid can be declared to be such at the instance of either party alone. 82 Ind. Cas. 126. Representation on a matter of law i. e. as to the validity of an adoption creates no estoppel. 70 Ind. Cas. 653. An admission on a point of law is not an admission of a "thing" so as to make the admission a matter of estoppel within the meaning of this section. 21 A. 285.

Person.—A minor is not estopped from setting up his minority. A judicially interpreted the Contract Act makes contracts entered into by a minor void and the court should not be compelled to pronounce them valid by the provisions contained in the Evidence Act. It is not apparently the case that the word "person" in the section does not include a "minor" or "certified lunatic" or "other person" under a disability to contract owing to imbecility of judgment. But it might be held that such a person could not be held to have intentionally caused anything. When the law of contract declared that an infant would not be liable upon a contract or in the Statute of Fraud in connection with a contract, he cannot be made liable on the same contract by means of an estoppel ; in other words there can be no doubt about the general law that the principle of estoppel which is a provision of adjective law cannot be invoked to defeat the plain provision of a Statute. 71 Ind. Cas. 161 ; 20 C. W. N. 418, see also 9 A. L. J. 103 ; 8 A. L. J. 1058 ; contra. 31 A. 21 ; 29 C. 126 ; 15 C. W. N. 239 ; 21 B. 198 ; 19 Bom. L. R. 561 ; 23 Bom. L. R. 975. In the latter case it was also held that "person" includes minor or lunatic. See also 25 C. 316. 1 Lah. 389 ; 60 Ind. Cas. 267. Section 115 does not apply to minors. The term "person" in that section applies to one who is of full age and competent to enter into a contract. 26 C. 381=3 C. W. N. 468.

Declaration, act or omission.—The estoppel under this section may arise by reason either of a declaration, an act or an omission but in either case there must be intention on the part of the person against whom the estoppel operates to cause or permit a belief in the mind of another. In the case of a mere omission no such intention can well be imputed unless the true facts are known to the person whose omission is in question, but where there is a deliberate declaration or act causing or permitting such belief and inducing another to act upon it, it must be presumed that such declaration or act was intended to have its ordinary and natural effect upon the mind and actions of the other party. 67 Ind. Cas. 744. Estoppel is purely a personal bar operating against the person whose conduct constitutes it, and against his privies and representatives. 14 C. 491 ; 17 M. 473.

Adoption.—Where an adoption made by a Hindu widow is invalid for want of permission from her deceased husband she is not estopped from repudiating or denying it by the circumstance of her having for sometime treated it as effective. An adoption ab initio invalid may be raised to the level of a valid adoption on the ground of estoppel only when, by a course of conduct long continued on the part of the family which has purported to affiliate him, his situation in his original family has been so altered that it would be impossible to restore him in it. 18 M. 145=5 M. L. J. 44 ; see also 14 B. 312 ; 18 M. 53 ; 19 B. 374. An adoption being according to the Hindu theory both a religious and a secular act, estoppel cannot take the place of a religious act on which rests the conventional Hindu belief that a valid adoption generates filial relation and religious competency to make funeral and annual offerings with efficacy. 18 M. 53. See also 19 B. 374. Where a widow, has intentionally induced a boy's father to believe that she had authority from her husband to adopt and that, in pursuance of that authority, she received the boy in adoption, she would be estopped from denying such authority. 169 P. R. 1812 ; see also 15 M. 486=2 M. L. J. 114.

116. No tenant of immoveable property, or person claiming through such tenant, shall, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had at the beginning of the tenancy, a title to such immoveable property ; and no person who came upon any immoveable property by the license of the person in possession thereof shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such license was given.

Principle.—In Cook v. Loxley, 5 T. R. 5 ; Cockle Cas ; 52. Lord Kenyon, C. J. laid down : "Conforming to the uniform decisions in all the cases upon this subject, I ruled at the trial, and continue to entertain the same opinion, that in an action for use and occupation it would not be permitted to a tenant, who occupies land by the license of another, to call upon the other to show the title under which he let the land. This is not a mere technical rule, but is founded on public convenience and policy."

Scope.—The estoppel of a tenant is one of the most noticeable instances of estoppel by conduct (Cockle Cas. 53). By this section, a tenant is only precluded, "during the continuance of the tenancy," from denying that the landlord had "at the beginning of the tenancy" a title to the property, the subject of the tenancy. The words of the section leave it open to the tenant to show that his landlord's title has subsequently expired. 11 Bom. L. R. 1093. So the tenant is not estopped from showing that the title of his landlord has expired since the tenancy commenced, or that the land in question is not comprised in the lease. There is no inconsistency in holding the land and at the same time proving such matters. (Cockle Cas. 53). A licensee also is not permitted under this section to deny that the licensor had a title to the possession of the property at the time when the license was given to him to enter, though there was no relationship of licensor and licensee subsisting between the parties during the period sued for. 13 Ind. Cas. 512. This section does not debar one, who has once been a tenant, from contending that the title of his landlord has lost or that his tenancy has determined. 2 M. 226. The words "at the beginning of the tenancy" in this section can only apply to cases, in which the tenants are put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned, and not to a case where the tenants have previously been in possession. 11 C. 519 ; 73 Ind. Cas. 450. A tenant is not precluded by an admission of tenancy from showing that the nature of the tenancy asserted by him to the knowledge of the landlord has been, for a period, prescribed by the Limitation Act, pro tanto adverse to the right to evict either at will or on notice given. 27 B. 515=5 Bom. L. R. 274. Persons not claiming possession of land under the tenant are not estopped from denying the title of the lessor. 44 A. 671=20 A. L. J. 615.

117. No acceptor of a bill of exchange shall be permitted to deny that the drawer had authority to draw such bill or to endorse it ; nor shall any bailee or licensee be permitted to deny that his bailor or licensor had, at the time when the bailment or license commenced, authority to make such bailment or grant such license.

Explanation (1)—The acceptor of a bill of exchange may deny that the bill was really drawn by the person by whom it purports to have been drawn.

Explanation (2)—If a bailee delivers the goods bailed to a person other than the bailor, he may prove that such person had a right to them as against the bailor.

Scope.—This is another instance of estoppel by conduct. A bailee is estopped from denying that the bailor had, at the time, the bailment was made, authority to make it. (Gosling v. Birmic 7 Bing. 339). But when the bailee is evicted by title paramount, he can set up that title against the bailor with the consent of the person whose title is set up. (Biddle v. Bond, 6 B. and S. 225 ; Rogers v. Lambert, 24 Q. B.D. 573), cited in Powell, 474. The acceptance of a bill is also deemed a conclusive admission as against the acceptor, of the existence of the drawer and the genuineness of his signature, and of his capacity to draw (Sanderson v. Collman, 1842, 11, L. J. C. P. 270); and if the bill be payable to the order of the drawer, of his capacity to endorse. (Taylor v. Croker, 1803, 4 Esp. 127); and if it be drawn by procuration of the authority of the agent to draw in the name of the principal. (Taylor, 595). This section is in accordance with English Law. Sections 115, 116 and 117 of the Evidence Act are not exhaustive as regards the doctrine of estoppel by agreement. 10 C. W. N. 747=33 C. 915.

Forged endorsement.—No body is entitled to any thing through a forged negotiable instrument, in as much as the forged endorsement is a nullity in itself. 36 C. 229.

CHAPTER IX.

OF WITNESSES.

118. All persons shall be competent to testify, unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or any other cause of the same kind.

Explanation.—A lunatic is not incompetent to testify, unless he is prevented by his lunacy from understanding the questions put to him and giving rational answers to them.

Comment.—Evidence must be given by legally competent witnesses. The normal man is competent, and presumed to be so. The law of competency is therefore practically the law of incompetency, consisting of rules of exclusion.

Formerly there were several grounds of exclusion of witnesses, the Chief being (1) incompetency from interest, and (2) incompetency from mental incapacity. On the former ground, not only were parties themselves and their husbands and wives excluded, but also all persons who were in pari jure with either party, or otherwise substantially interested in the proceedings. Successive Statutes have abolished this kind of incompetency, leaving the fact of interest in the proceedings to affect credibility only—Cockle Cas. 243.

Scope.—Under this section all persons are competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are incapable of giving evidence or understanding the questions put to them by reason of tender years, extreme old age, disease whether of body or mind or any others cause of the same kind. Even a lunatic, if he is capable of understanding the questions, put to him and giving rational answers is a competent witness. The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the administration to him of an oath or affirmation, and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed. In determining the question of competency the Court under this section, has not to enter into inquiries as to witness's religious belief, or as to the knowledge of the consequence of falsehood in this world or the next. It has to ascertain, in the best ways it can, whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding, he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard or done on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years or of very advanced age can satisfy these requirements, his competency as a witness is established. Queen Empress v. Lal Sahai, 11 A. 183. According to English law every sane person is a competent witness in both civil and criminal cases, except a child who does not understand the nature of an oath. Powell Ev. 197. But in India, where a person is competent to testify according to the provisions of this section, but is unable owing to his tender age, to comprehend the nature of an oath or affirmation. s. 13 of the Oaths Act relieves the Court of the necessity of administering an oath or affirmation to him; and the evidence of such a person recorded without oath or affirmation may be admitted. 10 O. C. 373=7 Cr. L. J. 89. See also 16 B. 359; 14 B. L. R. 204 (F. B.). 11 C. P. L. R. C. 16; contra 16 M. 105 10 A. 207; 21 A. 183.

How to ascertain competency.—By this section, the Legislature has not prescribed an inflexible rule of universal application to the effect that, before a child of tender years is questioned, the Court must by preliminary examination test his capacity to understand and to give rational answers and must form an opinion as to the competency of the witness before the actual examination commences. 18 C. W. N. 147=41 C. 406; contra, 11 C. W. N. 51; 20. Bom. L. R. 365.

Tender years.—There is no fixed period of legal discretion under which an infant is an incompetent witness. The rule by which an infant under seven years of age cannot commit a crime, because the law presumes him conclusively not to have sufficient intelligence for the act, has no analogy in the law of evidence (Per Patteson. J. in R. v. Williams, 7 C & P. 320). Age is immaterial; and the question is entirely one of intelligence, which, whenever a doubt arises, the Court will ascertain to its own satisfaction by examining the infant as regards his understanding. (Powell Ev. 215). A Judge can act on the evidence of a child of tender years if he is impressed by its intelligence and demeanour and the evidence given bears no marks of tutorage. 6 Lah. L. J. 474. A Court should ascertain first of all by some simple questions whether a child is competent to understand and answer questions. 1923 P. 91.

Idiot.—An idiot is one that hath no understanding from his nativity, and therefore is by law presumed never likely to attain any; and such a person is incapable of giving evidence. The presumption is always in favour of sanity; hence the onus of proving the unsoundness of mind of any person tendered as a witness rests on those who dispute his sanity. Harrod v. Harrod 1 K. & J. at p. 9, Powell Ev. 213.

Deaf and Dumb.—Deaf and dumb persons were formerly regarded as idiots, and therefore incompetent to testify, but the modern doctrine is that if they are of sufficient understanding, they may give evidence either by signs or through an interpreter or in writing. (Powell Ev. 214).

Explanation.—A lunatic is one that had understanding but by disease, grief, or other accident has lost the use of his reason. As long as the suspension of the intelligence continues, the lunatic is incompetent to testify; but his competency is restored during a lucid interval. Moreover, the disability does not extend to cases of monomania as to some immaterial matter, nor where the hallucination permits the witness to understand the nature of the duty which is expected from him. (R. v. Hill, 2 Den. 254). But where a person is tendered as a witness who is believed to be suffering from monomania, a preliminary inquiry as to his capacity to give evidence must be instituted and he himself must be examined. (Powell Ev. 214).

119. A witness who is unable to speak may give his evidence in any

Dumb witnesses. other manner in which he can make it intelligible, as by writing or by signs; but such writing must be written and the signs made in open Court. Evidence so given shall be deemed to be oral evidence.

Deaf and Dumb Witness.—The same rule would no doubt, be applicable in the case of deaf, or deaf and dumb witnesses, who might be communicated with by special signs, provided the Court was satisfied as to the reality and accuracy of such communication. Competence to understand the questions put to him and to give rational answers is under section 118 the one essential qualification for a witness. Deaf and dumb persons were formerly excluded as witnesses on the presumption of their idiocy. It is now ascertained how groundless this presumption is. (Cunningham 349). If the witness can write, it is a safe practice to receive his testimony in this form than through the medium of signs. Morrison v. Lennard, 3 C. & P., 127. Persons deaf and dumb from birth were formerly excluded and classed with idiots. Education has now opened their ears, and metaphorically loosened their tongues. (Norton Ev. 306).

Deemed to be oral evidence.—Presumably to exclude the effect of putting in writing which would give the opposite side the right of a reply. (Norton Ev. 336).

Parties to civil suit, and their wives or husbands. Husband or wife of person under criminal trial.

120. In all Civil proceedings the parties to the suit, and the husband or wife of any party to the suit, shall be competent witnesses. In criminal proceedings against any person, the husband or wife of such person, respectively, shall be a competent witness.

English law.—At common law, a husband or wife of a party to the proceedings, civil or criminal, is incompetent to give evidence either for or against such party. Bentley v. Cooke, 3 Doug. 422. The wife of a person charged with against upon her is a competent witness against him, at common law. R. v. Arir, 1 Strag. 633. Now by Statute, they are made competent witnesses as regards certain offences. But a distinction must be drawn between competency and compellability of witnesses. A wife, though rendered competent by statute to give evidence against her husband in certain criminal proceedings, is not thereby made compellable to give such evidence, unless there is a clear and specific enactment to that effect. Leach v. Rex, L. R. (1912) H. C. 305. In civil cases there appear to have been no exceptions at all.

Scope of this section.—Under this section there is no exception either in civil or criminal cases. Such witnesses are always competent. See also 6 W. R. Cr. 21. It appears that this section was only enacted to nullify the effect of the English law on the subject. The ground is covered by s. 118. This section provides that parties to the suit shall be competent witnesses. 49 C. 345.

121. No Judge or Magistrate shall, except upon the special order of some Court to which he is subordinate, be compelled to answer any questions as to his own conduct in Court as such Judge or Magistrate, or as to anything which came to his knowledge in Court as such Judge or Magistrate; but he may be examined as to other matters which occurred in his presence whilst he was so acting.

Illustrations.

(a) A, on his trial before the Court of Session, says that a deposition was improperly taken by B, the Magistrate. B cannot be compelled to answer questions as to this, except upon the special order of a superior Court.

(b) A is accused before the Court of Session of having given false evidence before B, a Magistrate. B cannot be asked what A said, except upon the special order of the superior Court.

(c) A is accused before the Court of Session of attempting to murder a police-officer whilst on his trial before B, a Session Judge. B may be examined as to what occurred.

Scope.—The privilege given by this section is the privilege of the witness, i. e. of the Judge of whom the question is asked. If he waives that privilege, it does not lie in the mouth of any other person to assert it. 3 A. 573=A. W. N. 4881, 37. But Judicial officers are not exempted from giving evidence upon matters which they saw, when sitting as Judges unless they arrive at such knowledge by virtue of an investigation which they were making as Judges. 2 Weir. 777.

122. No person who is or has been married shall be compelled to disclose any communication made to him during marriage by and person to whom he is or has been married; nor shall he be permitted to disclose any such communication, unless the person who made it, or his representative in interest, consents, except in suits between married persons, or proceedings in which one married person is prosecuted for any crime committed against the other.

Principle.—This enactment rests on the obvious ground that the admission of such testimony would have a powerful tendency to disturb the peace of families, to promote domestic broils, and to weaken if not to destroy that feeling of mutual confidence, which is the most endearing solace of married life. The protection is not confined to cases where the communications sought to be given in evidence is of a strictly confidential character, but the seal of the law is placed upon all communications of whatever nature which pass between husband and wife. O'connor v. Majori banks, (1842. 11 L. J. C. P. 267). It extends also to cases in which the interests of strangers are solely involved, as well as to those in which the husband or wife is a party on the record. It is, however, limited to such matters as has been communicated during marriage. (Taylor § 909 A).

Scope.—This section protects the individuals, and not the communication if it can be proved without putting into the box for that purpose the husband or the wife to whom the communication was made. 22 M. 1=2 Weir 778. Under this section no communication between the husband and wife can be disclosed by the one against the other without the consent of the party concerned. The consent can not be implied. It is incumbent upon the Court to ask the party, against whom the evidence is to be given, whether he or she would consent to the evidence being given and not to admit it unless such consent is given. 244 P. L. R. 1913; see also 218 P. L. R. 1913; 40 C. 891; 10 P. R. 1914 Cr.; 1923 Lah. 40.

123. No one shall be permitted to give any evidence derived from unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, except with the permission of the officer at the head of the department concerned, who shall give or withhold such permission as he thinks fit.

Scope.—Statements made before the Income tax Collector do not relate to affairs of State and so are not governed by this section. 32 M. 62=19 M. L. J. 263; 4 M. L. T. 317. Any officer having the custody of records, not being records of which the production may on special grounds be refused, is bound to produce them on receiving a summons to that effect. 2 Weir 781. Statements made by witnesses as in the course of a departmental enquiry into the conduct of Public Officers, who were subsequently put upon their trial on charges of taking illegal gratification are not privileged under ss. 123, 124 or 125, 16 C. W. N. 431=13 Cr. L. J. 445=15 Ind. Cas. 77. The question whether a communication is privileged or not is determined by the occasion on which and the circumstances in which it is made, and not by the possibility of the persons receiving it making further communication to others in circumstances that would not be privileged. The privilege attaching to an official publication (e. g., a Government resolution) is not absolute, but is subject to the condition that it is without malice actual, express and in fact. 6 Bom. L. R. 131 (on appeal from 27 B. 189.)

124. No public officer shall be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence, when he considers that the public interests would suffer by the disclosure.

Scope.—This section follows the English law and makes the public officer the Judge as to whether a communication made to him in official confidence should or should not be disclosed. If he thinks that the public interest would suffer by such disclosure, he is entitled to refuse to disclose the communication. The mere fact that the publication of the communication might cause a scandal in the office will not justify a refusal to disclose it. 7 C. W. N. 246. See also, 2 M. W. N. 369. The words "communication in official confidence" import no especial degree of secrecy and no pledge or discretion for its maintenance, but include generally all matters communicated by one officer to another in the performance of duties. The words have the same meaning as "professional confidence" used in s. 126. In English law the privilege as to production of public documents before Courts of law extends even to those which pass from hand to hand, in a public office, in the usual course of business with no special mark of secrecy upon them and the ground on which the privilege rests is that it would be detrimental to the public interests, to produce them. 26 Ind. Cas. 723. An officer's refusal to disclose a document on grounds of public policy is final. It is not competent to the Court to call for and examine the secret archives of the State in order to satisfy itself of their confidential nature. 47 Ind. Cas. 225. But a Custom officer cannot claim a privilege as to the admission, made to him by the Inspector although what took place between the two Superintendents might probably be privileged. 22 C. W. N. 451. No objection can be taken in appeal. 44 M. L. J. 132. A Court should decide whether the document is privileged or not. 44 A. 360=20 A. L. J. 140.

125. No Magistrate or police officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence, and no Revenue-officer shall be compelled to say whence he got any information as to the commission of any offence against the public revenues.

Explanation.—"Revenue-officer" in this section means any officer employed in or about the business of any branch of the public revenues.

Legislative changes.—This section has been substituted by Act 3 of 1887.

Scope.—The words "information as to the commission of any offence" in this section only enact the rule which as said by Eyre C. J. in Hardy's Case (24 How St. Tr. 808) has universally obtained, on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons, who are the channels by means of which the detection it made, should not be unnecessarily disclosed. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 937 = Cr. Rg. 47 of 1897. Eyre, C. J. observed. "It is perfectly right that all opportunities should be given to discuss the truth of the evidence given against the prisoner; but there is a rule, which has universally obtained on account of its importance to the public for the detection of crimes, that those persons who are the channels by means of which that detection is made, should not be unnecessarily disclosed; if it can be made to appear that really and truly it is necessary for the investigation of the truth of the case that the name of person should be disclosed, I should be very unwilling to stop it; but it does not appear to me that it is within the ordinary course to do it, or that there is any necessity for it in this particular case." Even when no objection is taken the Court should exclude such evidence. 40 C. 898. Statements made in the course of judicial proceedings are absolutely privileged, but police report does not enjoy such absolute privilege. 22 A. L. J. 597 = 46 A. 471. So the defence cannot elicit from individual prosecution witnesses whether he was a shy or an informer also cannot discover from police officials the names of persons from whom they had received information. 19 C. W. N. 676 = 42 C. 957. Having regard to the distinction drawn throughout Act VII of 1873 (Bombay) between a police officer and an officer of the salt department, the latter cannot be considered a Police officer within the meaning, s. 125 Evidence Act and may therefore be compelled to say whence he obtained an information as to the commission of an offence, Rat. Un. Cr. C. 183. So also Superintendent of the Post office is not privileged under this section. 2 Bom. L. R. 329 followed in 16 C. W. N. 431 = 15 Ind. Cas. 77. A distinction should be drawn between questions which a witness can not be compelled to answer and those which he cannot be permitted to answer. The later class of questions might properly be forbidden, but questions of the former class are in no way barred; a witness has merely the right of refusing to answer such questions, without any hostile inference being drawn from his refusal. 10 Ind. Cas. 917 = 12 Cr. L. J. 277.

126. No barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil shall at any time be permitted, unless with his client's express consent, to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such barrister, pleader, attorney or vakil, by or on behalf of his client, or on to state the contents or condition of any document with which he has become acquainted in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment, or to disclose any advice given by him to his client in the course and for the purpose of such employment.

Provided that nothing in this section shall protect from disclosure—

- (1) any such communication made in furtherance of any [illegal] purpose;
- (2) any fact observed by any barrister, pleader, attorney and vakil, in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment.

It is immaterial whether the attention of such barrister, [pleader], attorney or vakil was or was not directed to such fact by or on behalf of his client.

Explanation—The obligation stated in this section continues after the employment has ceased.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a client, says to B, an attorney;—"I have committed forgery and I wish you to defend me."

As the defence of a man known to be guilty is not a criminal purpose, this communication is protected from disclosure.

(b) A, a client, says to B, an attorney;—"I wish to obtain possession of property by the use of a forged deed on which I request you to sue."

This communication, being made in furtherance of a criminal purpose is not protected from disclosure.

(c) A, being charged with embezzlement, retains B, an attorney to defend him. In the course of the proceedings, B observes that an entry has been made in A's account book, charging A with the sum said to have been embezzled, which entry was not in the book at the commencement of his employment.

This being a fact observed by B in the course of his employment, showing that a fraud has been committed since the commencement of the proceedings, it is not protected from disclosure.

Legislative changes.—The words within brackets have been added by Act 18 of 1872.

Principle.—This rule is established for the protection of the client, not of the lawyer ; and is founded on the impossibility of conducting legal business without professional assistance and on the necessity, in order to render that assistance effectual, or securing full and unreserved intercourse between the two. The privilege may be waived by the client, therefore, but not by the adviser. (Phipson Ev. 170).

Scope.—A legal adviser, (whether, barrister, attorney, pleader or vakil) will not be allowed without the express consent of his client, to disclose oral or documentary communications made or obtained in professional confidence. (Phipson Ev. 169) The law in India relating to professional communications between a solicitor and a client is the same as in England, and in interpreting this section, the High Court may rightly refer to English cases. The use of the word "disclose" in this section shows that the communication to be privileged must be of a confidential character between the solicitor and the client. It is not everything that the solicitor learns in the course of his dealings with the client that is privileged from a disclosure. It must be a matter communicated to him confidently for the purpose of obtaining his professional advice. The solicitor claims the privilege as that of his client. He must, then, state the name of the person for whom he claims the privilege. Where one client mentions the name of another client in a communication made to the solicitor in the course and for the purpose of professional employment by him, and the latter consults the solicitor afterwards on business relating to his own affairs, then, unless the name of the latter is communicated to the solicitor confidentially for the purpose of being advised by him, on the express understanding that it should not be communicated to the rest of the world, the solicitor is bound to disclose the name of the client. A solicitor is not at liberty to disclose the matter of employment, without his client's consent. This section protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be shown aliunde that such business or the communication made in respect of it, falls within the proviso (1) or (2). Where in an interview between a solicitor and his client, a third person of his client's company makes a statement to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment the solicitor is not privileged from disclosing the name of the person making the statement, unless the name was made the subject of a special confidence, and it was stipulated by or on behalf of his client that it was not to be disclosed. 18 B. 263 ; See also L. B. R. (1893-1900) 358. 26 Bom. L. R. 1887. This section must be construed as applying to all persons who came in within the category of "pleader" as defined in s. 4 (a) of Cr. P. Code and includes therefore a muktear. 25 C. 736=2 C. W. N. 484. The consent required by this section should be given on each occasion when a communication of the kind described is sought to be made admissible in evidence. A. W. N. 1890, 172. The communication must be of a confidential or private nature. 3 B. 91. The communication must be made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as a pleader. 4 Bom. L. R. 469 ; 5 Bom. L. R. 122. A Court has no power to order the production of a document which is privileged. 7 Bom. L. R. 709. See also 16 C. W. N. 742. Neither a formal retainer, nor payment of fees is necessary to constitute the relationship of solicitor or client ; it is enough if the solicitor is consulted in any way in his professional character. The sale, purchase, and conveyance of estates or negotiations for a loan are within the scope. According to English Law communications in furtherance of a fraud or crime are not protected. But according to this section communication made in furtherance of any illegal purpose are not protected. (Vide Phipson Ev. 172). Trade secrets communicated to a vakil in course of the professional advice is also protected. 16 A. L. J. 987.

Section 126 to apply to interpreters etc.

127. The provisions of section 126 shall apply to interpreters, and the clerks or servants of barristers, pleaders, attorneys and vakils.

Scope.—Where a communication is made to a pleader's clerk he is not at liberty to disclose the communication. 26 C. 53=2 C. W. N. 649; U. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. II, 368. The communications must have been confidentially made for the purpose of employment or the knowledge confidentially obtained solely in consequence of it, to be privileged (Garder v. Irvin, 4 Ex. D. 49; O' Shea v. Wood, 1861, P. 286)—Phipson Ev. 172.

128. If any party to a suit gives evidence therein at his own instance or otherwise he shall not be deemed to have consented thereby to such disclosure as is mentioned in section 126; and if any party to a suit or proceeding calls any such barrister, [pleader], attorney or vakil as a witness, he shall be deemed to have consented to such disclosure only if he questions such barrister, attorney, or vakil on matters which, but for such question he would not be at liberty to disclose.

Legislative changes.—The word within brackets has been inserted by Act 18 of 1872.

Scope.—This privilege may however be waived by the client either expressly or impliedly—e. g., by the client examining the solicitor as to the privileged matter; though, if only examined as to part, he cannot be cross-examined to the residue; or, by sending the opponent a copy of the privileged document. But such privilege cannot be waived by the solicitor (Phipson Ev. 179). By the old law, a party, who gave evidence in a suit at his own instance was deemed to have waived his privilege, and to have consented to disclosure by his professional adviser of any relevant matter, which the professional adviser would but for such privilege, be bound to disclose. Under the present Act the mere fact of the party's giving such evidence himself does not imply such consent; and if he calls the barrister, etc., as a witness and questions him, he is deemed to consent to disclosure by the barrister, etc., only if he questions him on matters which, but for such question he would be bound not to disclose; and by giving evidence he does not expose himself to be questioned about professional communications except so far as is necessary to explain his evidence. (Cunningham Ev. 361).

129. No one shall be compelled to disclose the Court any confidential communication which has taken place between him and his legal professional adviser, unless he offers himself as a witness, in which case he may be compelled to disclose any such communications as may appear to the Court necessary to be known in order to explain any evidence which he has given but no others.

Season for the rule.—Under the old law (Act II of 1855), section 22, a party to a suit, who offered himself as witness, was bound to produce any confidential writing or correspondence that had passed between himself and his legal adviser. The reason for this rule is not very clear; and the present section abrogates it so far that such correspondence need be produced only if it is necessary to explain the witness's evidence. It will be observed that the doubts which were at one time felt in the English Courts as to whether the protection extends to communication made by a client to his solicitor before any dispute has arisen, cannot arise under this section. (Taylor. 924). The English law at present is identical with the rule here laid down. Minet v. Morgan, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 361—(Cunningham Ev. 362).

Scope.—Statements of witness recorded for the special purpose of being shown to a legal adviser with a view to ascertaining whether it is a good case for the Court to decide are privileged. 43 Ind. Cas. 71.

130. No witness who is not a party to a suit shall be compelled to produce his title deeds to any property or any document in virtue of which he holds any property as pledgee or mortgagee or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, unless he has agreed in writing to produce them with the person seeking the production of such deeds or some person through whom he claims.

Ind. Ev.—19

English Law.—A witness, if a stranger, cannot be compelled to produce his title deeds or documents in the nature of title deeds on account, it is said, of the mischief which in the present complicated state of the law of real property, might result if title to estates were subject to compulsory disclosure. Mr. Best suggests the reason to be the mischief which might ensue from an erroneous decision of the Judge as to the nature of the documents. (Phipson Ev. 170). A person who is not a party to the action cannot be compelled to produce his title deeds, or other documents referring to his title to any property. If one person wants to see another person's title deeds or documents he should himself bring an action against such person for discovery. Cockle Cas 393; Pickering v. Noyes, 1 L. J. K. B. (O. S.) 110. A mortgagee also cannot be compelled to produce his security including title deeds deposited with him except on payment of his principal and interests. Chichester v. Marquis of Donegall, L. R. 5 Ch. 502. A witness is not bound to produce any document which he swears will tend to criminate him. Roe v. New York Press, 75 L. T. Jo. 31.

131. No one shall be compelled to produce documents in his possession which any other person would be entitled to refuse to produce if they were in his possession, unless such last mentioned person consents to their production.

Production of documents which another person having possession could refuse to produce.

Notes.—By section 65, secondary evidence can be given when a document is in the custody of a person who is legally bound to produce it and who refuses to do so. In the case, therefore of a document protected under this or the preceding section, secondary evidence of its contents could not be given. (Cun. Ev. 336).

132. A witness shall not be excused from answering any question as to any matter relevant to the matter in issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the answer to such question will criminate, or may tend directly or indirectly to criminate, such witness, or that it will expose, or tend directly or indirectly to expose, such witness to a penalty or forfeiture of any kind.

Witness not excused from answering on ground that answer will criminate.

Provided that no such answer, which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall subject him to any arrest or prosecution, or be proved against him in any criminal proceeding, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer.

Proviso.

English Law.—No man is bound to criminate himself; nemo tenetur seipsum prodere. Hence, a witness, whether a party to a suit or not, cannot be compelled to answer any question, whether put viva voce or in the form of a written interrogatory, the answer to which may expose, or tend to expose him, to a criminal charge penalty, or forfeiture of any kind. If the witness, after claiming privilege is compelled to answer his evidence will not be admitted against him at a subsequent trial for the criminal offence. (R. v. Garbet, 1 Den. 236), Powell Ev. 222.

Scope.—It seems that the Indian Legislature while departing from the rule laid down in English cases have accepted the principle laid down in R. v. Garbet cited above. A witness has, been made compellable to answer relevant questions but he is given the protection mentioned in that case. Where a person is charged with an offence with which he is alleged to have incriminated himself in his deposition in a case, the fact that he was the person who gave the deposition should be proved. 2 Weir 794.

Relevant to the matter in issue.—This section does not in terms deal with all criminating questions which may be addressed to a witness but only with questions as to matters relevant to the matter in issue. Irrelevant questions should not be allowed and it may be implied by the limitation in this section, that a witness should be excused from answering questions tending to criminate him as to matters which are irrelevant. The terms of section 132, especially when read with the rest of the Act, lead to the conclusion that the protection is only afforded to answers to which a witness has objected or has been constrained by the Court to give. 3 M. 271 12 B. 440; 23 B. 213. Taking a thumb impression of witness by the Court is not equivalent to asking a question and receiving an answer within the purview of the proviso to s. 132 and therefore such a thumb impression may be proved against the person giving it in a criminal trial. 16 C. W. N. 500=15 C. L. J. 399.

Claim of privilege.—A witness must claim the benefit of the protection afforded by this section before he makes the statement in respect of which a question is subsequently raised. 40 A. 271=16 A. L. J. 201.

Proviso.—A statement containing defamatory matter against another, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding, is a privileged statement under this section of the Act, for which such witness could not be proceeded against criminally. If the statement were false, he might be prosecuted for giving false evidence. 3 O. C. 80; 18 A. L. J. 940. Where, on the evidence given by certain witnesses in a murder case to the effect that they assisted the accused in concealing the dead body after murder, they were prosecuted under s. 201, the only evidence being their deposition, held that their conviction was not illegal, as they had omitted to object, perhaps owing to the want of legal advice, to answer the questions on the ground that the answers would criminate them. 2 Weir. 792. The proviso does not apply to voluntary statements. 32 C. W. N. 756=9 C. W. N. 911; Rat, Un. Cr. C. 360; 12 B. 440; 16 A. 88; 43 A. 92; 37 C. 878. If a person makes a statement voluntarily without any compulsion, it may be, if relevant, used against him in his trial on a criminal charge. 21 C. 392; 32 C. 756. A defamatory statement which is not protected under s. 490 is punishable. 14 C. L. J. 31; 33 A. 163; 29 A. 685; 23 C. 563; 11 M. 477; 17 B. 127; 15 C. 264; 10 A. 425; 23 C. 867; contra, 11 B. L. R. 321; 22 A. 234; 9 C. W. N. 911.

133. An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.

Scope.—So long-established a rule of practice as that which makes it prudent as a general rule, to require corroboration of accomplices, cannot, without great danger to society, be ignored by the Magistrates and Sessions Judges, simply because this section declares that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The Courts should give proper effect to the provision of s. 114, illustration (b). The rule in s. 114 illus. (b) and that in s. 133 are parts of one subject and both are found in most of the general judgments; and neither section is to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion. The illustration (b) to s. 114 is the rule, and when it is departed from, the Court should show, or it should appear that the circumstances justify the exceptional treatment of the case. 14 B. 331. The illustration (b) to s. 114 directs attention to the general principle that it is unsafe to convict on the evidence of accomplices, unless corroborated in material particulars. But along with this principle must be borne in mind the qualifications contained in the further illustrations which the Court is directed to consider while determining whether the general maxim does or does not apply to a particular case. They show that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated as on precisely the same footing; and no general rule can be laid down. 26 B. 193=7 Bom. L. R. 694. The testimony of one accomplice should not be taken as corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice. 114 Ind. Cas. 457=30. Cr. L. J. 311.

Corroboration.—It is generally unsafe to convict an accused person on the testimony of his accomplices, unless they are corroborated in material particulars connecting the accused with the crime. But this rule does not apply to all persons who technically come within the category of accomplices. The particular circumstances of each case will affect its application and no general rule can be laid down on this point. 33 C. 649=10 C. W. N. 669. The rule as to corroboration being necessary to evidence of an accomplice being one of practice a Court of revision will not, unless under exceptional circumstances, interfere in cases where the rule has not been adhered to. 17 Ind. Cas. 19=13 Cr. L. J. 767. 11 Bom. L. R. 858; 7 A. 160; 27 P. R. 1869. By the law both of India and England, the evidence of an accomplice is admissible and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. 14 B. 115.

The corroboration required of the testimony of an accomplice should go to some circumstances affecting the identity of the accused as participating in the transaction.

Such corroboration ought to be that which is derived from unimpeachable or independent evidence as distinguished from that derived from the earlier statements of the same accomplice or the statements of other accomplices. 6 Bom. L. R. 481. The kind of corroboration that is required in respect of an approver's evidence is corroboration that affects the approver's fellow criminals, not, in fact connects him and them together in relation to the crime. 1929 M. W. N. 794. In cases where a judge combines the functions of a judge and jury, he is bound under law to scrutinise the accomplice's evidence with the same degree of care and caution which is required of him in a trial by jury and just as he is bound to give warning to the jury, he must warn himself that it is unsafe to convict a person on accomplice evidence in the absence of substantial corroboration by independent evidence. 114 Ind. Cas. 457 = 30 Cr. L. J. 311. The amount of criminality is a matter for consideration, and when a person is only an accomplice by implication or in a secondary sense, this evidence does not require the same amount of corroboration as that of a person who is an actual perpetrator with the principal offender. In dealing with the question what amount of corroboration is required in the case of testimony given by an accomplice, the Court must exercise careful discrimination and consider all the surrounding circumstances in order to arrive at a conclusion whether the facts deposed to by the person alleged to be an accomplice are borne out by those circumstances, or whether the circumstances are of such a nature that the evidence purporting to be given by an alleged accomplice are supported in essential and material particulars by evidence aliundi, as to the facts deposed to by that accomplice. 28 C. 339 = 5 C. W. N. 517; see also 15 Bom. L. R. 288; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 750; 2 Weir 809 N. To justify the Court in setting aside the conviction, it is necessary to show not only that there is no corroboration, but that the Judge, taking all the evidence together was wrong in acting on it. 16 C. W. N. 669. It is the invariable practice of Courts to require corroboration by an independent witness of so much of the evidence of an accomplice as goes to identify the accused person as the offender. 4 Bom. L. R. 401. See also 2 C. W. N. 55; 57 P. L. R. 1902 = 5 P. R. 1902 Cr. L. B. R. 1872 = 1892) 322; 6 L. B. R. 4; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 102; 25 M. 143; 5 C. P. L. R. 1 Cr. Prior to the Evidence Act, the rule, not of law but of practice was that a conviction could not be based on the unsupported evidence of an accomplice. 31 P. R. 1866 Cr. 125 P. R. 1866 Cr.; 124 P. R. 1896 Cr. Contra, 1 M. 394; 35 M. 247; 35 M. 397; 1 M. L. J. 397 (F. B.)

There must be independent corroboration with respect to the identification of the persons whom accomplices charge and with respect to the facts they state. 21 P. R. 1866 Cr.; I.P.R. 1866 Cr. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 840; see also 1 M.L.J. 367; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 844; 18 C. W. N. 850; 11 B. H. C. A.C. 196; see also 7 Bom. L. R. 969 for nature of corroboration. Where there is nothing in the case outside the confession of a co-accused, the accused must be acquitted. 48 A. 409 = A. I. R. 1926 All. 377.

Cases.—Where corroboration was found necessary, vide 4 P. R. 1903 Cr.; 23 C. 351; 21 C. 328; 2 Lah. 296; 73 Ind. Cas. 506; 1923 Lah. 153; 9 O. & A. H. R. 947; 1923 Lah. 666; 1923 Lah. 335; 69 Ind. Cas. 462; 4 Pat. L. T. 381; 5 Lah 429.

Principle.—Accomplice evidence is held untrustworthy for these reasons; (1) because an accomplice is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself; (2) because an accomplice, as a participator in crime, and consequently as an immoral person, is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath, and (3) because he gives his evidence, under promise of a pardon, or in the expectation of an implied pardon, if he discloses all he knows against those with whom he acted criminally; and this hope will lead him to favour the prosecution. There is often danger that, for the purpose of saving themselves rather than stating the truth, the accomplices will make out a stronger case against the prisoner and more favourable to themselves than the real truth will warrant. 14 B. 115.

Accomplice.—The term accomplice signifies a guilty associate in a crime or, when the witness sustained such a relation to the criminal act that he could be jointly indicted with the accused, he is an accomplice. 27 M. 271. Where an accomplice is an involuntary one his statement is not tainted. 2 Weir 809 N. A spy is not an accomplice. 19 B. 363; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 428. A person charged with an offence by the police but subsequently discharged by the Magistrate is not an accomplice. 7 W. R. Cr. 44 ; L. R. B. (1893-1900), 467. A person offering bribe to the police is an accomplice. 14 B. 115 ; 14 B. 331 ; 26 B. 193 ; 26 M. 1 ; 2 C. W. N. 672. Witnesses to payment of bribes are not accomplices, unless they co-operate in the payment of the bribes. 83 C. 659 ; 27 C. 144. No man ought to be treated as an accomplice on mere suspicion. 11 Bom. L. R. 1153. Involuntary payment of bribe does not make one an accomplice. 27 C. 925. See also 31 C. L. J. 30.

Number of witnesses. 134. No particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof any fact.

Scope.—The general rule is that the Court can act upon the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness if satisfied with such evidence (Cockle Cas. 141). But there are certain cases in which the legislature has required as a matter of law that credence should not be given to the unsupported testimony of one witness (Powell Ev. 515). But the quantum of evidence permitted upon a given point as distinct from the quantum of evidence required, rests in the discretion of the Court, which will not permit a trial mischievously to be protracted by evidence or examinations merely cumulative in their nature. (Best 570). It is not open to the trying Magistrate to put any arbitrary limit on the witnesses whose evidence the defence desires to adduce. 22 C. W. N. 408.

CHAPTER X.

OF THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

135. The order in which witnesses are produced and examined shall be regulated by the law and practice for the time being relating to civil and criminal procedure respectively, and, in the absence of any such law, by the discretion of the Court.

Scope.—This section deals with the law which regulates the order in which witnesses are to be examined. Before the Court can proceed to hear a case, it is obviously necessary to determine which party shall begin or upon whom the burden of proof of the whole case lies. The general rule is that the party who alleges any matter in issue must prove it. This would be simple enough if there were only one fact in issue, but there may be several facts in issue, the burden of proof of some being on one party and of others on the other party. The position is practically this, that the burden of proof lies at first on the party against whom judgment would be given if no evidence at all were adduced. (Cockle Cas. 123). The party who would lose the case if no evidence is given has the right to begin. In criminal cases there is practically no difficulty as all the allegations are invariably made by the prosecution and as such the prosecution has got the right to begin.

Civil Cases.—In civil cases the plaintiff has the right to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin. (Civil Pro. Code, Order 18, rule 1). On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove. The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the Court generally on the whole case. (Order XVIII, rule 2). Where there are several defendants some of whom support the case of the plaintiff wholly or in part and the others oppose him, the rule is that those who support the case of the plaintiff must address the Court and adduce his evidence in the first place and then the other defendants must address the Court and adduce evidence. 32 B. 599.

Criminal cases.—In criminal cases the prosecution has the right to begin. The witnesses for prosecution are examined in the first place. There are different kinds of procedure in different kinds of cases. Chapter XX of the Criminal Procedure

Code prescribes the procedure to be adopted in summons cases. Chapter XXI lays down the procedure to be adopted in warrant cases and Chapter XXII prescribes the procedure to be followed in summary trial. In all of them the prosecution witnesses are to be examined in the first place.

136. When either party proposes to give evidence of any fact the Judge may ask the party proposing to give the evidence in what manner the alleged fact, if proved, would be relevant; and the Judge shall admit the evidence if he thinks that the fact, if proved, would be relevant and not otherwise.

If the fact proposed to be proved is one of which evidence is admissible only upon proof of some other fact, such last mentioned fact must be proved before evidence is given of the fact first mentioned, unless the party undertakes to give proof of such fact, and the Court is satisfied with such undertaking.

If the relevancy of one alleged fact depends upon another alleged fact being first proved, the Judge may, in his discretion either permit evidence of the first fact to be given before the second fact is proved, or require evidence to be given of the second fact before evidence is given of the first fact.

Illustrations.

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement about a relevant fact by a person alleged to be dead, which statement is relevant under section 32.

The fact that the person is dead must be proved by the person proposing to prove the statement, before evidence is given of the statement.

(b) It is proposed to prove, by a copy, the contents of a document said to be lost.

The fact that the original is lost must be proved by the person proposing to produce the copy, before the copy is produced.

(c) A is accused of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen.

It is proposed to prove that he denied the possession of the property.

The relevancy of the denial depends on the identity of the property. The Court may, in its discretion, either require the property to be identified before the denial of the possession is proved or permit the denial of possession to be proved before the property is identified.

(d) It is proposed to prove a fact (A) which is said to have been the cause or effect of a fact in issue. There are several intermediate facts (B, C and D) which must be shown to exist before the fact (A) can be regarded as the cause or effect of the fact in issue. The Court may either permit A to be proved before B, C and D is proved, or may require proof of B, C and D before permitting proof of A.

Para (1).—Section 5 lays down: "Evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are relevant under the Act and of no others. No party is entitled to adduce evidence of any other fact." This section empowers the Court to satisfy itself as regards the admissibility of any fact—otherwise the object of the law will be frustrated. It has already been hinted that the law of evidence has evolved out of Jury system and as such the law as regards admissibility of evidence is so stringent. The jurors as a rule are laymen and their mind can be easily influenced by improper admission of evidence. The Indian Legislature following the English law has adopted the peculiar rules of that law. In civil cases no great harm is done by improper admission of evidence but in Sessions cases where the jurors are sole judges of facts—improper admission of evidence is extremely detrimental to the interest of the parties. So the Judge is authorised to decide the question of relevancy of a fact by asking question to the party tendering evidence.

Para 2.—This para should be read with s. 104. It often happens that an agent, for instance, to carry a message and bring back an answer or do some other act, is put into the box before the agency or authority is proved. Thereupon an objection is taken by the opposing counsel that the evidence is not receivable, because the agency, etc., is not proved. An undertaking is usually then given that evidence to prove the agency will be forthcoming at a later period, whereupon the case proceeds. If the proof of agency should break down, the whole of the evidence of the alleged agent is expunged from the Judge's notes. It would often be highly inconvenient to interrupt the witness in his story, and call another witness in the middle of his examination to prove agency. It is to meet such a state of things that this clause is provided. (Norton Ev. 319).

Para 3—Illustrations (c) and (d) explain the meaning of this para. Where the relevancy of one fact depends upon another fact, which is not proved before the Court, the Court may either permit the first mentioned fact to be proved before the second fact or may require the party to adduce evidence in the first place for proving the second fact.

Examination-in-chief.

137. The examination of a witness by the party who calls him shall be called his Cross-examination.

The examination of a witness by the adverse party shall be called his cross-examination.

Re-examination.

The examination of a witness, subsequent to the cross-examination by the party who called him, shall be called his re-examination.

Note.—As soon as the witness has taken the oath or affirmed, he will be examined by the counsel for the party who called him as a witness ; this is examination-in-chief. Next, he will probably be cross-examined by the other party. Lastly, he may be re-examined by the party who called him, (Powell Ev. 525).

138. Witnesses shall be first examined-in-chief, then if the adverse party so desires cross-examined, then (if the party calling him so desires) re-examined.

Order of examinations.

The examination and cross-examination must relate to relevant facts, but the cross examination need not be confined to the facts, to which the witness testified on his examination-in-chief.

The re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in cross-examination ; and if new matter is, by permission of the Court, introduced in re-examination, the adverse party may further cross-examine upon that matter.

Direction of re-examination.

Principle.—Long forensic experience has evolved a body of rules of practice which undoubtedly tend to elicit the truth, and thus materially assist the tribunal in ascertaining the weight which should be attached to the evidence of any witness. (Powell Ev. 525).

Examination.—The first rule which regulates examination-in-chief is this :—In examination-in-chief only such questions are to be put which are relevant to the issue ; every thing else will be rigorously excluded. The evidence must be admissible under the Act. It is the duty of counsel to bring out clearly and in proper chronological order every relevant fact in support of his client's case to which the witness can depose. This task is more difficult than may at first sight appear. The timid witness must be encouraged ; the talkative witness repressed ; the witness who is too strong a partisan must be kept in check and yet the counsel must not suggest to the witness what he is to say. An honest witness, however, should be left to tell his tale in his own way with as little interruption from counsel as possible. In criminal cases, the duty of counsel for prosecution is wider. It is the practice, and probably the duty, of a prosecuting counsel to ask a witness questions favourable to the prisoner ; for he must lay all the material evidence before the Court, whether it tells in favour of the prisoner or not, and not unduly press for conviction. (Powell Ev. 526).

“ We may here observe that it is to an affirmative proof that an examination-in-chief is mainly addressed ; and the proof is that of the issue to which the party producing the witness has, by his pleadings in the cause, challenged his antagonist ; and this consists in avoidance of all diverting, and collateral matters. The expression affirmative is used in the sense of something which is affirmed on either one side or the other. In this view a negation by a defendant of the case of the plaintiff would have to be regarded as an affirmation of the former. As the plaintiff, avers that he sold goods to B the defendant while B says that he did not. The examination on the part of B of his witnesses, and in support of his defence, would be as much an examination-in-chief as that by A of his witness,"—Goodeve Ev. 194. A witness when under examination must speak of facts within his knowledge. Except in certain exceptional cases, his opinion or belief could not be admissible. Nor does this rule exclude only that which would ordinarily fall, under the head of belief; such matters, for instance, as one believed because a narrator of credibility had averred their existence. It would extend even to inferences, in the nature of opinion, which the witness might himself draw from the facts before him. Testifying as to facts, the witness can of course only do so according to the extent of his knowledge or recollection. He is not required to speak with such certainty as to exclude all doubt from his mind. "If" says Professor Greenleaf "the fact is impressed on his memory but his recollection does not rise to positive assurance, it is still admissible, to be weighed by the jury; but if the impression is not derived from the recollection of the fact, and is so slight as to render it probable that it may have been derived from others, or may have been some unwarrantable deduction of witness's own mind, it will be rejected." To use the expression of Mr. Taylor in modification of the passage—"He may express it as it lies in his memory." (Goodeve Ev. 195). But there are exceptions to the rule, though they will be found limited to the instances where the nature of the case does not admit of more positive evidence. Thus, in a question of identity between persons and handwriting, a witness is allowed to speak upon belief. So, in one requiring for aid in its determination, the experience to be derived from science, art, or trade, witnesses skilled, in such matters, or as they are termed experts are admitted to give, as evidence, the results of their own craft bearing on the issue as in questions of foreign law or usage skilled or competent persons are admitted to pronounce authoritatively, and as matter of evidence, what that law or usage is. So in actions for criminal conversation, or for breach of promise of marriage the terms of attachment on which the parties lived towards each other may be proved upon belief. Ibid. p. 196.

In the case of experts,—which is the other exception to the rule requiring witnesses to depose on actual knowledge,—their testimony, with the exception of the case of legal experts, is not so much of the facts themselves at issue (of which, in deed, they might probably be wholly ignorant) as of what science or their peculiar art or calling would pronounce concerning them, under corresponding circumstances. Thus it is every day's experience to receive as evidence the opinions of medical men as to the cause of disease or death,—the probable consequences of wounds,—or the property or effect of any given course of medical treatment. So in the case of ancient handwriting, antiquarians have been allowed to fix its date by conjecture, (Goodeve Ev. 203).

Cross-examination—Cross-examination is the examination of a witness by the party opposed to the party who called him, and who examined, or was entitled, to examine him in chief. It is the rule that, if a competent witness is intentionally called and sworn for the purpose of giving evidence, the right of cross-examination exists, although no testimony is actually given. According to the English rule where a witness is called to depose to a particular fact, he becomes a witness for all purposes, and may be fully cross-examined upon all matters material to the issue, the examination not being confined to the matters inquired about in the direct examination. Rex v. Brooke, 2 Stark, 472; Phillips v. Middlesex, 1 Esp. 357; Fletcher v. Corsbil, 2 Ma. and R. 417. The objects of cross-examination are to impeach the accuracy, credibility, and general value of the evidence given in chief; to sift the facts already stated by the witness, to detect and expose discrepancies, or to elicit suppressed facts which will support the case of the cross-examining party. Great latitude is permitted in cross-examination, and cross-examiner will not be stopped by the Court unless the question is manifestly irrelevant and calculated neither to weaken the examination-in-chief nor to impeach the credit of the witness. In order to affect the credit of a witness even irrelevant questions may be asked in cross-examination. He may be asked questions which affect his veracity, such as, whether he has been convicted of a crime; whether he is a relative, or intimate friend, or under any special obligation, to the party who calls him; whether he is not identified or connected with him in interest; whether he is not been on terms of enmity with the adverse party; whether his memory is not defective generally, or as to the particular transaction; and whether he has been bribed, or paid to give evidence. But irrelevant questions which neither contradict or qualify the result of the examination-in-chief, nor impeach the credit of the witness, are not allowed even in cross-examination.

Where a question asked in cross-examination appears to be irrelevant, it will not be excluded if the cross-examiner undertakes to show that it is really material. (Powell Ev. pp. 53—533).

"Cross-examination, though very powerful, is also a very dangerous engine. It is double-edged weapon, and as often wounds him who wields it, as him at whom it is aimed. To wield it to advantage, requires great practice and natural fact. In the hands of the raw and unexperienced advocate, we frequently see it do more injury than good to the cause. Yet it is this branch of forensic practice that the youthful advocate is most eager to display. The old and weavy pleader remembers that the witness is hostile to him, and is, perhaps, on the watch to inflict damage on his cause. Every question is likely to give such a witness an opportunity of clenching the nails he has driven before if not of starting new matter, which the examination-in-chief may not have elicited, but which may be further pursued in re-examination. Therefore, unless there is some very good ground for believing that the witness can be broken down, or convicted of falsehood, it is rarely good policy to submit him to a severe cross-examination. Sometimes a cross-examination is little more than affectation, in order that the pleader may not seem to let the witness go without question, as if he were totally impregnable, and a few questions are asked to shake his credit or show the weakness of his memory. Sometimes, too, a cross-examination may have the fishing objects of eliciting some haphazard reply, which open up matters favourable to the examiner on further pursuit. But, generally speaking, cross-examination is to be warily approached, and the way carefully felt." (Norton Ev. 322).

When the examination-in-chief has resulted in clear, conclusive, or unimpeachable evidence it may be prudent for the adverse party not to cross-examine; for, in such a case, he may by so doing, instead of weakening the evidence, merely strengthen and confirm it. So, too, he will generally not cross-examine a witness, whose evidence he admits, or which possibly can not injure his case. Reckless cross-examination, moreover, often less in evidence which before was not admissible. (Powell Ev. 531).

How long right to cross-examination continues.—As a right cross-examination and its concomitant privileges of asking leading questions ceases where the cross-examination of the witness following the examination-in-chief is apparently concluded, and the attendance of the witness is either dispensed with from the stand or the re-examination if any has begun. After that it is a privilege only, resting in favour of the Court. The ordinary rules of procedure made to the end that the truth may be elicited by the expeditious as well as orderly examination of witnesses require that parties must exhaust their cross-examination of a witness when entered into (Burr Jones Ev. § 825).

Re-examination.—The object of re-examination is to explain the meaning of the expressions used by the witness in cross-examination. The re-examination is subject to the same rules as the examination-in-chief. No leading questions may be asked for the witness is the witness of the party who examined him in chief. As to the introduction of new matter, see the end of the section. The Court always may and often does, examine a witness at the close of the examination. The Court is not bound by the same rules as counsels as to leading questions, etc. See post, section 142. The Court may put what questions it pleases, and in what form it pleases, see post, section 145; and most usefully so, especially where the examination has not been scientifically or skilfully conducted. (Norton Ev. 323).

Cases.—An accused person must be allowed to cross-examine witnesses called by another co-accused for his defence, if the case of the latter is adverse to that of the former. 21 C. 401, but see 12 W. R. Cr. 75, which was decided before this Act. But the view expressed in 21 C. 401 is in accordance with English law; vide Lord v. Colvin, (1855) 24 L. J. Ch. 517; R. v. Burdett, Dears C. C. 431. One defendant can also cross-examine another co-defendant's witness if his defence is adverse. 1 M. H. C. R. 546. In criminal cases an accused has the right to cross-examine the prosecution witness when the charge is framed. If he waives that right he cannot afterwards claim that right. 7 C. 28=8 C. L. R. 328; 20 C. 469; contra, 2 A. 253; 32 C. 292. In the latter two cases it was laid down that the right continued till the end of the case. After a refusal of an application by the accused for re-summoning the prosecution witnesses, for further cross-examination, the accused applied for summoning some of those witnesses as witnesses on his behalf. On their appearing the Magistrate refused to allow the accused to cross-examine them, and the accused thereupon declined to examine them as his witnesses. Held, that the refusal by the Court to allow the accused to cross-examine the witnesses, who were in attendance in Court, has resulted in a mistrial of the case. 1 C. W. N. 19; see also 5 C. W. N. 447.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the right of counsel to demand in cross-examination that a witness should repeat the story which he has told in the examination in chief. 85 P. L. R. 1914=22 Ind. Cas. 724. A Magistrate is not entitled to refuse the application of the accused, made after the framing of the charge, to re-call the witnesses for the prosecution, on the ground that they have already been cross-examined before the framing of the charge in the understanding that they would not be required for further cross-examination after the charge. 6 C. W. N. 424; see 41 C. 299. Where a witness has not been asked a single question in examination-in-chief, there even the opposite party has the right to cross-examine. 6 B. L. R. App. 88. In a criminal case it must be proved that either the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses or was given sufficient opportunity to cross-examine them: 19 B. 759 see also 9 W. R. 587; 6 W. R. 181; 12 C. L. J. 124 (F. B.). Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine witnesses and as a rule the Court should leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as is provided for in this section. 11 O. L. J. 333=82 Ind. Cas. 154 (1) This section deals not with the rights of the party but only provides the order in which the proceedings are to be conducted A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 822.

It is certainly implied by this section that a party must have had an opportunity to cross-examine and does not mean that mean that merely a right to cross-examine a witness without an opportunity being offered for cross-examination is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. 73 Ind. Cas. 339=24 Cr. L. I. 595.

139. A person summoned to produce a document does not become a witness by the mere fact that he produces it, and cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness.

Scope.—It is the rule that, if a competent witness is intentionally called and sworn for the purpose of giving evidence, the right of cross-examination exists although no testimony is actually given. Rex v. Brooke, 2 Stark, 472; Phillips v. Eamer, 1 Esp. 355; 6 B. L. R. App. 88. But there are certain exceptions to the general rule. The rule does, however, extend to a witness who is simply subpoenaed to produce a document to be identified or proved by another witness. In such a case he need not be sworn. (Summers v. Moreley, 2 Crompt. and M. 477; Perry v. Gibson, 1 A. and E. 48; Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. and R. 94; Davis v. Dale, 4 Car. and p. 335; Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 300; Read v. James, 1 Stark, 1327.

Until he is called as a witness.—i. e., until he is sworn intentionally. If he is unnecessarily sworn he cannot be cross-examined. (Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. and R. 94); nor where is sworn by mistake (Wood v. Mackinson, 2 M. and R. 273; Clifford v. Hunter, 3 C. and P. 16; Red v. James, 1 Stark, 1327).

Witnesses to character. 140. Witnesses to character may be cross-examined and re-examined.

Scope.—According to English practice it is not usual to cross-examine, except under special circumstances, witnesses called merely to speak to the character of a prisoner: but there is no rule which forbids the cross-examination of such witnesses. (Woodroffe 863). The Indian rule is also the same as the use of the word "may" suggests that it is not the usual practice, though the right exists. (Norton Ev. 323.)

141. Any question suggesting the answer which the person putting it wishes or expects to receive is called a leading question.

Leading questions.—"A question" says Bentham "is a leading one, when it indicates to the witness the real or supposed fact which the examiner expects and desires to have confirmed by the answer. Is not your name so and so? Do you reside in such a place? Are you not in the service of such and such person? Have you not lived so many years with him? It is clear that under this form every sort of information may be conveyed to the witness in disguise.

It may be used to prepare him to give the desired answers to the questions about to be put to him; the examiner, while he pretends ignorance and is asking for information is in reality giving instead of receiving it." A leading question is one which suggests to the witness the answer desired, or which embodying a material fact, admits of a conclusive answer by a simple negative or affirmative. (Taylor § 1404). "It is very clear that a question is leading which suggests to the witness the answers which he is to make, or which puts into his mouth words which he is to echo back. But if it merely suggest a subject, without suggesting an answer or a specific thing, it is not leading. It has often been declared that a question is objectionable, as leading, which embodies a material fact and admits of answer by a simple affirmative or negative. While it is true that a question which may be answered by yes or no is generally leading there may be such questions which in no way suggest the answer desired, and to which there is no real objection. On the other hand, leading questions are by no means limited to those which may be answered by yes or no (Burr. Jones § 816).

142. Leading questions must not, if
When they must not be objected to by the adverse party, be asked in an examination-in-chief, or in a re-examination, except with the permission of the Court,

The Court shall permit leading questions as to matters which are introductory or undisputed, or which have, in its opinion, been already sufficiently proved.

Principle.—There is no rule of evidence more familiar to the practitioner than the one which forbids leading questions on direct examination of witness. Leading questions may be used to prepare a witness to give the desired answer to the questions about to be put to him; the examiner, where he pretends ignorance as in asking for information, is in reality giving instead of receiving it. This is one of the reasons of excluding a leading question in the examination-in-chief or in re-examination. But the further consideration may be added that a witness may often be presumed to have some bias in favour of the party producing him; and that leading or suggestive questions, as they are sometimes called, would allow the party to extract only so much of the knowledge of the witness as would be favourable or even put a false gloss on the whole (Burr Jones § 816).

Scope.—Counsel when examining-in-chief must not ask leading questions. But the rule is not an inflexible one. In the first place, a question is not objectionable as leading when it is only introductory to what is material, or relates to matters as to which there is no dispute. In most cases it is necessary to prove a certain number of unconnected facts, in order that Judge or Jury may understand the position of the parties and the circumstances surrounding the case.—As to these matters, leading questions are often put with the permission of counsel on the other side, and such questions should then be put in the shortest and most direct manner. But when the real issue is approached the witness must be asked such questions merely as "What did you see?" "What did you hear?" "What happened next?" This rule prevents, at least in some measure, the possibility of any collusion between a prosecutor or a party, and his witness. Leading questions may also be put to contradict evidence already given by a witness on the other side; e. g., if the plaintiff has sworn that the defendant said, "The goods need not all be equal to sample," the defendant can, and should, be asked, "Did you ever say to the plaintiff that the goods need not all be equal to the sample, or any words to that effect?" And there are other occasions on which leading questions may be put by permission of the presiding Judge, who has a general discretion over the conduct of all vive voce examinations. For instance, when a question from its nature cannot be put except in a leading form, the Judge may allow it to be put. (Powell, Ev. 528).

If objected to etc.—If the objection is not taken at the time, the answer will be taken in the Judge's notes; and it will be too late to object to the evidence afterwards on the score of its having been elicited by a leading question. Sometimes the Judge himself will interfere to permit a leading question or a series of leading questions being put; but it is the duty of the opposing Counsel to take objection; and it is only through want of practical skill that the omission occurs. At the same time, it is to be observed that if evidence is elicited by a series of leading questions unobjected to, the effect of the evidence so obtained is very much weakened, for it can scarcely escape the notice of the Judge. It is advisable, therefore, for a counsel, examining-in-chief or on re-examination, not to put leading questions, except of course as to those points on which they are expressly permitted by the Act. (Norton Ev. 325).

When they may be asked. 143. Leading questions may be asked in cross-examination.

Comment.—If any presumption is to be entertained as to the bias of witness, it is that the witness is unfavourable rather than favourable to the cross-examiner; hence, the reasons for the rule excluding leading questions do not apply to cross-examinations. But although it is the undoubted rule that leading questions may be asked in cross-examination, the rule is subject to the qualification that the Court, in its discretion, may restrict the right, where the witness shows a bias in favour of the cross-examiner. If the privilege were not thus subject to the control of the Court, serious injustice might result, as one secretly hostile might conceal his bias in order to be called as a witness, and would only need an intimation from the cross-examining Counsel to say, whatever might be most favourable to him. The privilege of submitting leading questions on cross-examination is always, therefore, subject to the sound discretion of the Court (Burr Jones § 824). Thus, on Hardy's trial, a witness for the prosecution, on evincing a favourable disposition towards the prisoner, was asked a leading question by the counsel for the defence, but Buller J. refused to allow the question to be put, saying:—"You may lead a witness upon a cross-examination to bring him directly to the point as to the answer; but you can not go the length of putting into the witness's mouth the very words which he is to echo back again. R v. Hardy, 24 How. St Tr. p. 639 cited in Powell Ev. 532. But in a latter case, Alderson, B. observed: "But you may always put a leading question in cross-examination whether a witness be unwilling or not" Parkin v Moon, 7 C. & P. 408.

144. Any witness may be asked, whilst under examination, whether any Evidence as to matters in writing. contract, grant of other disposition of property, as to which he is giving evidence was not contained in a document, and if he says that it was, or if he is about to make any statement as to the contents of any document, which, in the opinion of the Court, ought to be produced, the adverse party may object to such evidence being given until such document is produced, or until facts have been proved which entitled the party who called the witnesses to give secondary evidence of it.

Explanation.—A witness may give oral evidence of statements made by other persons about the contents of documents if such statements are in themselves relevant facts.

Illustration.

The question is, whether A assaulted B.

C deposes that he heard A say to D—"B wrote a letter accusing me of theft, and I will be revenged on him." This statement is relevant, as showing A's motive for the assault, and evidence may be given of it, though no other evidence is given about the letter.

Scope.—This section merely points out the manner in which the provisions of sections 91 and 92 as to the exclusion of oral by documentary evidence may be enforced by the parties to the suit. "Documents which in the opinion of the Court ought to be produced" would of course, include the cases referred to in section 91, where the law requires a matter, to be reduced to the form of a document. (Cunningham. Ev. 376.)

145. A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, and relevant to matters in question, without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but, if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him.

English law.—A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing,—or reduced into writing, relating to the subject matter of the indictment or proceedings without such being shown to him, but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him. Provided always, that it shall be competent for the Judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purpose of the trial as he may think fit. Criminal Pro. Act, 1865 (28 Vict. C. 18) s. 5 ; see also, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H & N. 1.

Principle.—A witness may be questioned as to his previous written statements for two purposes : it may be to test his memory ; and here the very object would be defeated if the writing were placed in his hands before the questions were asked ; or it may be to contradict him. R. v. Ncbokristo, 8 W.R. Cr. p. 87. And here it would be obviously unfair not to give him every opportunity of seeing how the matter really stands (Norton Ev. 327. "This course of proceeding" says Mr. Philips (though addressing himself more especially to verbal statements) "is indispensable from principle of justice due to the witness : for as the direct tendency of the evidence is to impeach his veracity by contradicting his present statement with that supposed to have been made by him to some other person, common justice requires, that before his credit is attacked, he should have an opportunity of declaring whether he ever made such statement to that person, and of explaining, in the re-examination, the nature and particulars of the conversation, under what circumstances it was made, from that motives, and with what designs. The former account, given by him in conversation, may have been partially heard, or misunderstood, or partly forgotten, or intentionally misrepresented." Philips and Arnold Vol. 11 p. 505.

Scope.—There is a hardly any more familiar practice in judicial procedure than that of impeaching witnesses by proof of their former statements which are inconsistent with their present testimony. Since such an attempt is a direct attack upon the testimony of the witness, and may result in serious consequences, it is important that the practice should be so regular that the witness may have full opportunity to admit, deny or explain any statement which is thus assailed. It has frequently been declared that, in order to designate sufficiently the circumstances of the statement, the witness should be asked as to the time, place and persons involved in the contradiction. Although the conduct of the witness as to matters having no connection with the case is generally irrelevant, it is allowable to ask the witness on cross-examination, not only concerning his contradictory statements, but concerning his actions if they have been inconsistent with his statements on the witness stand. (Burr. Jones § 845.)

Police diaries.—Police diaries are not evidence. But they can be used for contradicting the person who made the diary. 19 A. 390 ; see also 19 Bom.

146. When a witness is cross-examined, he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to, be asked any questions which tend—

Questions lawful in cross-examination.

- (1) to test his veracity ;
- (2) to discover who he is and what is his position in life, or
- (3) to shake his credit, by injuring his character, although the answer to such questions might tend directly or indirectly to criminate him or might expose or tend directly or indirectly to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture.

English law.—This section differs from the law of England where a witness is still not bound to answer questions which criminate, or have a tendency to criminate him. (Norton 328). "When a witness is cross-examined, he may, in addition to the questions hereinbefore referred to be asked any questions which tend—

- (1) To test his accuracy, veracity, or credibility ; or
- (2) To shake his credit, by injuring his character.

Witnesses have been compelled to answer such questions, though the matter suggested was irrelevant to the matter in issue, and though the answer was disgraceful to the witness ; but it is submitted that the Court has the right to exercise a discretion in such cases, and to refuse to compel such questions to be answered when the truth of the matter suggested would not in the opinion of the Court affect the credibility of the witness as to the matter to which he is required to testify." (Steph Ev. Art. 129).

Scope.—This does not mean that a witness may be asked questions on irrelevant topics for the mere purpose of contradicting him or of proving contradictory statements. For, unless they come within the exceptions mentioned in s. 153, his answers to questions tending to shake his credit cannot be contradicted; nor by section 155 can former contradictory statements be proved, unless that part of the witness's evidence, which they counteract, was itself liable to be contradicted. (Cun. Ev. 378).

Cases.—1923 Cal. 315 (2).

When witness to be compelled to answer.

147. If any such question relates to a matter relevant to the suit or proceeding, the provisions of section 132 shall apply thereto.

Scope.—The word "such," it is presumed refers to the last clause of the preceding section, and not to the word "any" in earlier part of that section. None but relevant questions can be asked in cross-examination, ante section 138, clause 2. But relevancy is of two-fold character; it may be directly relevant in its bearing on elucidating or disproving, the very merits of the points in issue. In such a case, the witness is not protected from answering, notwithstanding the answer may criminate him. For section 132 is made applicable to this case. There is another kind of relevancy which is collateral to the issue. Such is the character of the witness, which is always relevant; because if he is dishonest on faith can be put in the story he utters. Where questions are put to a witness, not for proving or disproving the point in issue, but exclusively and merely to show what is the character of the witness, the Court is to decide whether the question is to be answered or not. (Norton Ev. 328).

148. If any such question relates to a matter not relevant to the suit or proceeding, except in so far as it affects the credit of the witness by injuring his character, the Court shall decide whether or not the witness shall be compelled to answer it, and may, if it thinks fit, warn the witness that he is not obliged to answer it. In exercising its discretion, the Court shall have regard to the following considerations:—

Court to decide when question shall be asked and when witness compelled to answer.

- (1) such questions are proper if they are of such a nature that the truth of the imputation conveyed by them would seriously affect the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies;
- (2) such questions are improper if the imputation which they convey relates to matters so remote in time, or of such a character, that the truth of the imputation would not affect, or would affect in a slight degree, the opinion of the Court as to the credibility of the witness on the matter to which he testifies;
- (3) such questions are improper if there is a great disproportion between the importance of the imputation made against the witness's character and the importance of his evidence;
- (4) the Court may, if it sees fit, draw, from the witness's refusal to answer, the inference that the answer if given would be unfavourable.

Scope.—Witnesses may be cross-examined as to specific facts though not pertinent to the issue, which tend to discredit the witness or impeach his moral character and credit, when there is reason to believe that such examination will tend to the ends of justice; but that a cross-examination of this character ought not to be allowed when it seems unjust to the witness and uncalled for by the circumstances of the case. According to this view it may as a rule, be safely left to the trial Judge to control the inquiry; while it is proper for him to permit questions tending to disgrace the witness, if in an important way this affects his credibility, yet on the other hand, he should protect the witness from insult add indiscriminate attacks or those which are evidently caused by mere caprice or resentment and that it is his duty to exclude inquiry as to transactions too remote to affect credibility. This discretion of the trial Judge is to be exercised in view of the evidence already introduced and the testimony of the witness in the direct examination and all the circumstances of the case. It often happens that the appearance and deportment of an adverse witness—his prevarication, reluctance, or apparent bias, the intrinsic improbability of his testimony or its incongruity with known facts—make it the plain duty of the Court to permit searching and disparaging inquiries on matters irrelevant to the issue, for the purpose of aiding the jury in a collateral inquiry as to his credit. (Burr Jones § 834).

149. No such question as is referred to in section 148 ought to be asked, unless the person asking it has reasonable grounds for thinking that the imputation which it conveys is well-founded.

Illustrations.

(a) A barrister is instructed by an attorney or vakil that an important witness is a dakait. This is a reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakait.

(b) A pleader is informed by a person in Court that an important witness is a dakait; the informant, on being questioned by the pleader gives satisfactory reasons for his statement. This is reasonable ground for asking the witness whether he is a dakait.

(c) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, is asked at random whether he is a dakait. There are here no reasonable grounds for the question.

(d) A witness, of whom nothing whatever is known, being questioned as to his mode of life and means of living, gives unsatisfactory answers. This may be a reasonable ground for asking him if he is a dakait.

Reasonable Ground.—"The illustrations show that the "reasonable grounds" which justify such questions, may be such slighter than could justify a man in making an imputation under other circumstances. A barrister who is told a discrediting fact by an attorney or vakil, or a pleader who hears such a fact from a person who appears to know about it, is justified in so far assuming its truth as to question a witness about it; and he may even do so with no other justification than the witness's unsatisfactory replies. (Cun. Ev. 381).

150. If the Court is of opinion that any such question was asked without reasonable grounds, it may, if it was asked by any barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney, report the circumstances of the case to the High Court or other authority to which such barrister, pleader, vakil or attorney is subject in the exercise of his profession.

Object.—The object of these sections is to lay down, in the most distinct manner, the duty of counsel of all grades is examining witnesses with a view to shaking their credit by damaging their character. I trust that this explicit statement of the principles, according to which such questions ought or ought not to be asked, will be found sufficient to prevent the growth, in this country, of that which in England has on many occasions been a grave scandal. I think that the sections so far as their substance is concerned, speak for themselves, and that they will be admitted to be sound by all honourable advocates and by the public." Proceedings of the Legislative Council of India pp. 237—238 of the Supplementary to the Gazette of India of the 30th March, 1872.

Scope.—When a question in cross-examination reflects not on the witness but on a third party, this section, which must be referred back to s. 146 can have no application. The instructions to the counsel are a privileged document belonging to the client and the counsel is prohibited from disclosing what is contained in those instructions as being of a confidential nature. The question whether a counsel has exceeded the license given him for the purpose of conducting his client's case, is one which can only be dealt with by a Full Bench. 9 Ind. Cas. 509.

151. The Court may forbid any questions or inquiries which it regards as indecent or scandalous, although such questions or inquiries may have some bearing on the questions before the Court, unless they relate to facts in issue, or to matters necessary to be known in order to determine whether or not the facts in issue existed.

Object.—It is recognized that from the necessity of the case, the method and extent of the cross-examination must depend very largely upon the discretion of the trial Judge : and this is especially true where the object is to test the accuracy and credibility of the witness. If the cross-examination is proceeding beyond those bounds which are proper to test the accuracy and credibility of the witness, or is being needlessly protracted, or is being conducted in a manner which is unfair to the witness, or if it is inconsistent with the decorum of the court-room the Court is not bound to wait for objections from counsel, but may interfere of its own motion. Every Court having original jurisdiction is authorized to reject evidence on immaterial issues, though objected to by neither party ; and if it were otherwise, it would be a reproach to the administration of justice. (Burr Jones S. 842). "Justice to the witness demands that all the Courts to which he appeals for present protection shall have power to shield him from indignity, unless the circumstances of the case are such that cannot fairly invoke that protection. If the range of irrelevant inquisition be committed to the discretion of adverse counsel, it will be no reparation of the wrong to the witness that the judgment, in which he has no concern, may be afterwards reverted by appellate tribunal." Great Western Trunpike Road Co. v. Loomis, 32 N. Y. 127. It is almost needless to add that cross-examination on matters either directly in issue or directly relevant to the issue is a matter of right, and its exclusion is error. It is only after right has been substantially and fairly exercised that the allowance of cross-examination becomes discretionary with the trial Court.

152. The Court shall forbid any question which appears to it to be intended to insult or annoy, or which, though proper in itself, appears to the Court needlessly offensive in form.

Object.—Counsels have no right to inject into the cross-examination unfair insinuations upon the conduct of the witness or comment upon his testimony, and Court should not wait for objections before interfering with such a practice. It goes without saying that questions tending to insult, abuse or intimidate the witness should not be permitted and the Court is not required to wait for objections to such mode of interrogation. (Burr Jones S. 843).

153. When a witness has been asked and has answered any question which is relevant to the inquiry only in so far as it tends to shake his credit by injuring his character, no evidence shall be given to contradict him ; but, if he answers falsely, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Exception 1.—If a witness is asked whether he has been previously convicted of any crime and denies it, evidence may be given of his previous conviction.

Exception 2.—If a witness is asked any question tending to impeach his impartiality and answers it by denying the facts suggested he may be contradicted.

Illustrations.

(a) A claim against an underwriter is resisted on the ground of fraud. The claimant is asked whether, in a former transaction, he had not made a fraudulent claim. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that he did make such a claim.

The evidence is inadmissible.

(b) A witness is asked whether he was not dismissed from a situation for dishonesty. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that he was dismissed for dishonesty.

The evidence is not admissible.

(c) A affirms that on a certain day he saw B at Lahore.

A is asked whether he himself was not on that day at Calcutta. He denies it.

Evidence is offered to show that A was on that day at Calcutta.

The evidence is admissible, not as contradicting A on a fact which affects his credit but as contradicting the alleged fact that B was seen on the day in question in Lahore.

In each of these cases the witness might, if his denial was false, be charged with giving false evidence.

(d) A is asked whether his family has not had a blood feud with the family of B against whom he gives evidence.

He denies it. He may be contradicted on the ground that the question tends to impeach his impartiality.

Object.—The object of this section is to prevent trial being spun out to an unreasonable length. (Markby Ev. 108). The reason of the rule, which restricts the right as regards giving evidence to contradict a witness is that it is an object of great importance to confine the attention of the jury to the specific issues as much as possible. 6 B. H. C. R. 93 (96).

Scope.—This section is based upon the rule of English law that, if questions put to a witness for the purpose of testing his credit relate to relevant facts, they can be contradicted by independent evidence; if, to irrelevant, they cannot. It is obvious that, but for such a rule, a suit might easily digress into various collateral issues and become practically interminable. The exceptions refer to two matters which are easily susceptible of proof and strike at the very root of the witnesses' trustworthiness. It is very important to know whether a witness has been previously convicted or has received a bribe from the other party. On the other hand no great expenditure of time need be involved in ascertaining how the facts stand. (Cun Ev. 383). Where a fact which has a direct bearing on the issue is denied by a witness, it may of course, be proved aliunde. See illustration (c), but where the fact inquired after is collateral to the issue—as, for instance, the character of a witness.—Counsel must be content with the answer which the witness chooses to give him. If he denies the imputation, the answer is conclusive for purposes of the suit. See illustrations (a) (b): the matter cannot be carried further at the trial, except the two cases provided for by this section. The only redress which a party has, is to charge the witness with perjury and try him for it. To this rule there are however, two exceptions. Exception (1)—When a witness denies that he has been previously convicted, his previous conviction may always be put in to refute him. (Norton Ev. 332). Exception (2)—The exception is based on Attorney General v. Hitchcock, 16 L. J. Ex. 259. Whether this can be done has been the subject of much doubt in England. In the above case, Pollock. C. B. observed: "A witness may be asked how he stands affected towards one of the parties; and if his relation towards them is such as to prejudice his mind, and fill him with sentiments of revenge or other feelings of a similar kind, and if he denies the fact evidence may be given to show the state of his mind and feelings." In the same case, Alderson B. observed: "The offer of a bribe by a witness to another, or the fact of a bribe having been accepted by him, tends to show that he is not impartial."

154. The Court may, in its discretion, permit the person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party.

Principle.—As a party cannot put leading questions to his own witness, it is apparent that injustice would ensue if the party, discovering that he had been mistaken in his witness in that the witness was adverse, was against and not for him, were tied down by any hard and first rule as to leading the witness. The rule is correctly indicated by Greenleaf when he says: "But the weight of authority seems in favour of admitting the party to show that the evidence has taken him by surprise, and is contrary to the examination of the witness preparatory to the trial, or to what the party had reason to believe he would testify, or that the witness has recently been brought under the influences of the other party and had deceived the party calling him. For, it is said that this course is necessary for his protection against the contrivance of an artful witness and that the danger of its being regarded by the jury as substantive evidence is no greater in such cases than it is where the contradictory allegations are proved by the adverse party." Hence a well-recognised exception to the general rule which is under discussion permits leading questions to a witness who is hostile to the party calling him, or who for any reason, may be deemed an unwilling witness. If it is apparent that the witness is attempting to promote the interest of the adverse party, or if the witness is in fact the adverse party, the Court will be justified in permitting the direct examination to take the character of a cross-examination; and, in the latter case, leading questions may be asked as a matter of right. (Burr Jones, Ev. § 817).

In its discretion.—The unwillingness or other state of mind of the witness, is to be decided by the Judge from his demeanour upon the stand and from such facts in evidence as may show that the witness, because of his relationship to a party, interest in the cause or for other reason, has some bias against the one calling him or some disinclination to testify. (Burr Jones, Ev. § 817).

Scope.—As a general rule a party has no right to discredit his own witness, or to call any evidence to contradict him, for he has voluntarily placed the witness before the Court as worthy of belief. But it some times happens that a witness proves unexpectedly adverse to the party who calls him, and then this rule and the rule that no leading questions can be put in examination-in-chief are relaxed, and the counsels are allowed by the Court to put leading questions in examination-in-chief and may attack the character and dispute the veracity of the witness in fact, to cross-examine him. The foundation of the rule against leading questions is that the witness is favourable to the party who calls him; and when that is not the case, the reason for insisting on the rule is gone. The mere fact that a party is driven to call his opponent as his witness does not entitle him to treat that opponent as hostile and cross-examine him without the leave of the Court. Scott v. Sampson, 8 Q. B. D. 491. But whenever the Judge is satisfied that a witness is hostile to the party who called him, he will, upon application, declare him so to be; and this will entitle a counsel for that party to treat him as a witness called by the other side. Price v. Manning, 42 Ch. D. 372—Powell Ev. 529. As regards Indian cases vide, 6 C. W. N. 513 P. C.; 28 C. 594. It is not open to the prosecution in a criminal trial to cross-examine their own witness unless the Court declares him to be a hostile witness; unless this is done the answer to questions would not be admissible in evidence and the Court should not allow such questions. 1 Pat. 758=4 Pat. L. T. 232. There is no distinction for the purposes of this section between attesting witnesses whom a party is obliged to call and other witnesses whom a party cites of his own choices. 47 C. 1043=24 C. W. N. 860. A witness who is unfavourable is not necessarily hostile for a hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence, shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. 34 C. L. J. 107.

155. The credit of a witness may be impeached in the following ways
 Impeaching credit of witness. by the adverse party, or, with the consent of the Court, by the party who calls him :—

- (1) by the evidence of persons who testify, that they, from their knowledge of the witness, believe him to be unworthy of credit;
- (2) by proof that the witness has been bribed, or has "accepted" the offer of a bribe, or has received any other corrupt inducement to give his evidence;
- (3) by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted;
- (4) when a man is prosecuted for rape or an attempt to ravish, it may be shown that the prosecutrix was of a generally immoral character.

Explanation.—A witness declaring another witness to be unworthy of credit may not, upon his examination-in-chief, give reasons for his belief, but he may be asked his reasons in cross-examination, and the answers which he gives cannot be contradicted, though, if they are false, he may afterwards be charged with giving false evidence.

Illustrations.

(a) A sues B for the price of goods sold and delivered to B, C says that A delivered the goods to B.

Evidence is offered to show that on a previous occasion, he said that he had not delivered the goods to B.

The evidence is admissible.

(b) A is indicted for the murder of B.

C says that B, when dying, declared that A had given B the wound of which he died.

Evidence is offered to show that, on a previous occasion, C said that the wound was not given by A or in his presence.

The evidence is admissible.

Legislative changes.—The word "accepted" in para (2) was substituted for the original word "had" by Act 18 of 1872.

Scope.—"In addition to counter proofs and cross-examination, there are three ways of throwing discredit on the testimony of an adversary's witness. (1) By giving evidence of his general bad character for veracity i. e., the evidence of persons who depose that he is in their judgment unworthy of belief, even though he made the statement on his oath. And here the enquiry must be limited to what they know of his general character, on which alone judgment should be founded: particular facts cannot be gone into; (2) By showing that he has on former occasions made statements inconsistent with the evidence he has given: (3) By proving misconduct connected with proceedings, or other circumstances showing that he does not stand indifferent between the contending parties. Thus it may be proved that a witness has been bribed to give the evidence or has offered bribes to others to give evidence for the party whom he favours, or that he has used expressions of animosity and revenge towards the party against whom he bears testimony etc. (Best § 644). The Indian Legislators have accepted the first two instances in toto and has taken only that part of misconduct which consists in taking bribery. It is always admissible to prove that a witness has taken bribe to give his evidence. Langhorn's Case, 7 How. St. Tr. 446; Attorney General v. Hitchcock 1 Ex. Ch. 91=11 Jur. 478. The last instance is also taken from the English law but it is only applicable in a case of rape and when the prosecutrix is examined.

Clause (1).—Here the enquiry must be limited to what they know of his general character, on which alone the judgment should be founded; particular facts cannot be gone into. So a party may call witnesses to swear that, in their opinion, based on their knowledge of the general character and reputation of a witness on the other side, he is not to be believed on his oath. R. v. Brown, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 70; Cockle Case 283.

Clause (2).—In Att. General v. Hitchcock, 1 Ex. 91=11 Jur. 498; Pollock C. B. observed: "The offer of a bribe is a matter of no importance if it be not accepted, for it does not disparage the party to whom it is offered". In the same case Alderson B. observed: "The offer of a bribe by a witness to another, or the fact of a bribe having been accepted by him, tends to show that he is not impartial." This is an example of misconduct connected with the proceeding.

Clause (3).—See illustrations (a) and (b). Any statement, verbal as well as written, may be used for this purpose. The witness must be specifically asked whether he made such and such statements, before he can be contradicted by them through another witness. Where the statement is in writing; see ante, Section 146, Proviso (4). (Norton Ev. 334). As regards statements made before police vide 11 B. H. C. 120; 11 B. 657; 15 A. 25; 27 A. 469; 17 P. R. 1886 Cr. 16 C. 610; 33 C. 1023; 17 A. 57; A. W. N 1905, 54; 16 C. 612 N; 20 C. 8 C. W. N. 218; 26 M. 191. The expression, "which is liable to be contradicted" means "which is relevant to the issue." 17 C. 344; 14 L. W. 612.

Clause (4).—"On indictments for rape or an attempt to commit that crime, while evidence of general bad character is admissible to show that the prosecutrix, like any other witness, ought not to be believed upon her oath, proof that she is a reputed prostitute would go far towards raising an inference she has yielded willingly to the prisoners' embraces. General evidence, therefore, of this kind will be received, though the woman be not called as a witness and though, if called she be not asked, on cross-examination, any question tending to impeach her character for chastity" Norton, Ev. 334..

156. When a witness whom it is intended to corroborate gives evidence of any relevant fact, he may be questioned as to any other circumstances which he observed at or near to the time or place at which such relevant fact occurred, if the Court is of opinion that such circumstances, if proved, would corroborate the testimony of the witness as to the relevant fact which he testifies.

Illustration.

A, an accomplice, gives an account of a robbery in which he took part. He describes various incidents unconnected with the robbery which occurred on his way to and from the place where it was committed.

Independent evidence of these facts may be given in order to corroborate his evidence as to the robbery itself.

Corroborative evidence.—This is additional evidence proving similar facts or facts calculated to produce the same results as facts already given in evidence. The distinction between corroborative and cumulative evidence is clearly marked, although ordinarily corroborative evidence simply means fortifying evidence, whether it is evidence of different or similar facts, or additional evidence of the same fact. (Burr. Jones s. 87.)

Scope.—This section provides for the admission of evidence given for the purposes not of proving a relevant fact, but of testing the witness's truthfulness. There is often no better way of doing this than by ascertaining the accuracy of his evidence as to surrounding circumstances, though they are not so immediately connected with the facts of the case as to be themselves irrelevant. While, on the one hand, important corroboration may be given in the case of a truthful witness, a valuable field for cross-examination and exposure is offered in the case of a false witness. In order to prepare the ground of their corroboration, it is necessary to elicit these surrounding circumstances in the first instance from the witness himself, and for this, the section makes provision (Cun. Ev. 388.) This section, in effect, declares evidence of certain facts to be admissible; and if it had not been inserted the Judge would have had to determine the relevancy of those facts by reference to secs 7 and 11, and he might perhaps have been influenced by the practice in England which has been against the admission of such evidence. (Markby Ev. 110.)

157. In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former, statement made by such witness relating to the same fact at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact may be proved.

Former statements of witness may be proved to corroborate latter testimony as to same fact.

English law.—Facts which tend to render more probable the truth of a witness's testimony on any material point are admissible in corroboration thereof, although otherwise irrelevant to the issue and although happening before the date of the fact to be corroborated. (Wilcox v. Godfrey, 26 L. T. N. S. 481). But facts which are not more consistent with the truth of such testimony than the reverse, are inadmissible. Whenever the testimony of a witness is challenged by cross-examination or otherwise, corroboration thereof is allowable; and in certain case no verdict can be obtained without the production of such evidence. The corroborative facts and evidence must, however, be proved otherwise than by the testimony of the witness to be corroborated. Formerly the fact that a witness had made a previous statement similar to his testimony in Court could always be proved to confirm his testimony. But afterwards the rule was changed, and such evidence is now generally inadmissible either on direct examination to confirm his testimony, or on re-examination to re-establish his credit when impeached by proof of a previous contradictory statement (Phipson Ev. 149).

Scope.—Before corroborative evidence is admissible, the evidence sought to be corroborated must have been given. 5 C. W. N. XVI. A statement made by a witness to a chief constable can only be used under this section to corroborate the evidence of the first witness at the trial. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 508 The force of any corroboration by means of previous consistent statements must evidently depend upon the truth of the proposition that he who is consistent desires to be believed. 11 B. H. C. R. 197 (198).

158. Whenever any statement, relevant under section 32 or 33, is proved, all matters may be proved either in connection with proved statement relevant under section 32 or 33, or in order to contradict or to corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested.

Scope.—The statements admissible under sections 32 and 33 are exceptional cases, and the evidence is only admitted from the improbability or great inconvenience of producing the authors of the statements. It is only just therefore, that all the same safeguards for veracity should be provided as if the authors of the statements were themselves before the Court, and subjected to oath and cross-examination. (Norton Ev. 336). The present section has the effect of exposing any such statement, when admitted, so far as may be, to all the scrutiny and giving the advantage of all the corroboration, which it would have had on the cross-examination of the person making it. (Cun Ev. 390). See also 23 C. 441.

159. A witness may, while under examination, refresh his memory by referring to any writing made by himself at the time of the transaction concerning which he is questioned, or so soon afterwards, that the Court considers it likely that the transaction was at the time fresh in his memory.

The witness may also refer to any such writing made by any other person, and read by the witness within the time aforesaid, if when he read it he knew it to be correct.

When witness may use copy of document to refresh memory. Whenever a witness may refresh his memory by reference to any document, he may, with the permission of the Court, refer to a copy of such document:

Provided the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient reason for the non-production of the original.

An expert may refresh his memory by reference to professional treatises.

Principle.—It is a well-settled and undisputed principle of the law of evidence that a witness, under certain legal restrictions, may refer to written or printed memoranda, documents, papers or letters, for the purpose of refreshing, assisting or stimulating his recollection and memory with regard to the facts about which he is testifying. The rule requires that a witness should testify only to such facts as are within his own knowledge and recollection; but this requirement is not violated by permitting him to refresh his memory in the manner above indicated. Bentham has pointed out the advantages and disadvantages of allowing a witness on the stand to consult notes or memoranda for the purpose of refreshing the memory. "On the one hand, what you want is a prompt and unpremeditated answer. If you allow him time to consult notes, you partly lose the advantage of that lively and quick examination which does not give bad faith time to think". On the other hand, if this assistance is denied, the witness will often be unable to give accurate and complete testimony, and the whole object of the judicial investigation may be defeated. It is universally agreed that the balance between the two inconvenience is by no means equal and that, under proper limitation witnesses may resort to memoranda or writings in aid of memory. Such is the ordinary human memory that very few witnesses would be able to testify as to particular dates, numbers, quantities and sums, after a lapse of a few years, if they were not permitted to refer to papers and writings which they knew to be correct at the time they were made. (Burr Jones Ev. 874).

Cases.—The writing need not be admissible in evidence. 8 C. 211; 9 C. 455; 16 C. P. L. R. 122; 55 L. A. 107 P. C. Under this section it is not necessary that the witness must be sure that what was reduced to writing by him is a correct record. It is enough if, on reading it, the true facts are recalled to his memory. If the words are not recalled to his memory, the notes may be admitted under s. 160, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the notes. 5 M. L. T. 393=9 Cr. L. J. 456=32 M. 384. A police-officer is not bound to refresh his memory. 8 C. 154 (156); see also 8 C. 745.

160. A witness may also testify to facts mentioned in any such document as is mentioned in section 159, although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document.

Testimony to facts stated in document mentioned in section 159.

Illustration.

A book-keeper may testify to facts recorded by him in books regularly kept in the course of business, if he knows that the books were correctly kept, although he has forgotten the particular transactions entered.

Scope.—In order that a document may be used to refresh the memory, it is by no means necessary, that the witness after having seen it should have any independent recollection of the facts mentioned therein or connected therewith, but it will suffice if he remembers that he has seen the paper before, and that when he saw it, he knew its contents to be correct, or even if, entirely forgetting the instances themselves, and the fact of his having seen the paper, he can still, in consequence of recognising his signature or writing upon it, vouch for the accuracy of the memorandum, or swear to the particular fact in question. Thus where an agent who made a parol lease, and entered a memorandum of the terms in a book states that he has no memory of the transaction save from the book, though on reading the entry he entertains no doubt that the fact really happened, it was held sufficient." Taylor § 1412. See 49 C. 573. The question whether secondary evidence has in any given case been rightly admitted is one which is proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. 5 Bom. L. R. 708=28 B. 94.

161. Any writing referred to under the provisions of the two last preceding sections must be produced and shown to the adverse party if he requires it; such party may, if he pleases, cross-examine the witness thereupon.

Right of adverse party as to writing used to refresh memory.

Scope.—In all cases where documents are used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a witness, it is usual and reasonable,—and if the witness has no independent recollection of the fact, it is necessary,—that they should be produced at the trial and that the opposite counsel should have an opportunity of inspecting them, in order that the cross or re-examination, he may have the benefit of the witness's refreshing his memory by every part. Neither is the adverse party bound to put the document in, as part of his evidence merely because he has looked at it, or examined the witness respecting such entries as have been previously referred to; but if he goes further than this, and asks questions as to other parts of the memorandum, it seems, that he thereby makes it his own evidence. (Taylor § 1413). The grounds upon which the opposite party is permitted to inspect a writing are: (1) to secure the full benefit of the witness's recollection as to the whole of the facts; (2) to check the use of improper documents and (3) to compare his oral testimony with the written statement. The opposite party may look at the writing to see what kind of writing it is in order to check the use of improper document; but it is doubtful whether he is entitled, except for his particular purpose, to question the witness as to other and independent matters contained in the same series of writing. 8 C. 739 (745).

Case.—2 Ind. Cas. 535.

162. A witness summoned to produce a document shall, if it is in his possession or power, bring it to Court, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to its production or to its admissibility. The validity of any such objection shall be decided on by the Court.

The Court, if it sees fit, may inspect the document, unless it refers to matters of State, or take other evidence to enable it to determine on its admissibility.

If for such a purpose it is necessary to cause any document to be translated, the Court may, if it thinks fit direct the translator to keep the contents secret unless the document is to be given in evidence; and if the interpreter disobeys such direction, he shall be held to have committed an offence under section 165 of the Indian Penal Code.

Comment.—If a person served with a subpœna admits that he has the documents required, with him, he must produce them. He may be asked what documents he has with him, and he is bound to answer the question without being sworn, and produce the documents. The witness produces the document to the Court and not to the parties, and the Court decides whether it is to be used or not. The witness can, of course take any legal objection to producing the document. If a witness attends on a subpœna tecum, with a document which he properly refuses to produce on the ground of privilege, secondary evidence will be admissible. If he does not attend on such a subpœna or attends and refuses to produce the writing on any other ground but that of privilege, secondary evidence will not be admissible, but the witness will be punishable for contempt. A person cannot, of course be compelled by subpœna to produce documents which are not in his possession or under his control. (Powell Ev. 653). If the Court decides to summon a Government official for the production of certain documents, it should only do so after careful consideration and once the summons had been issued, production should ordinarily be insisted on if the party who obtained the summons so desires. 45 Ind. Cas. 898.

163. When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so.

Scope.—The production of papers upon notice does not make them evidence in the cause, unless the party calling for them inspects them, so as to become acquainted with their contents ; in which case he is obliged to use them as his evidence, at least if they be in any way material to the issue. The reason for this rule is, that it would give an unconscionable advantage to a party, enable him to pry into the affairs of his adversary, without at the same time subjecting him to the risk of making whatever he inspects evidence for both parties. (Taylor § 1817). "If a party gives notice to produce, and at the trial calls for the document and inspects it, he is bound to put it in as evidence if the other party requires it. The law will not allow him to compel its production, and see its contents, and then make use of it or not, according as it strengthens and impairs his cause." (Cun. Introduction to Ev. § 117). Where a party to a case calls for a document from the other party and inspects the same under this section, he takes the risk of making it evidence for both the parties. 5 Bom. L. R. 380 ; 106 Ind. Cas. 305. It is doubtful whether this section is applicable to accounts produced under the procedure for discovery or only to accounts produced after the trial has begun. 72 Ind. Cas. 459.

Case—57 Ind. Cas. 973.

164. When a party refuses to produce a document which he has had Using, as evidence, of notice to produce, he cannot afterwards use document production of which the document as evidence without the consent was refused on notice. of the other party or the order of the Court.

Illustrations.

A sues B on an agreement and gives B notice to produce it. At the trial A calls for the document and B refuses to produce it. A gives secondary evidence of its contents.

B seeks to produce the document itself to contradict the secondary evidence given by A, or in order to show that the agreement is not stamped. He cannot do so.

Scope.—If a party, after a notice, declines to produce a document, when formally called upon to do so, he will not afterwards be allowed to change his mind ; and therefore, if he once refuses, he can not, when his opponent has proved a copy, and is about to have it read, produce the original, and object to its admissibility without the evidence of an attending witness. Neither after such refusal, will he be permitted to put the document into the hands of his opponents' witness for the purpose of cross-examination, or to produce and prove it as part of his own case. (Taylor § 1818). A party who, after notice, declines to produce his document, cannot afterwards change his mind and produce it as part of his own case ; or put it in the hands of his opponents' witnesses, for the purpose of cross-examination. If his adversary, being entitled to give secondary evidence, prove a copy, he is bound by it. (Norton Ev. 341.)

165. The Judge may in order to discover or to obtain proper proof of Judge's power to put relevant facts, ask any question he pleases, in questions or order produc- any form, at any time of any witness, or of the tion. parties about any fact relevant or irrelevant ; and may order the production of any document or thing ; and neither the parties nor their agents shall be entitled to make any objection to any such question or order, nor without leave of the Court to cross-examine any witness upon any answer given in reply to any such question.

Provided that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant, and duly proved ;

Provided also that this section shall not authorize any Judge to compel any witness to answer any question, or to produce any document which such witness would be entitled to refuse to answer or produce under sections 121 to 131, both inclusive, if the question were asked or the document were called for by the adverse party ; nor shall the Judge ask any question which it would be improper for any other person to ask under section 148 or 149 ; nor shall he dispense with primary evidence of any document, except in the cases hereinbefore excepted.

Scope.—The object of the questions which the Judge is here empowered to put is either to discover a relevant fact or to obtain proper proof of it. There is accordingly no relaxation of the rules previously laid down as to relevancy. The section merely authorizes questions, the object of which is to ascertain whether the case is or is not proved in accordance with this rule (Cun. Ev. 396). Under this section, a Judge has power to ask any question he pleases about relevant facts, if he does so in order to discover or obtain proper proof of relevant facts. 10 B. 185. See also 11 B. H. C. R. 166 ; Cr. Reg. 14—10—1885.

The words "any witness" in the section include a Court witness. 9 O. & A. L. R. 549. Even though a document is not produced at the first hearing of a case the Court can call for the document under this section. 70 Ind. Cas. 278. The Court's decision must rest, not upon suspicion but upon legal ground established by legal testimony. 34 C. L. J. 107. Where the trial Court exceeded the bounds of the provisions of this section the appellate Court can interfere. 47 C. 1043.

Cases.—34 M. L. J. 526 ; 45 Ind. Cas. 734 ; 44 Ind. Cas. 433 ; 66 Ind. Cas. 15.

166. In cases tried by jury or with assessors, the jury or assessors, may put any questions to the witnesses, through or by leave of the Judge, which the Judge himself might put and which he considers proper.

Power of jury or assessors to put questions.

CHAPTER XI.

OF IMPROPER ADMISSION AND REJECTION OF EVIDENCE.

167. The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision.

Scope.—This section is applicable to criminal as well as civil cases. 1 C. 207 ; 2 B. 61. It is applicable to all judicial proceedings, 9 B. H. C. 358. It is also applicable to criminal trials by jury. 19 B. 749. Though this section implies that improper reception of evidence is not generally to be made a ground for the reversal of a judgment, unless it is objected to by the party prejudiced by such rejection, yet s. 256 of Cr. Pro. Code, lays down that it is the duty of the judge in his discretion to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether it is objected to by the parties or not. 11 B. H. C. R. 44. Where no objection was raised in the lower Court as regards the reception of improper evidence and the appellate Court finds that there is sufficient evidence discarding the improper evidence admitted to sustain a conviction, held that the Appellate Court should not interfere with the conviction. 11 B. H. C. R. 90. See also, 6 B. L. R. 495 ; 10 A. 207 ; 9 B. L. R. 371 ; 16 W. R. (P. C.) 11 ; 20 W. R. 384 ; 20 W. R. 458 ; 19 B. 749 ; 7 C. 293 ; 8 C. 739 ; 21 C. 955 ; 82 Ind. Cas. 283 ; 23 C. W. N. 661. The decision of a Court must rest upon the legal grounds established by legal testimony and not upon mere suspicious circumstances. 25 C. W. N. 409.

Amendments to the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

The Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

AT THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

THE 18TH DAY OF MARCH, 1937.

Present :

The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by section two hundred and ninety-three of the Government of India Act, 1935, (hereinafter in the recitals to this Order referred to as 'the Act') His Majesty is empowered by Order in Council to provide that as from such date as may be specified in the Order any law in force in British India or in any part of British India shall, until repealed or amended by a competent legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to such adaptations and modifications as appear to His Majesty to be necessary or expedient for bringing the provisions of that law into accord with the provisions of the Act :

And whereas a draft of this Order has been laid before Parliament in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section three hundred and nine of the Act and an Address has been presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament praying that an Order may be made in the terms of this Order :

Now, therefore, His Majesty, in the exercise of the said powers and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, is pleased by and with the advice of His Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and shall come into operation on the first day of April, nineteen hundred and thirty-seven.

2. (1) In this Order the expression 'Indian Law' means a law as defined in section two hundred and ninety-three of the Act.

(2) The Interpretation Act, 1889, applies for the interpretation of this Order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

3. The Indian laws mentioned in the Schedule to this Order shall, until repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to the adaptations and modifications directed by those Schedules to be made therein or, if it is so directed, shall cease to have effect.

4. (1) Whenever an expression mentioned in the first column of the Table hereunder printed occurs (otherwise than in a title or preamble or in a citation or description of an enactment), in a Central or Provincial Act or Regulation, whether an Act or Regulation mentioned in the Schedules to this Order or not, then, unless that expression is by this Order expressly directed to be otherwise adapted or modified, or to stand unmodified or to be omitted, there shall be substituted therefor the expression set opposite to it in column two of the said table.

Table of General Adaptations.

Governor-General of India in Council :	Governor-General of India :	Governor-General in Council :	} Central Government.
Governor-General :	Governor-General :	Governor-General :

Any reference to the Governor (or Lieutenant-Governor) of a named Province in Council shall be treated for the purposes of this paragraph as if it were a reference to the Governor (or Lieutenant Governor) in Council of that Province.

(2) A direction in the Schedules to this Order that a specified Indian law, or section or portion of an Indian law shall stand unmodified shall be construed merely as a direction that it is not to be modified or adapted in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this paragraph.

5. (1) Where this Order requires that in any specified Indian law, or in any section or other portion of an Indian law, certain words shall be substituted for certain other words or that certain words shall be omitted, that substitution or omission, as the case may be, shall, except where it is otherwise expressly provided, be made wherever the words referred to occur in that law or, as the case may be, in that section or portion.

(2) Where this Order requires that in any Indian law a plural noun shall be substituted for a singular noun and vice versa, or a masculine noun for a neuter noun or vice versa, there shall be made also in any verb or pronoun in the sentence in question such consequential amendment as the rules of Grammar may require.

6. (1) The following provisions shall have effect where any Indian law which under this Order is to be adapted or modified has before the commencement of this Order been amended, either generally or in relation to any particular area, by the insertion or omission of words, or the substitution of words for other words :—

(a) effect shall first be given in the amending law to any adaptation or modification required by paragraphs three and five of this order to be made therein ;

(b) the original law shall then be amended, either generally or, as the case may be, in its application to the particular area, so as to give effect to the directions contained in the amending law or, where any adaptation or modification has fallen to be made under sub-paragraph (a), in that law as so adapted or modified ; and

(c) all adaptations or modifications required by this Order to be made in the original law shall then be made in that law as so amended, except so far as in the case of any particular area they may be inapplicable.

(2) In this paragraph references to the amendment of a law by the insertion or omission of words or the substitution of words do not include references to an amendment which is effected merely by directing that certain words shall be construed in a particular manner.

7. Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Order, any reference by whatever form of words in any Indian law in force immediately before the commencement of this Order to an authority competent at the date of the passing of that law to exercise any powers or authorities, or discharge any functions, in any part of British India shall, where a corresponding new authority has been constituted by or under any Part of the Government of India Act, 1935, for the time being in force, have effect until duly repealed or amended as if it were a reference to that new authority.

8. In any Indian law in force immediately before the commencement of this Order any reference by name or description to any territory shall, unless the contrary intention appears or unless it has been, or is by this Order, otherwise expressly provided, be construed as a reference to the territory which bore that name or answered to that description at the date when the enactment containing that name or description came into operation :

Provided that in the application of any enactment to Madras, Bombay, Bihar or the Central Provinces, references in that enactment to Madras, Bombay, Bihar or the Central Provinces, as the case may be, shall be construed as exclusive of so much of those Provinces respectively as was separated therefrom on the constitution of the Provinces of Orissa and Sind.

9. The provisions of this Order which adapt or modify Indian laws so as to alter the manner in which, the authority by which, or the law under or in accordance with which, any powers are exercisable, shall not render invalid any notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule or regulation duly made or issued, or anything duly done, before the commencement of this Order ; and any such notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule, regulation or thing may be revoked, varied or undone in the like manner, to the like extent and in the like circumstances as if it had been made, issued or done after the commencement of this Order by the competent authority and under and in accordance with the provisions therein applicable to such a case.

10. Save as provided by this Order, all powers which under any law in force in British India, or in any part of British India, were immediately before the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935, vested in, or exercisable by, any person or authority shall continue to be so vested or exercisable until other provision is made by some legislature or authority empowered to regulate the matter in question.

11. Nothing in this Order shall affect the previous operation of, or anything duly done or suffered under, any Indian law, or any right, privilege, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred under any such law, or any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence already committed against any such law.

12. For the avoidance of doubt it is hereby declared that—

(a) nothing in this Order transferring or assigning any functions to the Central Government shall be construed as excluding those functions from the operation of section one hundred and twenty-three or section one hundred and twenty-four of the Government of India Act, 1935 ;

(b) the transfer by this Order to a Provincial Government of any jurisdiction theretofore exercisable by the Local Government of the Province shall not be construed as excluding that jurisdiction from the operation of sub-section (2) of section two hundred and ninety-six of the said Act ;

(c) nothing in this Order shall affect the provisions of any Order in Council for the time being in force made under section one hundred and fifty-eight, section one hundred and fifty-nine or section one hundred and sixty of the said Act (which empower Orders to be made regulating the relations of India and Burma as to their monetary systems, relief from double taxation, customs, and ancillary and related matters), or under any corresponding provisions in the Government of Burma Act, 1935 ; and

(d) no repeal effected by this Order shall affect the operation of subparagraph (2) of paragraph fifteen of the Government of India (Commencement and Transitory Provisions) Order, 1936.

WHEREAS by section one hundred and forty-nine of the Government of Burma Act, 1935, His Majesty is empowered by order in Council to provide that, as from such date as may be specified in the order, any law in force in Burma shall, until repealed or amended by the Legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to such adaptations and modifications as appear to His Majesty to be consequential on the separation of India and Burma :

And whereas a draft of this order has been laid before Parliament in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section one hundred and fifty-seven of the said Act and an Address has been presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament praying that an order may be made in this terms of this order :

Now, therefore, His Majesty, in the exercise of power conferred on him as aforesaid and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, is pleased, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows :—

Where this Order requires that in any specified Burman law or portion of a Burman law certain words shall be substituted for certain other words or that certain words shall be omitted, that substitution or omission, as the case may be, shall unless the contrary intention appears, be made wherever the words referred to occur in that law or that portion.

9. The provisions of this order which adapt or modify any enactment so as to alter the manner in which, the authority by which, or the law in or in accordance with which, any powers are exercisable, shall not render invalid any notification, order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule or regulation duly made or issued, or anything done before the commencement of this order ; and any such notification of order, commitment, attachment, bye-law, rule, regulation or thing may be revoked, varied or undone in the like manner, to the like extent and in the like circumstances as if it had been made, issued or done after the commencement of this order by the competent authority and under and in accordance with the provisions then applicable to such a case.

10. Nothing in this order shall affect the previous operation of, or anything duly done or suffered under, any Burman law, or any right, privilege, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred under any such law or any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred in respect of any offence already committed against any such law.

11. Save as provided in this order, all powers which under any law in force in Burma or in any part of Burma were at the commencement of this order vested in or exercisable by any person or authority shall continue to be so vested or exercisable until other provision is made by the Legislature or by some authority empowered to regulate the matter in question.

12. (1) References in any Burman law to that or any other Burman law, or to any section or portion thereof, shall, except in so far as the contrary intention appears, be construed—

(a) as respects any period before the separation of India and Burma, as references to that law, section or portion as in force in all places to which it then extended, whether within or without Burma :

(b) as respects any period after the said separation as referencee to that law, section or portion as in force in Burma.

(2) The foregoing provisions of this paragraph extend to references to, or to any section or portion of, any Burman law by means of the short-title of the law, notwithstanding that the Schedule to this Order alters that short-title and notwithstanding that no consequential alteration is made in the reference.

13. For the avoidance of doubt it is hereby declared that nothing in this order shall affect the operation of sub-paragraph (2) of paragraph eleven of the Government of Burma (Commencement and Transitory Provisions) Order, 1935, or of any order in Council made under Part XI of the Government of Burma Act, 1935.

The Indian Penal Code.

ACT NO. XLV OF 1860.

RECEIVED THE G.-G.'S ASSENT ON THE 6TH OCTOBER, 1860.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide a general Penal Code for Preamble. British India; It is enacted as follows :—

Notes.—All offences under the Penal Code are to be enquired into and tried according to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898).—See ss. 5 and 28 of Act V of 1898.

Interpretation of Statutes.—It is the fundamental principle of the interpretation of statutes that their language must be understood in its most ordinary and popular acceptance. 7 A. 385 (398) F. B. We are bound to adhere to the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words; as Lord Wenslaydale observed in Gray v. Pearson, 6 H. L. C. 61, unless that would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the rest of the statute, in which case the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid that absurdity and inconsistency, but no further. Vide, Vacher v. London Society, (1913) A. C. 107; Inland Revenue v. Herbet, (1913) A. C. 326; Kalimuddin v. Sahibuddin, 24 C. W. N. 4 (11) F. B.; see also Phipott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Cas. 338=3 Jur. N. S. 1269; Fordyce v. Bridges, 1 H. L. Cas. 1=11 Jur. 157; Logan v. Courtown (Earl), 13 Beav. 22=20 L. J. Chanc. 347; *Nank Ram v. Illustrations.—The Law Commissioners in submitting their report to the Right Hon'ble George Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India in Council said: "The definitions and enacting clauses contain the whole law. The illustrations make nothing law which would not be law without them. They only exhibit the law in full action, and show what its effects will be on the events of common life. Thus the Code will be at once a statute book and a collection of decided cases. The decided cases in the Code will differ from the decided cases in the English law books into most important points. In the first place, our illustrations are never intended to supply any omission in the written law, nor do they ever, in our opinion, put a strain on the written law. They are merely instances of the practical application of the written law to the affairs of mankind. Secondly, they are cases decided not by the Judges but by the Legislature, by those who make the law, and who must know more certainly than any Judge can know what the law is which they mean to make.....The decisions on particular cases which we have annexed to the provisions of the Code resemble the imperial rescripts in this, that they proceed from the same authority from which the provisions themselves proceed. They differ from the imperial rescripts in this most important circumstance, that they are not made ex post facto, that they cannot therefore be made to serve any particular turn, that the persons condemned or absolved by them are purely imaginary persons, and that, therefore, whatever may be thought of the wisdom of any judgment which we have passed there can be no doubt of its impartiality. The publication of this collection of cases decided by legislative authority will, we hope, greatly limit the power which the Courts of Justice possess of putting their own sense on the laws. But we are sensible that neither this collection nor any other can be sufficiently extensive to settle every question which may be raised as to the construction of the Code." In Mohomed Syedol Ariffan v. Ycoo Ovi Gark, (1916) A. C. 575=43 I. A. 256=21 C. W. N. 257 P. C. Lord Shaw observed: "On the second point their Lordships are of opinion that in the construction of the Evidence Act, it is the duty of a Court of Law to accept—if that can be done—the illustrations given as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text. The illustrations should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which they or the sections deal. And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves. It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption. The great usefulness of the illustrations, which have, although no part of the sections, been expressly furnished by the legislature as helpful in the working and application of the statute, should not be thus impaired." "They are to be taken as part of the statute." Lalla Balla Mall v. Ahad Sha, 35 M. L. J. 614=16 A. L. J. 905=29 C. L. J. 165=23 C. W. N. 233 (P. C.) at p. 237; 23 B. 103 (112). But the illustrations do not bind the Courts to place a meaning on the section which is inconsistent with its language. 32 C. L. J. 94=24 C. W. N. 982, (986, 987). See also 7 C. 132; 1 A. 34; 15 B. 491; 85 Ind. Cas. 722=(1925) All. 220; 28 M. 57; 34 C. 950; 45 Ind. Cas. 942=23 M. L. T. 320; 46 Ind. Cas. 497; 16 Ind. Cas. 753=30 Cr. L. J. 721; 30 Bom. L. Penal Code—how interpreted.—In Barindra Kumar Ghose v. King Emperor, 29 C. W. N. 181 at p. 191=52 I. A. 40=52 C. 197=41 C. L. J. 240=27 Bom. L. R. 148 (P. C.) In delivering the judgment Lord Sumner observed: "Their Lordships do not think it useful to go at length into the history of the preparation and enactment of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, which played no inconsiderable part in the discussion of this subject in India. That the criminal law of India is prescribed by and, so far as it goes is contained in the Indian Penal Code, that accordingly (as the Code itself shows) the criminal law of India and that of England differ in sundry respects, and that the Code has first of all to be construed in accordance with its natural meaning and irrespective of any assumed intention on the part of its framers to leave unaltered the law as it existed before, are, though common places considerations which it is important never to forget. It is however, equally true that the Code must not be assumed to have sought to introduce difference from the prior law. It continues to employ some of the older technical terms without even defining them, as in the case of abetment. It abandons others such as principal in the first or the second degree, but it must not be supposed that because it ceases to use the terms, it does not intend to provide for the ideas which those terms, however imperfectly, expressed." In construing the Penal Code and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, reference may be made to the notes to the Penal Code prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners. 17 C. 852; 17 A. 44; 8 B. 241; 18 B. 616 (625); contra, 19 W. R. 48 (53). Penal Code is a complete Code. Matter outside it can be invoked only for construing its provisions. A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 909=46 M. 728=51 M. L. J. 112. The Code must be interpreted according to its natural meaning only. A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 1=29 C. W. N. 181=23 A. L. J. 314 (P. C.) Policy of Legislature is immaterial. A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 417=57 B. 537=35 Bom. L. R. 886.

How to construe a penal statute.—A penal statute, when its language is ambiguous, should be construed in the manner most favourable to the liberties of the subject, and this is more especially so, when the enactment is of an exceptional character. 1 B. 308 (F. B.) A penal statute must be construed strictly, and Magistrates ought to be very careful before they proceed to inflict imprisonment in a summary manner. They must avoid all appearance of oppression. 13 B. 600. A penal statute must be construed strictly, that is, nothing is to be regarded as within the meaning of the statute which is not within the letter—which is not clearly and intelligibly described in the very words of the statute itself. 8 C. 214 (F. B.); 10 C. L. R. 155; 13 B. 681; 4 P. L. J. 74. Penal provisions have to be strictly construed, nor can the liability to punishment for the neglect of a statutory obligation be extended by inferential reasoning. 28 C. 504=5 C. W. N. 711; see also 27 N. L. R. 270=A. I. R. 1931 Nag. 177=32 Cr. L. J. 1266; A. I. R. 1932 Pat. 281=33 Cr. L. J. 775=13 P. L. T. 461. In construing a statute which affects the liberty of the subject, the Court should not only adopt the natural and ordinary construction, but should construe strictly expressions occurring therein. 5 C. W. N. 108; see also L. B. R. (1893-1900). 121. No cases shall be deemed to fall within the provisions of a penal statute which did not fall within the reasonable meaning of their terms and within their spirit and scope. The same rules of interpretation apply to notifications issued under a penal statute. 96 P. L. R. 1901=24 P. R. 1901 Cr. In interpreting a penal statute, it is important to see that the powers conferred upon the Magistrates are duly exercised with reference to the rendering unlawful acts that would otherwise be lawful. 10 A. 115=A. W. N. 1888. 25; see also L. B. R. (1893-1900). 284; L. B. R. (1872-1892). 279; 14 Bom. L. R. 954=17 Ind. Cas. 789; L. B. R. (1897-1901) Vol. I. 291; 14 Bom. L. R. 954=17 Ind. Cas. 789; 7 B. H. C. R. 39; 42 M. L. J. 149. The general principle is to construe an Act strictly and when there is any doubt such doubt should be given in favour of the subject. 8 Lah. 320=100 Ind. Cas. 716=28 Cr. L. J. 332=78 Punj. L. R. 521=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 338; see also 25 A. L. J. 515=102 Ind. Cas. 490=8 L. R. 108 Cr.=28 Cr. L. J. 554=A. I. R. 1927 All. 536; 28 Cr. L. J. 913=105 Ind. Cas. 433 (F. B.); 5 Rang. 244; 28 Punj. L. R. 225=101 Ind. Cas. 747=A. I. R. 1917 Lah. 276; 25 A. L. J. 661=102 Ind. Cas. 633; 29 Bom. L. R. 494=A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 369; 1928 Nag. 219; 32 P. L. R. 493=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 476; A. I. R. 1932 Nag. 174=28 N. L. R. 302. The person charged has a right to say that the thing charged although within the words is not within the spirit of the enactment. 53 C. 492=97 Ind. Cas. 376=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 627. Where a penal Act is ambiguous and there are two possible interpretations, one of which would mitigate the penalty and the other would aggravate it, the former should prevail. 96 Ind. Cas. 113=27 Cr. L. J. 865; see also 86 Ind. Cas. 280=1925 Mad. 239. In case of penal Act, the legislation is presumed to act prospectively and not retrospectively. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 145=32 Cr. L. J. 700.

Code is exhaustive.—The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matter in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction. 4 Bom. L. R. 793=29 C. 707=29 I. A. 195=6 C. W. N. 825; but see 33 C. 927.

Retrospective operation of statutes.—Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights must be presumed not to have a retrospective operation, unless the language clearly supports a contrary construction. 36 C. L. J. 132; 18 N. L. R. 85=(1922) Nag. 227; 5 N. L. R. 251; 47 C. 1198=31 C. L. J. 463=24 C. W. N. 1011=58 Ind. Cas. 327; A. I. R. (1925) Nag. 447=8 N. L. J. 175; 83 Ind. Cas. 752=A. I. R. (1925) Nag. 249.

Consolidating Act.—In construing an Act of Parliament which is a consolidating Act which does not profess to amend or alter the provisions of the Acts consolidated, prima facie, the same effect ought to be given to its provisions as was given to those of the Acts for which it was substituted. 25 Q. B. D. 183=59 L. J. Q. B. 355=63 L. T. 403=55 J. P. 36. In construing a consolidating and amending Act as distinguished from a codifying Act, the Court is entitled to have regard to previous decision. (1892) 2 Ch. 557=71 L. T. 72.

Codification Act.—In Vagliano v. Bank of England 60 L. J. Q. B. 145=64 L. T. 353=39 W. R. 657=55 J. P. 676=(1891) A. C. 102 at p. 107, Lord Halsbury L. C. said: "I am wholly unable to adopt the view that where a statute is expressly said to codify the law, you are at liberty to go outside the code, so created, because before the existence of that code another law prevailed." In the same case at p. 144, Lord Harschell also observed: "The proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute and to ask what its natural meaning is, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law, and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which, it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used instead of, as before, by roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions, dependent upon a knowledge of the exact effect even of an obsolete proceeding such as a demurrer to evidence. I am of course far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Code. If, for example, a provision be of doubtful import, such resort would be perfectly legitimate, or, again, if in a Code of the law of negotiable instruments words be found which have previously acquired a technical meaning, or have been used in a sense other than their ordinary one, in relation to such instruments, the same interpretation might well be put upon them in the Code. I give these as examples merely; they of course do not exhaust the category. What, however, I am venturing to insist upon is, that the first step should be to interpret the language of the statute, and then an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground."

Title.—If there is in the provisions of an Act anything admitting of a doubt, the title of an Act is a matter proper to be considered in the interpretation of the Act. Fielden v. Morley Corporation (1899) 1 Ch. 1; Shaw v. Ruddin, 9 Ir. C. L. R. 214; Reg. v. Mellow Union, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 35; Fenton v. Thorley (1903) A. C. 447; Amplifier v. Bradford Corporation, (1902) 2 Ch. C. A. 594; A. G. v. Mortgage Pier Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 331; Vacher & Sons Ltd v. London Society of Compositors., (1913) A. C. 107, 128, 129; *Sage v. Preamble.—The preamble is undoubtedly a part of the Act, and may be used to explain, but not to control, the enacting part, which goes often beyond the preamble, if the words to be found in the former are strong enough for the purpose. 2 M. H. C. R. 322; see also 1930 A. L. J. 941=A. I. R. 1932 All. 617; 32 P. L. R. 598=14 Lah. 203; A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 120=140 Ind. Cas. 926. But the preamble cannot either restrict or extend the enacting part when the language and the object and the scope of the Act are not open to doubt. A preamble in a statute cannot govern clear expressions in the enacting part thereof. 18 C. L. J. 187; 11 A. 266; 14 A. 145; 45 C. 343. The preamble of an Act does not control any plain question of doubt which arises when the construction of a particular provision and consideration relating to the scope of the Act are involved. 12 A. 409=A. W. N. 1890 (F. B.) 145; 14 C. 176. It may be referred to clearing ambiguity in the enacting portion of the Act. 30 Bom. L. R. 1494 (1498). The preamble shows that the object of the Legislature was to provide a general Penal Code for British India. 48 C. 388=24 C. W. N. 982. It contains no specified repeal of penal laws then in force and that omission is intentional. 41 C. 173 (211)=17 C. W. N. 1253.

Headings of Sections.—The heading to a group of sections in a Statute ought not to be pressed into a constructive limitation upon the exercise of the powers given by the express words of the Act. 42 B. 462=20 Bom. L. R. 937=23 C. W. N. 110=45 I. A. 125 (P. C.) In construing a statute headings should be ignored and it is only the sections which the Courts are called upon to interpret as being the substantive part of the enactment. 47 A. 756=23 A. L. J. 725=89 Ind. Cas. 122=A. I. R. 1925 All. 787; 48 M. 395.

English Cases.—English Cases on construction of English Statutes are of great assistance, sometimes in construing Acts of the Indian Legislature; but of course, it is always necessary to see that the Indian Statute and the English statute resemble one another in their purposes, and not only in a portion of a section which, for convenience of drafting, has been adopted by the draftsman of the Indian Act. 22 C. 77. Where an Indian Act was passed for the purpose of extending to India the provisions of the English Act, English decisions may be referred to as a guide to construe the Act. 26 A. 299=31 I. A. 116=8 C. W. N. 521=14 M. L. J. 190=6 Bom. L. R. 505; 4 S.L.R. 26=7 Ind. Cas. 595; 1 B. 23 but see 12 O. L. J. 1. Unless the English Statute, and the Act of the Indian Legislature are in pari materia, references to English decisions, instead of affording any help, will only tend to confuse the consideration of the matter in issue. 30 C. 36=7 C. W. N. 249. In construing a section of the Indian Act, cases bearing upon the construction of similar provisions of an English Act, different in its language, can be of little or no assistance. 25 C. 346; see also 24 C. W. N. 454=31 C. L. J. 283=56 Ind. Cas. 541; 5 B. 338; 46 C. 515; 46 C. 607=24 C. W. N. 1045. "In construing a section of an Indian Act which is professedly based on English enactment, which in fact reproduces almost word by word the language of the English enactment, we are in practice, if not in theory, bound by the decisions of English Court." Per Mookerjee J. in 21 C. Whereas it is expedient to provide a general Penal Code etc.—The Indian Law Commissioners, of whom Lord Macaulay was the President, submitted the draft of Indian Penal Code on the 14th October, 1837, to the Right Honourable George Lord Auckland, G. C. B. Governor-General of India in Council. That draft Code was further revised by Barnes Peacock and others and found place in the Statute Book in 1860. The difficulty of enacting Penal Law for British India is thus described by the Law Commissioners: "Your Lordship in council will perceive that the system of penal law which we propose is not a digest of any existing system and that no existing system has furnished us even with a ground work. We trust that your Lordship in council will not hence infer that we have neglected to inquire, as we are commanded to do by Parliament, into the present state of that part of the law, or that in other parts of our labours we are likely to recommend unsparing innovation, and the entire sweeping away of ancient usages. We are perfectly aware of the value of that sanction which long prescription and national feeling give to institutions. We are perfectly aware that law givers ought not to disregard even that unreasonable prejudices of those for whom they legislate. So sensible are we of the importance of these considerations, that, though there are not the same objections to innovation in penal legislation as to innovation affecting vested rights of property, yet, if we had found India in possession of a system of criminal law which the people regarded with partiality, we should have been inclined rather to ascertain it, to digest it, and moderately to correct it, than to propose a system fundamentally different."

The law Commissioners continued: "But it appears to us that none of the systems of penal law established in British India has any claim to our attention except what it may derive from its own intrinsic excellence. All those systems are foreign. All were introduced by conquerors differing in race, manners, language and religion from the great mass of the people. The Criminal Law of the Hindus was long ago superseded, throughout the greater part of the territories now subject to the Company, by that of the Mahomedans, and is certainly the last system of criminal law which an enlightened and humane Government would be disposed to receive. The Mahomedan Criminal Law has in its turn been superseded, to a great extent, by the British Regulations. Indeed, in the territories subject to the Presidency of Bombay, the Criminal Law of the Mahomedans, as well as that of the Hindus, has been altogether discarded except in one particular class of cases; Thus widely do the systems of penal law now established in British India differ from each other, nor can we recommend any one of the three systems as furnishing even the rudiments of a good Code. The penal law of Bengal and of the Madras Presidency is, in fact, Mahomedan law which has gradually been distorted to such an extent as to deprive it of all title to the religious veneration of Mahomedans, yet which retains enough of its original peculiarities to perplex and encumber the administration of justice. In substance it now differs at least as widely from the Mahomedan penal law, as the penal law of England differs from the penal law of France. Yet the technical terms and nice distinctions borrowed from the Mahomedan law are still retained..... Such is the state of law in the Moffussil. In the meantime the population which lives within the local jurisdiction of the Courts established by Royal Charters is subject to the English Criminal Law, that is to say, to a very artificial and complicated system,—to a foreign system,—to a system which was framed without the smallest reference to India,—to a system which even in the country for which it was framed is generally considered as requiring extensive reform,—to a system finally, which has just been pronounced by a Commission composed of able and learned English lawyers to be so defective that it can be reformed only by being entirely taken to pieces and reconstructed. Under these circumstances we have not thought it desirable to take as the ground work of the Code of any of the system of law now in force in any part of India. We have, indeed, to the best of our ability, compared the Code with all those systems ; and we have taken suggestions from all ; but we have not adopted a single provision merely because it formed a part of any of those systems. We have also compared our work with the most celebrated system of Western jurisprudence, as far as the very scanty means of information which were accessible to us in this country enabled us to do so. We have derived much valuable assistance from the French Code, and from the divisions of the French Courts of Justice on questions touching the construction of that Code. We have derived assistance still more valuable from the Code of Louisiana, prepared by the late Mr. Leingston. We are the more desirous to acknowledge our obligations to that eminent jurist, because we have found ourselves under the necessity of combating his opinion on some important questions."

1. This Act shall be called "The Indian Penal Code," and shall take effect throughout the whole of the territories which are or may become vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 and 22 Victoria, chapter 106, entitled "An Act for the better Government of India."

The words "except the settlement of Prince of Wales Island, Singapur and Malacca," repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act (XII of 1891 Sch. I, have here been omitted.

Operation of the Act.—There is no provision of law by which parties of any sect have a right to be exempted from the operation of the Criminal law applicable to all the subjects of the King. 25 A. 31=A. W. N. 1902, 173.

2. Every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code, and not otherwise, for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof, of which he shall be guilty within the said territories.

Punishment of offences committed within the said territories.

Amendment.—The words and figures “on and from the first day of May, 1861,” repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act (XII of 1891), Sch. I have here been omitted.

Every person.—As to persons of high rank, the Indian Law Commissioners said: “Your Lordship in Council will see that we have not proposed to except from the operation of the Code any of the ancient sovereign houses of India residing within the Company’s territories. Whether any such exception ought to be made, is a question which, without more accurate knowledge than we possess, we could not venture to decide. We will only beg permission most respectfully to observe that every such exception is an evil: that it is an evil that any man should be above the law—that it is still a greater evil that the public should be taught to regard as a high and enviable distinction the privilege of being above the law—that the longer such privileges are suffered to last, the more difficult it is to take them away;—and we greatly doubt whether any consideration, except that of public faith solemnly pledged, deserves to be weighed against the advantages of equal justice.”

“The peculiar state of public feeling in this country may tender it advisable to frame the law of procedure in such a manner that families of high rank may be dispensed, as far as possible from the necessity of performing acts which are here regarded, however unreasonable, as humiliating. But though it may be proper to make wide distinctions as respects form, there ought in our opinion, to be, as respects substance, no distinction except those which the Government is bound by express engagements to make. That a man of rank should be examined with particular ceremonies, or in a particular place, may in the present state of Indian society be highly expedient. But that a man of any rank should be allowed to commit crimes with impunity must, in every state of society, be most pernicious.” It will perhaps be found that the position of those persons who are privileged by treaty or otherwise differs from that of other persons rather in regard to form of procedure than in actual liability. Vide Acts XXVII of 1854, XXXVII of 1858.

Corporation.—A corporation cannot in its corporate capacity commit a crime by an act in the fullest sense. Ultra vires, and contrary to its nature. But within the sphere of its corporate capacity, and to an undefined extent beyond, whenever it assumes to act as a corporation it has the same capabilities of criminal intent and of act in other words, of crime—as an individual who has the like relations. Some have stumbled over the apparent impossibility of an artificial and soulless being, called a corporation, having an evil mind or criminal intent. In this view it was said in an old case that a corporation is not indictable, yet its individual members are Anon. 12 Moo. 559. But since a corporation acts by its officers and agents, their purposes, motives and intent are just as much those of the ‘corporation’ as are the things done. The ordinary crimes, wherein only general evil, or the mere purpose to do the forbidden thing, suffices for the intent, are plainly within doctrine. But to present a sharp contrast, the intent essential to murder in the first degree, and the thing itself, would palpably be so far, Ultra vires as to be beyond the competency of the corporation, even if it could be hung in punishment. Bishop Cr. Law § [417, 418. In Reg v. Great North of England Ry. 9 Q. B. 315, 326, Denman C. J. said: “Some dicta occur in old cases, ‘A corporation cannot be guilty of treason or of felony.’ It might be added, ‘of perjury, or offences against the person.’ A corporation which as such has no such duties, cannot be guilty as a body corporate, of commanding acts to be “done to the nuisance of the community at large.”

Scope of the section.—Section 1 and this section declare the extent of the operation of the Code with respect to time, place, and person. After the 1st May, 1861 all offences contained in this Code will be punishable, whoever the offender may be. Every person is made liable to punishment without distinction of nation, rank, caste or creed, provided only the offence with which he is charged has been committed in some part of British India.—Morgan and Macpherson p. 4. Another statute cannot take away by implicating the right to prosecute under the Penal Code. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1235=30 Cr. L. J. 432=52 M. 79=55 M. L. J. 715=115 Ind. Cas. 242. Section 2 must be interpreted subject to s. 5. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 217=30 Cr. L. J. 460=115 Ind. Cas. 428. Offences under the Penal Code and other special and local laws alone are punishable. A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 1=21 C. 388=22 Cr. L. J. 31=59 Ind. Cas. 143.

To whom this Act is applicable.—The powers of the Indian Legislature extend to certain specified persons and places. The Act of Parliament (3 and 4, Will 4, c. 85) which defines this legislative power, authorizes the Governor-General in Council "to make laws and regulations for all persons, whether British or native, foreigners or others, and for all Courts of Justice, whether established by His Majesty's charters or otherwise, and the jurisdiction thereof, and for all places and things whatsoever, within and throughout the whole and every part of the said (British) territories.—Vide s. 43. These are the defined limits of the legislative power. Accordingly "within and throughout" British India, the Penal Code is applicable to all persons thus made subject to this authority of the Governor-General of India in Council whether such persons are the subjects of Her Majesty or the subjects of a foreign state, they all owe obedience to the law. A foreigner who enters the British territories and thus accepts the protection of our laws, virtually gives an assurance of his fidelity and obedience to them and submits himself to their operation.—Morgan and Macpherson p. 5. "Crime is local in its character; that is it is an offence against the law of the State where it is committed. It may also be and often is, an offence against the law of the State to which the offender owes allegiance. Macleod v. A. G. New for South Wales. (1891) 60 L. J. P. C. 55." Foot's Private International Law p. 505.

And not otherwise.—All existing penal laws whatsoever, except such as are referred to in the last section of this chapter, are superseded by the code to this extent, that persons liable to punishment under any of the provisions of the code cannot be punished by any other law. The words "and not otherwise" seem virtually to repeal all former laws for the punishment of any offence which is made punishable by this law. But if there are acts or omissions made penal by the existing law, and no provision of this code is found to reach them, that law will continue at present in force. Offences committed prior to the 1st May, 1861, will not come under the code, at whatever time the offender may be arrested or tried.—Morgan and Macpherson. p. 5. The Commissioners in their Second Report says: "We do not advise the general repeal of the penal law now existing in the Territories for which we have recommended the enactment of the code. We think it will be more expedient to provide only that no man shall be tried or punished (except by a Court-Martial) for any acts which constitute any offence defined in the Code, otherwise than according to its provisions." Vide §§ 536-537 of the commissioners' 2nd Report.

Persons exempted from the operation of this Act.—According to English constitution law the King can do no wrong. (Rex non potest peccare). Hence no criminal action can be brought against a sovereign. His ministers are liable for any wrongful act done by him. Feather v. Queen, 6 B. & S. 258. "There is no exception in favour of aliens from liability for offences committed in England or on British ships either on the ground of want of allegiance, or ignorance of the law of England. But neither the common law nor the statute law extends to acts of aliens outside the King's dominions. [Mortensen v. Peters (1906) 8 Fraser 93], or outside the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, and the diplomatic representatives of foreign states and their suites are for the purposes of Criminal Law of England regarded as resident in the country of which they are accredited, and there is some doubt as to the criminal liability of an alien enemy, e.g. a prisoner of war"—Russells on Crimes p. 103. As a consequence of the absolute independence of every sovereign authority, and of the international comity which induces every sovereign state to respect the independence of every other sovereign state, each state declines to exercise by means of any of its Courts any of its territorial jurisdiction over the person of any sovereign, or ambassador, or over the public property of any other state which is destined to its public use, or over the property of any ambassador, though such sovereign, ambassador, or property be within its territory, and therefore, but for the common agreement, subject to its jurisdiction. The Parliament Belge. 5 P. D. 197=42 L. T. 273. The Indian Princes are not amenable to the jurisdiction of British Courts. 25 C. 20 P. C. But there is no provision of law by which parties of any sect have a right to be exempted from the operation of the Criminal law applicable to all the subjects of the King. Emperor v. Mahabir, 25 A. 31=A. W. N. 1902, 173. Where foreigner in a foreign territory initiates an offence which is completed within British territory, he is, if found within British territory, liable to be tried by the British Court within whose jurisdiction the offence is completed. 14 Bom. But a foreigner who after stealing the property in a foreign country, conveys it into British India is not amenable to the jurisdiction of British Courts. 5 P. R. 1881 Cr. So also British Courts have no jurisdiction to try a person, not being a British subject for being in possession of stolen property, when the theft itself was committed in a foreign state. 4 P. H. C. App. 3. Neither a foreigner found in possession in foreign territory of stolen property could be convicted under s. 411, of the code, unless it was shewn that he was one of the thieves or had possession of property in British India. 16 P. R. 1880 Cr. ; 9 A. 523=A. W. N. 1887, 131. So also the British Criminal Courts have no jurisdiction to try a case when an offence is committed outside British India. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 870 ; see also 30 P. R. 1889. A person, who steals property out of British India and brings it into it, can be convicted of dishonestly retaining stolen property. 6 C. 302=7 C. L. R. 411. Where property stolen in British India is received by foreigners outside British India, British Courts have jurisdiction over the offence of receiving stolen property. 29 P. R. 1867 Cr. ; see also A. 3. Any person liable, by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council, to be tried for an offence committed beyond the limits of the said territories shall be dealt with according to the provisions of this Code for any act committed beyond the said territories in the same manner as if such act had been committed within the said territories, Scope of the section. This section relates to the extra-territorial operation of the Code. Morgan and Macpherson ; see also 10 B. H. C. R. 356 ; 30 P. R. 1889. The words "for any act" etc extend also to illegal omissions (vide s. 32). Many offences, such as Forgery, offences relating to coin and Government stamps, offences against the State, etc., may be committed beyond the limits of the British Territories, by persons subject to British laws, and it is necessary to provide for the punishment. It was a principle of the old Regulations to make punishable, by trial within the East India Company's territories, subjects of the Government committing crimes beyond the frontier, whether apprehended within or without the frontier. Those Regulations which were specially confined to native subjects and aliens living for six months within British territories, were repealed by Act I of 1849, which enacts (section 2) that "All subjects of the British Government, and also all persons in the Civil or Military Service of the said Government, while actually in such service, and for six months within the British Territories under the Government of the East India Company, subject to the laws of the said Territories, who shall be apprehended within the said territories, or delivered into the custody of a Magistrate within the said territories wherever apprehended, shall be amenable to the law for all offences committed by them within the territory of any Foreign Prince or State ; and may be bailed or committed for trial as hereafter provided on the like evidence as would warrant their being held to bail or committed for the same offence, if it had been committed within the British Territories". Persons liable by the law to be tried by British Courts must be "dealt with" according to the provisions of this Code.—Morgan and Macpherson. That Act has now been repealed by Act II of 1872, which again has also been repealed. Where the act of kidnapping is complete in British India and there is no concealment or detention in British territory, the British Court has no jurisdiction to try and convict the accused. 121 P. L. R. 1901=1 P. R. 1900. Cr. ; see also 24 Ind. Cas. 599=15 Cr. L. J. 511. A British Court has no jurisdiction where the offence is committed by a foreign subject in a foreign state. 37 P. R. 1881 Cr. ; see also 10 B. N. C. R. 356 ; 30 P. R. 1889 ; 7 P. R. 1894.

Legislative powers of Government of India. "The Indian Legislature has power to make laws—

- (a) for all persons, for all Courts and for all places and things, within British India ; and
- (b) for all subjects of His Majesty and servants of the Crown within other parts of India ; and
- (c) for all native Indian subjects of His Majesty, without and beyond as well as within British India.
- (d) for the Government Officers, soldiers, airmen and followers in His Majesty's Indian forces, wherever they are serving, in so far as they are not subject to the Army Act or the Air Force Act ; and

I. P. Code—2

(e) for all persons employed or serving in or belonging to the Royal Indian Marine Service. (The Government of India Act s. 65).

Principle.—"Crime is local in its character ; that is it is an offence against the law of the State where it is committed. It may also be, and often is, an offence against the law of the state to which the offender owes allegiance. MacLeod v. Aitroll (1893) A. C. 150, 156. But except in these two cases, crime receives no legal recognition ; and it is for this reason that actions on foreign judgment, for penalties of a public or criminal character are not entertained. It is plainly competent for any State to prescribe the cases in which it will exercise control for criminal purposes over its subjects abroad. And with regard to the high seas, which are not within the limits of any State, the rule as to the locality of crime has no application." Foot's Private International Law, p. 505.

Extension of Code to Extra territorial offences.

4. The provisions of this Code apply also to any offence committed by—

(1) any native Indian subject of Her Majesty in any place without and beyond British India ;

(2) any other British subject within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India ;

(3) any servant of the Queen, whether a British subject or not, within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India.

Explanation.—In this section the word "offence" includes every act committed outside British India which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under this Code.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a coolie, who is a Native Indian subject, commits a murder in Uganda. He can be tried and convicted of murder in any place in British India in which he may be found.

(b) B, a European British subject, commits a murder in Kashmir. He can be tried and convicted of murder in any place in British India in which he may be found.

(c) C, a foreigner who is in the service of the Punjab Government, commits a murder in Jhind. He can be tried and convicted of murder at any place in British India in which he may be found.

(d) D, a British subject living in Indore, instigates E to commit murder in Bombay. D is guilty of abetting murder.

Amendment.—Section 4 has been substituted for the original by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act, (IV of 1898) s. 2.

Scope.—This section gives certain extra-territorial jurisdiction in respect of acts committed outside British India by certain classes of persons including the Indian subjects of His Majesty ; but it does not affect the nature of the act. The act alleged must amount to an offence punishable under the Code before a British Indian Court can take cognizance of the case. 47 B. 907=25 Bom. L. B. 772. It is possible to give this section a construction which is not inconsistent with the English statute, but in any case it could not affect the specific statute of Parliament. 16 C. W. The British Court has jurisdiction to try the accused, in as much as his offence was not wholly committed within a native state, but having been initiated there, was continued and completed within British territory. 14 Bom. Having regard to ss. 4 and 40 of the Indian Penal Code, the phrase "offence punishable with imprisonment, wherever it may be committed" found in s. 121 Cr. Pro. Code, must cover an offence under s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code, in a Native State. 28 P. R. 1910 Cr.=8 Ind. Cas. 353=11 Cr. L. J. 635. Where the accused, who were subjects of a foreign state, were arrested in that state, for being in possession of stolen property, held that they could not be tried in British India for an offence under section 413. 22 P. R. 1888 Cr. The mere fact that a man owns some lands

The term "Native Indian subject of Her Majesty's means only a native subject de jure and not de facto. 1 P. R. 1885 Cr. "The term—'Native Indian subject of Her Majesties.'—must I consider, be construed strictly, and cannot be held to include 'servants of Her Majesty.'—Per Parsons J in 16 Bom. 178 at p. 182. Place of crime governs the nature of offence. A. I. R. 1933 sind. 333=1933 Cr. C. 1130. Abetment in a Native state of an offence committed in British India, is no offence. 20 Cr. L. J. 65=31 P. R. 1918 Cr.

A subject of Her Majesty, by choosing to reside beyond the limits of British India for ten or twelve years, does not divest himself of his allegiance to Her Majesty or of his liability to be tried as a British subject in the Courts of British India. In the matter of Ramphul Singh, 2 J. G. 7. A son born in British India, of an alien, is a British subject of His Majesty, though the father lived in British India without becoming a naturalised British subject. 9. P. R. 1893 Cr.

Principle.—It is plainly competent for any state to prescribe the cases in which it will exercise control for criminal purposes over its subjects abroad. And with regard to the high seas, which are not within the limits of any state, the rule as to the locality of crime has no application. Foot's Private International Law p. 505. So section 3 enacts that where a person might, by virtue of any Act of the Legislative Assembly, be tried in British India for an offence committed out of British India, he is to be dealt with according to this Code. Section 4 contains a similar provision as to Native Indian subjects of His Majesty who commit offences in any place without and beyond British India and as to British subjects, and the servants of the King, whether British subjects or not, who commit offences within the dominions of any Native Prince or Chief in India. Mayne's Criminal Law § 19. So offences committed beyond the limits of British India may either be tried in India, or the offender may be given up for trial in the country where his crime was committed Ibid § 20. In general and prima facie, the Government of one country has neither interest nor power to enforce its will within the limits of another country, or outside of its own territorial bounds; therefore, in the absence of anything exceptional neither the written nor the unwritten law has any extra-territorial force. In common law jurisprudence this rule, as to crime is aided by the fact that a common-law Court has jurisdiction only over transactions, within its own territory. The general rule is that no man is to suffer criminally in a particular country for what he does out of the territorial limits of that country. Bishop's Criminal Law, § 109.

When the offence is committed outside British India.—It has already been observed that where offences are committed beyond the limits of British India, the offender may be tried in India or he may be given up for trial in the country where his crime was committed. Mayne § 20. Cases of the latter class will now be disposed of under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act XXI of 1879. It seems to contemplate two distinct cases. First where the offence has been committed in any of those States especially connected with India, in which the Governor-General in council has a power and jurisdiction which is exercised by a Political Agent. Secondly, where the offence is committed in some State where there is no such Indian Jurisdiction, or in some other part of His Majesty's dominions. As regards the first class of cases Vide the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903, sub-section (1) of section 7 of which enacts: "where an extradition offence has been committed or is supposed to have been committed by a person, not being a European British subject, in the territories of any State not being foreign State and such person escapes into or is in British India and the Political Agent in or for such State issues a warrant, addressed to the District Magistrate of any district in which such person is believed to be or if such person is believed to be in any Presidency-town to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of such town, for his arrest and delivery at a place or to a person or authority indicated in the warrant such Magistrate shall act in pursuance of such warrant and may give directions accordingly. The Courts of British India has no power to interfere in respect of a warrant issued by a Political Agent of a Native State under this section, on the ground that there is no prima facie case against the accused. 3 P. R. 1909 Cr.; 7 Bom. L. R. 403; 33 C. 1032; 19 C. W. N. 221; 14 Bom. L. R. 377. Under section 10 of the same Act, jurisdiction is distinctly conferred on the Magistrates in British India to make preliminary enquiries and to take evidence on the information given or information laid in regard to extradition offences. 8 Bom. L. R. 507. But section 18 of the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903) enacts: "Nothing in this Chapter shall derogate from the provisions of any treaty for the extradition of offenders, and the procedure provided by any such treaty shall be followed in any case to which it applies and the provisions of the Act shall be modified accordingly." The conspirators of an offence committed outside British India cannot be tried in British India. 1933 Cr. C. 1130=A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 335.

Foreign State.—Surrender of fugitive criminals in case of foreign state is provided in chapter II of the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903). Foreign state is defined to be a state to which for the time being the Extradition Acts 1870, (33 & 34 Vict. C. 52) and 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. C. 60) apply (Vide s. 2). The East Indian possession of France is not a foreign state. Extradition under any condition is an invasion of the common law right and when there is a treaty followed by a statute recognizing the authority, the procedure is to be in accordance with the treaty and statute and no further condition can be imposed by the Courts. 47 C. 37=30 Cr. L. J. 24, contra 48 C. 328. Section 2 of Extradition Act of 1870 provides: Where an arrangement has been made with any foreign state with respect to the surrender to such state of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may, by order in council, direct that this Act shall apply in the case of such foreign state. So where the Foreign State in question is not of the above description, there is no Act which guides British Indian Administrators, to deal with offenders in such foreign states. In this connection the Portuguese Treaty Act, 1880 (IV of 1880) and the Treaty with France in 1909 are very important. In cases of some foreign Asiatic States, where no treaty exists, British Courts can exercise extra-territorial, jurisdiction. See also 4 O. W. N. 1121.

Extra-territorial Jurisdiction on Land.—By the common law of England, English Courts have no jurisdiction over British subjects in respect of crimes committed by them on land out of England. Subsequently various statutes were passed enabling the Courts to try treason, murder, and man-slaughter committed on land by a British subject abroad. These tribunals have received a Parliamentary sanction by the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts of 1843, 1865, 1866, 1878 which are now consolidated by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890. 53 & 54 Vict. C. 37). In India such jurisdiction is conferred by ss. 3 and 4 of the Indian Penal Code and section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code. (Vide Mayne's Criminal Law § 30).

Admiralty Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction in regard to offence committed at sea is determined by Admiralty Jurisdiction. Since the Oceans are the common high ways of nations, public and private vessels upon them, outside the limits of any country are deemed to be floating parts of the territory of the several countries to which they respectively belong; and crime committed on one of them is punishable by the particular government, as within its complete territorial jurisdiction. Wharton Int. Law 158, 174; Polson Law of Nations, 25; Reg v. Sena, 2 C. & K. 53=1 Den. C. C. 104; Reg v. Bjornson, Leigh & C. 545; Marshall v. Mer Gatrody, 6 Q. B. 31, 33; Rex v. Ammaro, Russ & Ry. 286. A Court in British India has jurisdiction to try a British subject for an offence under the Penal Code committed during voyage on a British Ship. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 688=28 Cr. L. J. 543=53 M. L. J. 101=102 Ind. Cas. 351. But British Courts have no jurisdiction to an offence for attempt to murder by a subject of Jungabad State on Board a ship eighteen miles off the coast of Bombay. 20 Bom. L. R. 98=19 Cr. L. J. 337=42 B. 234=44 Ind. Cas. 449. Admiralty jurisdiction only takes cognizance of acts committed on the sea, and, in respect of crimes, only of those which become complete at sea. The admiral has no jurisdiction over murder, where the wounding was at sea but the death happened on shore 1 Hale P. C. 17. In a foreign Port or on a Tidal River, if the vessel is private, all on board 'are subject to the laws of of foreign country; but it does not follow that they are not also subject to their own law, criminal and civil, except in particulars directly repugnant to the local law. If this conflicts with theirs, it must evidently prevail; and it appears clearly to result from the doctrine of necessity that the persons attached to such vessel are excused at home for doing what is thus compelled. This binding effect of the laws of one country upon subjects afloat in her ship and belonging to them, even while within the territorial limits of foreign states, its recognized alike in the legislative Acts and the judicial decisions both of England and United States. Rex v. Allen, 7 C. & P. 664; Reg Menham, 1 F. & F. 369, Reg v. Anderson, 11 Cox. C. 198. Since the seas are the common high way of nations, it seems to follow that if persons on them and not under the protection of any flag commit an offence there, they may be arrested and punished by any power. Wharton Int. Law 6th Ed. 159.

Yet the offence must be disturbing to the common peace of the travelling nations ; because it is fundamental in the criminal law that the injury done must precede the punishment inflicted. Bishop's Cr. Law § 118.

One subject injuring another abroad. In Rex v. Sawyer 2 Car. & K. 101, 111, Lord Ellenborough said : "The King has an interest in the protection of his subjects in parts beyond the realm ; and there is a writ known to the law of England, if subjects have suffered in either persons or goods in foreign parts. And the persons who have maltreated them there, when they come into this country, are called upon by a writ out of Chancery to answer for it ; so that the King's subjects are considered as under the protection of the King, even out of the realm." Therefore an indictment at common law was adjudged to lie against a British subject for murdering another British subject in a foreign state, a statute having merely created a tribunal with a jurisdiction adequate to try the case. Rex v. Sawyer supra ; Rex spoke, 3 Salk. 358. According to international law, the persons offending must be a subject of the Government whose tribunals call him to account. Wharton Int. Law. 6th Ed. 174, 175. A legislative act may well provide for the punishment, at home, of depredations committed by the subject of English Government on those of other Governments abroad, either in or out of their own country (Reg v. Azopardi, 1 Car. & K. 203 ; Reg. v. Zulueta, 1 Car. & K. 215), if indeed the right is not sufficiently inherent in the common law without the help of any statute. Bishop's Cr. Law § 121.

Piracy.—Piracy is usually committed under the flag of some known Government, but by the law of nations its perpetration divests the vessel of its national character. Consequently the persons guilty of it though the subject of recognized power may be apprehended and punished by any other. This rule refers only to piracy as defined in international law, not to offences made such by the local jurisprudence of a particular country. The distinction, therefore, is that a private vessel is not deemed a part of the country of its flag, while one in less unlawful pursuit is. Bishop's Criminal Law § 123. In the case of Attorney Gen. v. Kwok-A-Sing, L. R. 5 P. C. L. 199, the judicial committee cited with approval the following definition of the offence given by Sir Charles Hedges in Rex v. Dawson, 13 St. Tr. 454 : "Piracy is only a sea-term for robbery, piracy being a robbery committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. If the mariners of any ship shall violently dispossess the master, and afterwards carry away the ship itself, or or any of the goods, tackle, apparel, or furniture, with a felonious intention, in any place where the admiral hath or pretends to have jurisdiction, this is also robbery and piracy." In Reg v. Terman, 5 B. & S. 643, Blackburn J. said : "When the crime consists in having over-powered the ship, it becomes a crime under the jurisdiction of every civilized nation ; but other cases of robbery on board a ship may be cases of piracy by the municipal law of a country, but not de jure gentium."

Offences by foreigner.—Where a foreigner is charged with an offence under the Penal Code, it is immaterial whether the accused person is bodily present in British India where the offence was completed, or whether his presence there is derived by process and intentment of law ; in either case he is present in British India committing an offence under Penal Code, and that being so his character as foreigner cannot avail him. A. I. R. 1928 Sind. 61 ; see also 36 B. 524 : Rex v. De Marrp, (1907) K. B. 388 ; Rex v. Oliphant (1905) 2 K. B. 67 ; Rex v. Keyn (1876) 2 Ex D. 63 ; Rex v. Rogers, 3 Q. B. D. 28. Where a man is in British India and he is charged before a Magistrate with an offence under the Indian Penal Code it is not competent for him to say that he was brought there illegally from a foreign country. A. I. R. 1928 Sind. 161 ; 35 B. 225 ; Queen v. Nelson, 5 T. L. R. 344. A subject of the Native state, who is guilty of retaining stolen property within the native state is not liable to be punished under the Code. 27 Cr. L. J. 39. The accused, a subject of the state of Jamagabad, was charged with the offence of attempt to murder, on board a ship belonging to him on the high seas some miles off the coast of Kanara District. He was tried for the offence by the First Class Magistrate of Karwar, where he raised the point that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try him. Held, that the First Class Magistrate at Karwar had no jurisdiction to try the accused 42 B. 234=20 Bom. L. R. 98=49 Ind. Cas. 449.

5. Nothing in this Act is intended to repeal, vary, suspend, or affect any of the provisions of the Statute 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85, or of any Act of Parliament passed after the Statute in any wise affecting the East India Company, or the said territories, or the inhabitants thereof; or any of the provisions of any Act for punishing mutiny and desertion of officers and soldiers "sailors"* or airmen, in the service of Her Majesty, or of any special or local law.

Special or local law.—This section declares that no special or local law shall be affected by the enactment of the Code. It by no means renders unpunishable under the Penal Code an act which is an offence within its definition because it is also punishable by some special law. 1 Weir. 26; see also 8 Bom. L. R. 414; 6 M. 249; 22 C. 131. It is ordinarily desirable that when an act or omission is made penal by two Acts, one general and the other special, the sentence should be passed under the special Act. 11 C. W. N. 101. But according to s. 26 of the General Clauses Act, (IX of 1897) "when an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of the enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. Special or local law does not refer to English common law. 92 Ind. Cas. 737=27 Cr. L. J. 321. When an act is an offence punishable under a special law, that law will apply. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 497=7. O. W. N. 895=128 Ind. Cas. 221; see also 1932 A. L. J. 519=33 Cr. L. J. 309=1932 Cr. C. 89=A. I. R. 1932 All. 69. If sufficient punishment cannot be given by the special law there is no bar to invoke the aid of the Penal Code, governing the offence. 9 Mys. L. J. 156.

Any of the provisions of the Act etc.—"The law relating to the Army and Navy which are here referred to are the several Acts and Articles of War from time to time passed, to secure discipline and to punish military and other offences. Nothing in this Code affects any of these provisions. For the Native Army the law which is provided by the Indian Army Act, 8 of 1911 is in force. For the British Army the Mutiny Act and Articles of War are the laws which must still guide Courts Martial in the cases in which those Courts are authorized to apply the place of the ordinary Criminal Courts and to try soldiers for crimes."—Morgan and Macpherson p. 12. Section 2, which provides that every person shall be liable to punishment "under this code and not otherwise" for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof of which he shall be guilty, must be read subject to section 5 which clearly makes reservation with regard to offences specified therein. 115 Ind. Cas. 428=30 Cr. L. J. 450=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 217.

CHAPTER II.

GENERAL EXPLANATIONS.

Scope of the Chapter.—It is scarcely necessary to add that this chapter is merely one of explanation. The criminal quality of any act which is described by a word here explained, must depend on the definition in which it occurs. Thus, an effect may be caused "voluntarily" within the meaning of the explanation (section 39), but it must still depend on the particular definition or penal provision in which the word is used, whether any offence has been committed; for the voluntary causing an effect may be made criminal either absolutely or subject to qualifications.—Morgan and Macpherson.

6. Throughout this Code, every definition of an offence, every penal provisions, and every illustration of every such definition or penal provisions, shall be understood subject to the exceptions contained in the chapter entitled "General Exceptions," though those exceptions are not repeated in such definition, penal provisions, or illustration.

* Inserted by Act. 35 of 1934.

Illustrations.

(a) The sections in this Code, which contain definitions of offences, do not express that a child under seven years of age cannot commit such offences; but the definitions are to be understood subject to the general exception, which provides that nothing shall be an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age."

(b) A, police-officer, without warrant, apprehends Z, who has committed murder. Here A is not guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement; for he was bound by law to apprehend Z, and therefore the case falls within the general exception which provides that 'nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is bound by law to do it.'

Notes.—The present section obviates the necessity of repeating these exceptions several times in each page.—Morgan and Macpherson p. 15.

7. Every expression which is explained in any part of this Code is used Sense of expression once in every part of this Code, in conformity with the explained.

Notes.—"As s. 7 of the Code says that every expression explained in any part of it is used in conformity with that explanation in every part of it, I cannot, as the late Advocate-General seems to have done, lay any stress upon the absence of negative words; for to say that it shall have a particular meaning every where, is to say that it shall have no other meaning any where. The point, therefore, is to ascertain the meaning of that explanation, and if the words taken grammatically, have a definite, certain, and unequivocal meaning, if they constitute a perfectly complete expression susceptible grammatically of that one unequivocal meaning and of that only, then, however absurd and pernicious in consequences, that meaning is to be followed." Per Holloway J. 3 M. H. C. R. App. 11.

8. The pronoun "he" and its derivatives are used of any person, whether male or female.

Notes.—Words importing the masculine gender includes the females. Maxwell p. 694. See also section 13 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

9. Unless the contrary appears from the context words importing the the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number,

Notes.—"The singular includes the plural and the plural the singular." Maxwell p. 604. See also, section 13 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

10. The word "man" denotes a male human being of any age; the word "woman" denotes a female human being of any age.

11. The word "person" includes any company or association, or body of persons, whether incorporated or not.

London and Provincial Supply Association*, 49 L. J. Q. B. 736. As to foreign corporations: Ingate v. Austram Lloyd's 27 L. J. C. P. 323; Scott v. Royal Wax Co., 1 Q. B. D. 404; Royal Mail Co. v. Braham, 2 App. Cas. 381; Mousell v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (1917) 2 K. B. at p. 842. "That is to say, beside its proper meaning (a single person) this word may also mean many persons, associated together in such a way that in the eye of the law they become, as it were one body. If they are thus united by a Legislative Act or by a Royal Charter, the body is incorporated; if the union is by articles of partnership, deed of Association etc, the company or association or partnership though not incorporated, has a legal existence. In either case the united body may be understood to be included by the word 'person.' The word frequently occurs in the code in a sense in which it is clear from the context that corporate bodies, etc, are not included." Morgan and Macpherson p. 16.

"Public."

12. The word "public" includes any class of the public or any community.

13. The word "Queen" denotes the Sovereign for the time being of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Judge meaning of.—A Magistrate will be a Judge only when he is exercising jurisdiction in a suit or a proceeding, that is to say, he is a judge only so far as that suit or proceeding is concerned, but he is not a Judge when he has not the session of the case in which he can give a definite judgment. This is clear from s. 4 (2) of Cr. P. Code read with s. 19 of the Penal Code. 5 Pat. 11 C.=7 Pat. L. T. 304=93 Ind. Cas. 963=27 Cr. L. J. 499=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 214.

Clause (9).—The mere fact that a person is in the pay or service of Government is not enough to constitute him a public servant within the meaning of section 21, ninthly of the Penal Code. He must also be an "officer" i. e., holder of some office. The office may be of dignity and importance or it may be humble; but whatever be its nature, it is essential that the person holding the office should have in some degree delegated to him certain functions of Government. A Quarter Master's clerk as such is not necessarily a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code but a person who is otherwise an officer in the pay or service of Government, does not lose his status as a public servant if, while still such an officer, he is employed as a Quarter Master's Clerk. 45 Ind. "Wrongful gain."

23. "Wrongful gain" is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled.

"Wrongful loss"

"Wrongful loss" is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled.

A person is said to gain wrongfully when such person retains wrongfully, as well as when such person acquires wrongfully.

Gaining wrongfully.

Losing wrongfully.

A person is said to lose wrongfully when such person is wrongfully kept out of any property, as well as when such person is wrongfully deprived of property.

Causing trouble.—It cannot be said that removing a thing to put the owner to trouble is necessary, and in every case, causing wrongful loss. 25 C. 416.

Wrongful gain.—In 3 Mad. H. C. App. 6, the prisoner, the pledgee of a turban, was convicted of criminal breach of trust for using that turban. The offence consisted of dishonestly using or disposing of property in violation of any direction of law as to the mode in which any trust affecting such property is to be discharged. The conviction was set aside as the High Court were of opinion that the deterioration of the article by use was not such a loss of property to the owner, and the wrongful beneficial use of property by the prisoner is not such a gain to him. For either wrongful loss or gain, the property must be lost to the owner, or the owner must be wrongfully kept out of it. Wrongful loss or wrongful gain need not be permanent but might be temporary. 68 Ind. Cas. 157. Where a cow is found trespassing on a field and doing damages to crops it is no offence for the owner of the field to seize the cow and detain it for a period of less than 24 hours with promise to release the cow on payment of compensation not exceeding the pound charges which would have to be paid had the cow been impounded. 23 Cr. L. J. 511=68 Ind. Cas. 47. As to the meaning of wrongful gain or wrongful loss vide, 57 P. L. R. 1914=19 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=15 Cr. L. J. 522=24 Ind. Cas. 834; 19 Ind. Cas. 134; 19 Ind. Cas. 305=14 Cr. I. R. 1921 Mad. 322=14 M. L. W. 728=68 Ind. Cas. 831. Accused by digging a trench in his own land by the side of the wall of the complainant who has not acquired a right to lateral support by prescription does not cause wrongful loss. A. I. 24. Whoever does any thing with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person is said to do that thing "dishonestly."

Joint property.—When a co-partner converts the joint possession of a property into separate possession he commits theft. 10 M. 186.

Intention.—"It is a general rule for the interpretation of conduct as indicative of motives or intentions, demanded by social security and founded in substantial justice that every man shall be held to have intended, and, therefore to be legally accountable for, the natural and probable consequences of his actions. Rex v. Farrington, R. & R. at p. 207; Rex v. Harvey, 2 B. & C. 257; Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11." Wills on Circumstantial Evidence p. 64. But in construing the sections, the primary and not the secondary intention of the accused must be looked at. 19 C. 380;

but see 15 A. 210 ; A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 9. So of two probable intentions, the one immediate and more probable and the other remote and less probable, the Court should not attribute to the accused the remoter intention. 8 A. 653=A. W. N. 1886, 264. Where the accused after the execution and registration of a document which was not required by law to be attested, added his name to the document as an attesting witness, held that the accused by the insertion of his name an attesting witness cannot be held to have done the act either dishonestly or fraudulently within the meaning of these words as defined in ss. 24 and 25. 14 C. W. N. 1076=12 C. L. J. 277=7 Ind. Cas. 629=11 Cr. L. J. 505=38 C. 75.

Definition, not exhaustive.—This section is not an exhaustive definition of the word "dishonestly". The section does not say that the word is applicable only when there is an intention of causing wrongful gain to one person and wrongful loss to another but properly construed it means that cases of intention of causing such wrongful gain or loss are to be considered as causing within the wider class of dishonest actions. The wrongful obtaining of an acquittal is very distinctively the obtaining of an advantage and brings the case within the definition of 'dishonestly' in section 24 I. P. C. and where the accused used a forged document for that purpose he would be convicted under s. 471.9 Pat. L. T. 800. The word "dishonestly" does not necessarily imply wrongful gain to accused himself. A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 469=28 O. C. 230=26 Cr. L. J. 127=88 Ind. Cas. 833. Intention to cause wrongful loss amounts dishonestly under s. 406, A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 353=69 Ind. Cas. 631. "Dishonestly" applies only to wrongful gain or wrongful loss. 34 Bom. L. R. 1090=56 B. 488=34 Cr. L. J. 357=A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 545 ; see also A. I. R. 1931 Pat. 337=12 P. L. T. 556=36 Cr. L. J. 739. Act whether dishonest is determined by intention. A. I. R. 1932 Sind. 169=34 Cr. L. J. 51. A dishonest intention may be presumed only if an unlawful act is done or if a lawful act is done by unlawful means. 35 Cr. L. J. 1307=1934 A. L. J. 749=A. I. R. 1934 All. 711.

Illustrative cases.—Where the accused forcibly removed an ox and two cows, the property of the complainant (a Mahomedan), in order to prevent the butchery of the cattle which the Hindu religion held to be grossly outrageous act, the accused was not guilty of the offence of dacoity, as there was no element of dishonesty in his conduct. 15 A. 22=A. W. N. 1892, 220. A person, who by falsely pretending to be the winner of a lottery prize, dishonestly induces the lottery officials to pay the prize to him does not cause "wrongful loss" to the rightful winner of the prize but causes a "wrongful gain" to himself by obtaining by false pretence what he is "not legally entitled" to, and, thereby acts "dishonestly" within the meaning of this section. 24 Ind. Cas. 903=15 Cr. L. J. 555. A servant who adulterates liquor and sells at the same price as unadulterated liquor acts dishonestly because he thereby gains by unlawful means money to which he is not legally entitled. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 395=Cr. Reg. 53 of 1888. A tenant cutting trees standing on his own Jira Tati land and for which he has executed a Kudapa, which gives the landlord only a claim for compensation for trees so cut, cannot be said to be acting "dishonestly" within the meaning of this section. 15 Cr. L. J. 586=25 Ind. Cas. 338=1 Weir 528. Where a dishonest intention, as defined in this section is made out, it makes no difference in the prisoner's guilt for the offence of theft, that his act was not intended to procure any personal benefit to himself. 4 Bom. L. R. 936.

The accused a Patwari, was charged with having made unauthorized entries in the Khatani Partial book and Jama bandi in regard to the status of certain donees of land. The effect of those entries was to show the donees as malkan gobra, i. e. as proprietors of their holding merely without any share in Shamilat whereas previously they were shown as full proprietors. The deed under which those persons acquired their rights made no mention of the Shamilat and it was a moot point of law as to whether a deed of gift not specifying the Shamilat rights as going with the area gifted does or does not carry with it the rights in the Shamilat. It was also found that the accused acted bona fide though in disregard of the Revenue Rules. Held, that it was not shown that the making of the entries was likely to deprive the donees of any right to which they were entitled or that he made the entries dishonestly within the meaning of this section. 25 P. "Gain" must be taken to mean material gain. A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 9.

25. A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise.
"Fraudulently"

Defraud.—The term 'defraud' is not limited in its meaning to deprivation of property. 25 C. 512=1 C. W. N. 255 (F. B.) The expression "intent to defraud" means intent to deceive in such a manner as to expose any person to loss or the risk of loss means not only a deprivation of property but includes the infringement of any right possessed by a person. 22 Cr. L. J. 61; See also A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 385=27 Cr. L. J. 1388=98 Ind. Cas. 599; 27 Cr. L. J. 994=1926 Mad. 1072. The word "fraudulently" denotes an intention to deceive. 5 C. W. N. 897. The expression "intent to defraud" implies conduct coupled with intention to deceive and thereby to injure; in other words defraud involves two conceptions, namely deceit and injury to the person deceived, that is infringement of some legal right possessed by him but not necessarily deprivation of property. This would be so whether we accept the restricted interpretation of 'defraud' given by Mr. Justice Banerjee in Queen Empress v. Muhammad Saeed Khan, 21 A. 113, and by Str James Stephens in the History of Criminal Law Vol. II, 121. Vol III, 187 or adopt the wider interpretation laid down in Queen Empress v. Abbas Ali 25 C. 512, Abdul Rajah v. Queen Empress, (1895) P. R. 2 Cr. Reg. v. Tashak (1849) 4 Cox, C. C. 38." Per Mookerjee J. in 28 C. 75=12 C. L. J. 277=14 C. W. N. 1076=11 Cr. L. J. 505=7 Ind. Cas. 629. "Defraud" connotes intention to defraud likely to cause injury 60 C. 272=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 366=1935 Cr. C. 502. In construing this section the primary and not the remote intention of the accused must be looked at. 19 C. 280. The word "fraudulently" must be taken to mean as defined in this section "with intent to defraud." 22 C. 313. When a person uses a sanad which is not genuine, his intention cannot be called "an intention to defraud." 10 C. 584. In Queen Empress v. Muhammed Saeed Khan 11 A. 115 at p. 115 Mr. Justice Banerjee observed: "The terms 'fraud' and 'defraud' are not defined in the Indian Penal Code. Str James Fitz-James Stephens in his History of Criminal Law of Law of England vol. II p. 121 observes that 'whenever the words "fraud" or "intent to defraud" or "fraudulently" occur in the definition of crime, two elements at least are essential to the commission of the crime, two elements at least are essential to the commission of the crime; namely, first deceit or, an intention to deceive, or in cases mere secrecy; and secondly, either actual injury or possible injury, or an intent to expose some person either to actual injury or to risk of possible injury by means of that deceit or secrecy. "This intent", he adds, "is very seldom the only or the principal intention entertained by the fraudulent person, whose principal object in nearly every case is his own advantage. A practically conclusive test as to the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purpose is this: Did the author of the deceit desire any advantage from it which could not have been had if the truth had been known? If so, it is hardly possible that the advantage should not have had an equivalent loss or risk of loss to some one else, and if so there was fraud." Where, therefore, there is an intention to deceive and by means of the deceit to obtain an advantage there is fraud." See also 15 A. 210; 12 Bom. L. R. 708; 22 C. 313. 35 C. 313; 35 C. 450. "By fraud is meant an intention to deceive; whether it be from any expectation of advantage to the party himself or from ill will towards the other is immaterial." Haycroft v. Crasey 22 East 92 (108). Where alterations in a document are made by person who believes in good faith that he might use them to support a bona fide claim, such alterations cannot be said to have been made fraudulently or dishonestly so as to constitute the offence of forgery. 41 M. 519=43 Ind. Cas. 593.

The expression "intent to defraud" in this section means an intent to deceive in such a manner as to expose any person to loss or the risk of loss and loss means not only a deprivation of property but covers the infringement of any right possessed by a person. 63 Ind. Cas. 617=22 Cr. L. J. 681; see also A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 385. The production of a forged bond by a person in a suit with the intent to make the Court believe that he was entitled to recover money upon the basis of the particular document produced, though may not be dishonest within the meaning of s. 24 may yet be fraudulent. 5 C. W. N. 897; see also 21 P. R. 1895; see also A. I. R. 1933 All. 525=34 Cr. L. J. 1056=1933 A. L. J. 1372. The word "defraud" which not defined in the Code may or may not imply deprivation, actual or intended. 1 C. L. J. 69=32 C. 775; see also Charles Nash (1852) 1 Den. C. C. 493 (499); 25 C. 512 (F. B.). In the last case Maclean C. J. observed at

p. 521 : "The word 'defraud' is of double meaning in the sense that it either may or may not imply deprivation, and as it is not defined in the code and is not so far as we are aware, to be found in the code except in section 25, its meaning must be sought by a consideration of the context in which the word 'fraudulently, is found." In order to do a thing fraudulently, intention to cause wrongful loss is not necessary, 96 Ind. Cas. 850=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 994. Document can be used fraudulently though for supporting good title 51c. 469=26 Cr. L. J. 24.

Intent to defraud—how proved.—An intent to defraud must always be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Sharp v. State, 53 N. J. L. 511 ; 21 All. 1026 ; Carlisle State 76 Ala 75 ; Toll v. State, 31 Ind. Cas. 514 ; 516 Underhill's Criminal Evidence p. 426. "The intent to defraud may be inferred from the facts and circumstances of the case, as, for example, from the fact that the representations were false and that the accused knew they were so when he made them. And where the alleged fraudulent transaction is at all complicated, it is competent to prove, not only the facts constituting the transaction itself, but also all facts and circumstances involved in the steps preliminary thereto, and all facts which tend to show the course of dealing between the parties before or after the date of the offence laid in the indictment. The widest latitude is allowed. All available information should be received and no circumstances should be excluded which will throw or tend to throw, any light upon the intent of the parties, or upon the falsity of the representations. An intention upon the part of the defendant to pay for the property obtained, or to return the money procured by false pretences, is immaterial. Hence the defendant cannot prove, to rebut the intent to defraud, that he promised, to repay, or that he was able or willing to repay, wanted to procure work so as to earn money and to repay, or actually did repay, persons from whom money had been obtained. Nor can he prove that, in procuring the money, he was acting under legal advice unless he shows first, that he stated to the attorney who advised him, fully and fairly all the facts, and unless it also appears that he acted in perfect good faith."—Underhill's Criminal Evidence s. 437.

Evidence of other similar crimes.—Evidence of similar offences, involving the making of other false representations, is admissible against the prisoner to show that he was aware of the falsity of the statement made by him in the present instance, and that, knowing them to be false, he made them with intent to deceive. Hutcheson v. State, 35 S. W. 375. Martin v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 125=35 S. W. 976 ; see also 16 B. 414 ; 43 C. 783=20 C. W. N. 262 : Reg. v. Ollis, (1900) 2 Q. B. 758. Evidence of similar false pretence is particularly relevant when it appears that the fraudulent act for which the accused is on trial does not stand alone, but is a part of a scheme, not merely to defraud one individual, but to swindle the community at large. Rafferty v. State, 91 Tenn. 655, 666=16 S. W. 728 ; Cornell v. State, 85 Md. 1=36 Atl. 117.

26. A person is said to have "reason to believe" a thing if he has sufficient cause to believe that thing, but not otherwise.

Notes.—A man may be indicted for perjury in swearing that he believes a fact to be true, which he knows to be false. Rex v. Pedley, 1 Leach, 327. The words "reason to believe" have been used in ss. 411 to 414. In a case of receiving stolen property the correct test of a person's guilt is whether when the property came into his possession he knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen property. Mere suspicion is not enough. 21 Ind. Cas. 383=1913 M. W. N. 696=14 Cr. L. J. 591 ; see also 6B. 402.

27. When property is in the possession of a person's wife, clerk, or servant, 'Property in possession of on account of that person, it is in that person's wife, clerk, or servant.' possession within the meaning of this Code.

Explanation.—A person employed temporarily or on a particular occasion in the capacity of a clerk or servant, is a clerk or servant within the meaning of this section.

Notes.—"The term 'possession' has to be interpreted in the light of s. 27 which by virtue of section 7 is applicable wherever the term is used, in the code. Section 27, abolishes the distinction recognised in English Law between possession and custody." Per Mookerjee J. in 21 C. W. N. 33 (51)=24 C. L. J. 400=44 C. 477. So an accused charged under sections 2 and 3, may be proved to be in possession within the meaning of that section, if he is in possession in either of the two modes, namely (a) he may be in possession of the coin himself, or (b) he may be in possession, because his wife, clerk or servant is in possession of the coin on his account. Ibid. But in order to make the master liable, the possession of the servant must be on account of his master. 69 Ind. Cas. 457=20 A. L. J. 855=23 Cr. L. J. 729=A. I. R. 1923 All. 33=9 O & A. L. R. (A) 27. So where a house is in wife's possession on account of her husband, it is the husband's possession within the meaning of this section. 59 Ind. Cas. 550=22 Cr. L. J. 118=8 P. W. R. 1921 Cr. Where a man furnishes a house for his mistress's occupation, he may reasonably be presumed to be in possession of all articles therein which can reasonably be inferred to belong to him or to be in the possession of his mistress on his behalf. But the inference must be inapplicable to articles of which the mistress is in possession illegally or contrary to the provisions of law, especially when the article in question is such that he might well remain in ignorance that it was in his mistress's possession. To raise the presumption under this section something more than mere possession by the wife or mistress must be proved. 22 Ind. Cas. 748=20 P. R. 1914. Where article found in a house is not in exclusive possession of any one member the presumption is that the possession of the article is with the head of the family. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 272. Indian law does not authorise distinction between possession and custody. Where the possession is punishable, the possession must be with knowledge. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 272. The mere fact that illicit liquor is found in room occupied by son for sleeping does not make him guilty. Legal possession remains with father, house master. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 884. The expression "possession" in this section show that the Indian Law does not recognize the distinction which the English Law makes between possession and custody. In the English Law a moveable thing is said to be in the possession of a person when he is so situated with respect to it that he has the power to deal with it as owner to the exclusion of all other persons, when the circumstances are such that he may be presumed to intend to do so in case of need. The word "custody" means such relation towards the thing as would constitute possession if the person having custody had it on his own account. Whether the possession is that of the owner or of another person, it is clear that the person, who is said to possess the thing, must have knowledge of the existence of that thing. In other words possession to be punishable under the criminal law must be possession with knowledge. 9 Lah. 531=29 Cr. L. J. 481=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 272. Where there is nothing to show that a pistol is a sort of article that one can reasonably expect to be for sale in the shop of the accused, possession by servant of the accused of the pistol is not possession on account of master. 9 O. & A. L. R. 27=69 Ind. Cas. 457.

28. A person is said to "counterfeit" who causes one thing to resemble another thing intending by means of "Counterfeit." that resemblance to practise deception or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised.

Explanation 1.—It is not essential to counterfeiting that the imitation should be exact.

Explanation 2.—When a person causes one thing to resemble another thing, and the resemblance is such that a person might be deceived thereby it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that the person so causing the one thing to resemble the other thing intended, by means, of that resemblance, to practise deception, or knew it to be likely that deception would thereby be practised.

Amendments.—These two explanations have been substituted for the original by the Metal Tokens Act (I of 1889), s. 9.

Counterfeit.—Where the resemblance is such that it may deceive the people, it falls within the definition. 19 C. W. N. 957 ; 30 A. 93. Used stamps caused to resemble genuine one is counterfeiting. A. I. R. 1921 Nag. 86=22 Cr. L. J. 289=60 Ind. Cas. 785. Counterfeiting is not made up of possessing moulds for counterfeiting and the act of counterfeiting. A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 445=32 Cr. L. J. 1171=134 Ind. Cas. 446. The onus is on the accused that he has no fraudulent intention for the presumption will go against him. 134 Ind. Cas. 446=32 Cr. L. J. 1171=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 49.

Elements of the crime.—It must be shown to the satisfaction of the jury that the defendant altered the note with the intention to defraud the person receiving it, or some other person through him, and that the note uttered was a counterfeit. The knowledge of the accused that he was passing counterfeit money must be shown. Evidence that the accused was seen several times in company with another person when the latter passed counterfeit bills, and evidence to show that the accused and some third person had conspired to pass counterfeit money, or that a counterfeit had been passed by some person resembling the defendant, or that he had, about the same time, knowingly uttered a counterfeit, or that he had been indicted and convicted at another time for the same offence, is always admissible to show the criminal intent. And the defendant's declarations when passing other counterfeit money may be proved against him for the same purpose. But evidence of similar offences is only admissible to prove guilty knowledge, never solely to show that the bill or coin was a counterfeit—Underhill on Criminal Evidence s. 432.

29. The word "document" denotes any matter expressed or described upon any substance by means of letters, figures, or marks or by more than one of those means, intended to be used, or which may be used, as evidence of that matter.

Explanation 1.—It is immaterial by what means or upon what substance, the letters, figures or marks, are formed, or whether the evidence is intended for, or may be used in, a Court of Justice, or not.

Illustrations.

A writing expressing the terms of a contract, which may be used as evidence of the contract, is a document.

A cheque upon a banker is a document.

A power-of-attorney is a document.

A map or plan which is intended to be used, or which may be used as evidence is a document.

A writing containing directions or instructions is a document.

Explanation 2.—Whatever is expressed by means of letters, figures, or marks, as explained by mercantile or other usage, shall be deemed to be expressed by such letters, figures or marks within the meaning of this section although the same may not be actually expressed.

Illustrations.

A writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange payable to his order. The meaning of the endorsement as explained by mercantile usage is that the bill is to be paid to the holder. The endorsement is a document and must be construed in the same manner as if the words "pay to the holder," or words to that effect had been written over the signature.

Notes.—Where a draft petition was prepared with the intention of being used as evidence of a matter, it was held that it fell within the terms of this section. 10 W. R. Cr. 61=2 B. L. R. 12. A document is made within section 464 I. P. C. even when some only of the intended executants sign it. 41 M. 589=43 Ind. Cas. 593=19 Cr. L. J. 177. 30. The words "valuable security" denote a document which is or purports to be, a document whereby any legal right is created, extended, transferred, restricted, extinguished or released, or whereby any person acknowledges that he lies under legal liability, or has not a certain legal right.

Illustration.

"A will".

31. The words "a will" denote any testamentary document.

Notes.—The word 'testament' is derived from testatio mentis; it testifies the determination of the mind. "A will" says Jarman "is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, and which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life." Jarman 1st Edition p. 11. A will is the aggregate of a man's testamentary intentions so far as they are manifested in writing duly executed according to the statute. Lenage v. Goodban L. R. 1 P. D. 57; Green v. Tribe, 9 Ch. D. 231.

32. In every part of this Code, except where a contrary intention appears from the context, words which refer to Words referring to acts include illegal omissions. acts done extend also to illegal omissions.

Illegal omission.—This section provides that in every part of the code except where a contrary intention appears from the context, words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions. 1 Weir 29; 20 B. 394.

The expression "gross neglect" finds no place in this Act. The codified criminal law of this country does not render a mere casual inadvertence of duty criminal, but such neglect of duty as either directly results in loss of life or injury to person (ss. 304A, 337 and 338 and in certain special cases) or such neglect as endangers life or property (ss. 979 to 289 I. P. C.) ss 102 and 128 of Indian Railways Act. 18 S. L. R. 199=A. I. R. 199=A. I. R. 1925 Sind. 233=27 Cr. L. J. 257=92 Ind. Cas. 433.

33. The word "act" denotes as well a series of acts as a single act; the word "omission" denotes as well a series of omissions as single omission.

"Act."

"Omission."

Notes.—Where the words in a statute used in connection with an offence or a civil wrong refer to acts done, they must be held to extend to illegal omissions, 1 P. L. T. 269=(1920) Pat. 193=58 Ind. Cas. 749. "Criminal Act" includes omission to act, for example, an omission to prevent murder before one's very eyes. 5 Bur. L. J. 12=27 Cr. L. J. 827=95 Ind. Cas. 603. Criminal negligence is one of fact in each case. 18 S. L. R. 199=27 Cr. L. J. 257=A. I. R. 1925 Sind. 233=92 Ind. Cas. 433. A mere casual inadvertence of duty is not criminal but such neglect as results in loss of life or injury to person or endangers life or property. Ibid.

34 When a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of Acts done by several persons of the common intention of all, each of such in furtherance of common persons is liable for that act in the same man-intention. ner as if it were done by him alone.

Amendment—The present section has been substituted for the original by Act 27 of 1870, s. 1.

Scope.—This section merely lays down a principle of liability and does not create a distinct offence, 22 Cr. L. J. 394; 24 Cr. L. J. 763, 50 C. 41. In order to justify the application of this section evidence of some distinct act by the accused which can be regarded as part of the criminal act in question must be required (1922) M. W. N. 800, 50 Ind. Cas. 977=20 Cr. L. J. 369. The words "common intention" in this section have however not the same meaning as "common object" in ss. 146 and 149. Bhondhi v. Emperor, 113 Ind. Cas. 676=30 Cr. L. J. 205; see also 29 C. W. N. 181=A. I. R. 1925 P. C. I.=48 M. L. J. 543 (P.C.)=52 C. 197. The crime of conspiracy is completely committed the moment two or more have agreed that they will do, at once or at some future time certain things. It is not necessary in order to complete the offence that any one thing should be done beyond the agreement. It is complete when they agreed. An offence under s. 34 is committed only when there is a common intention to commit a particular act, 31 Bom. L. R. 515. It can hardly be natural that the common intention of all the persons who took part in the robbery was to murder not persons who resisted them in the execution of the robbery but also to murder the persons who ran away from the scene of the robbery cannot be said to be in furtherance of the common intention of the dacoits A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338. Where in the course of a commission of dacoity some alone used deadly weapons, section 34 applies to the case and all are liable to conviction under s. 397. 5 L. L. J. 224; see also 18 L. W. 715; 73 Ind. Cas. 932. Where section 34 is sought to be applied, it must be shown that the criminal act for which the accused are to be made responsible was committed in furtherance of their common intention. All the persons charged must have consented to and contemplated the commission of the particular crime committed. 1 Rang. 390. Section 34 applies even if criminal act is act of single individual. Common intention is the sole test of joint responsibility. A. I. R. 1933 All. 528=1933 A. L. J. 1292=1933 Cr. C. 863, see also 139 Ind. Cas. 81=33 Cr. L. J. 193=34 Cr. L. J. 299=60 C. 618=A. I. Where two or more persons set on to another armed with hatchets and daggers, the common intention may be assumed that all are cognisant of the fact that hatchets will be used and very serious injuries are likely to be inflicted, and as such section 34 applies. The only distinction between s. 34 and s. 149 is that the latter section refers to an assembly of five or more persons, while section 34 has no limitation as to the number of persons who may have been acting in pursuance of the common intention. 11 C. W. N. 1085=6 Cr. L. J. 304. It may be a question whether a person constructively guilty of murder under s. 34 could be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149, so as to make the other prisoners by a double construction guilty of murder. 12 C. L. R. 233. Where one accused struck the deceased with a stick after he had fallen from the blows with the hatchet inflicted by another accused. Held that it does not necessarily follow that the former had a common intention with the latter to commit murder. 15 Ind. Cas. 810=13 Cr. L. J. 538. This section applies only to acts done by several persons with a common intention. It has no application to a case of several persons starting with a common intention to commit an offence where only one of them commits the intended offence. In such a case the rest of the confederates are guilty of abetting the offence committed by one of them. 21 Cr. L. J. 797. The presumption of constructive intention must not be too rapidly applied or pushed too far. The mere fact that a man may think that a thing is likely to happen is vastly different from his intending that that thing should happen. The latter ingredient is necessary under s. 34 of the Penal Code the former by itself is irrelevant to the section. It is only when a Court can with some judicial certitude hold that a particular accused must have preconceived or or premeditated the result which ensued or acted with in concert with others in order to bring about the result that section 34 may be applied, 50 Ind. Cas. 337=20 Cr. L. J. 289. This section is not applicable to the case where the act which caused the death was not done by several persons but only by some. 21 P. R. 1919=52 Ind. Cas. 395; see also 52 Ind. Cas. 791. This section deals with the doings of separate acts similar or diverse by several persons, if all are done in furtherance of a common intention each person is liable for the result of them all as if he had done them himself, for "that Act," and "the Act" in the latter part of the section must include the whole action covered by a "Criminal Act" in the first part 10 Lah. L. J. 366=29 Cr. L. J. 474; see also 5 Bur L. J. 12=27 Cr. L. J. 827; A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 1=29 C. W. N. 181=52 C. 197=23 A. L. J. 314=26 Cr. L. J. 431 (P. C.) This section has no application in the construction of section 398 I. P. Code. 52 B. 168. Where two persons go to a place with the common intention to rob a third person and if necessary to kill him and one of them fires a fatal shot in furtherance of that common intention, then both of them are equally guilty of murder. Section 34 does not create a distinct offence: 28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411; see also A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 313=34 P. L.R. 699=34 Cr. L. J. 724; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 315=34 Cr. L. J. 1051. In cases where there is no direct evidence of the actual participation of the accused in a specific act of violence if persons proved at particular points of time to be members of a mob but not shown to have taken part in the specific act are to be found guilty of that act by force of s. 34 it must be clearly found that the act was in furtherance of the common intention of the mob while the accused were in it. 24 Cr. L. J. 531. This section covers the case of a single act done by several persons, L. B. R. (1893-1900), 150. Where the acts of a combination of persons proved are blows causing severe bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, each of the accused persons taking part in such combination is guilty of murder. 16 O. C. 19=19 Ind. Cas. 497=14 Cr. L. J. 241. For the application of this section, furtherance of a common design is a condition precedent for convicting each of the persons who take part in the commission of a crime, and the mere fact that several persons took part in a crime, in the absence of a common intention is not sufficient to convict any one of that crime. 9 A. L. J. 180=14 Ind. Cas. 649. Section 397 is applicable not only to one of the accused who actually used the deadly weapon by which hurt was caused, but to all the accused whose object was to commit robbery where the hurt is caused in furtherance of the common intention. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 65. Where a criminal act or series of criminal acts is committed by several persons in combination it is necessary to ascertain first the common intention of all, and secondly the individual intention of each of the accused as disclosed by the circumstances of the case. 21 Cr. L. J. 678; 1923 Rang. 268. This section deals with the doing of separate acts similar or diverse by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention, each person is liable for the result of them all as if he had done them himself. 1925 P. C. 1; see also 30 Cr. L. J. 944. Whether criminal act was done by some accused is in furtherance of common intention of all depends on facts of each case. 27 S. L. R. 269=A. I. Where common intention is to commit robbery and some robbers are armed with deadly weapons, intention to commit murder cannot be ascribed to other robbers. A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 204=1933 Cr. C. 919. There is distinction between sections 114 and 34. Section 114 is evidentiary and not peremptory. Presumption raised by section 114 brings case within s. 34. A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 236=11 Rang. 354. In case of pre-arranged murder all participating are guilty of murder. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 321. Where only one exceeds common intention, others are not guilty of major offence. A. I. R. 1935 Oudh. 178; see also A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 97. Whether act is done in furtherance of common intention is question of fact. Common intention need not be subject of express agreement. It can be inferred from circumstances disclosed. A. I. R. 1935 Rang. 89.

The mere circumstances of a person being present on an unlawful occasion does not raise a presumption of that person's complicity in an offence then committed. 14 B. 115. Unpremeditated acts done by a private individual, which go beyond the object and intention of the original offence, should not implicate persons who take no part in that particular act. A. W. N. (1887) 236. It is a necessary condition to make a person liable under this section, that the common intention must cover the act done by all the several persons. 14 Bur. L. R. 264. The essence of this section is common intention. 16 C. L. J. 440; 3 P. L. W. 120; 10 L. B. R. 117; 25 C. W. N. 24. 9 A. L. J. 180. Where persons go with the intention to prosecute a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose. But a distinction has to be drawn between unpremeditated acts done by a particular individual which go beyond the object and intention of the original offence and premeditated acts of the parties as shown by their conduct during the affair. 19 Ind. Cas. 497. This section refers to cases in which several persons join to do an act and intend to do that act. It does not refer to cases where several persons intend to do one act and some one or more of them do an entirely different act. This section is based on common intention. 86 Ind. Cas. 475=26 Cr. L. J. 827=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 913. In order to convict a person with the aid of this section, it is not necessary that that person should actually with his own hand commit the criminal act. If several persons have the common intention of doing a particular criminal act and if in furtherance of that common intention all of them join together or aid or abet each other in the commission of the act then although one of these persons may not actually with his own hand do the act. If he helps by his presence or by other acts in the commission of the act he would be held to have done that act within the meaning of this section. 26 Cr. L. J. 1498=90 Ind. Cas. 154. So acts done in furtherance of common intention make all equally liable for the results of all the acts of others. 52 C. 197=85 Ind. Cas. 47=26 Cr. L. J. 431=29 C. W. N. 181=52 I. A. 40 P. C.=23 A. No distinct offence is created by this section only a principle of liability is laid down by it. 28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411. This section has application only in cases where there is a difficulty in finding out the exact part taken by each member. 1 L. B. R. 233. But the accused must be one of the group which committed the illegal act. 50 C. 41=74 Ind. Cas. 267=1923 Cal. 453=24 Cr. L. J. 763. This section is based on the principle that where the purpose is common, the responsibility should also be such. 3 B. L. R. P. C. 44. So a party who is not cognisant of the intention of his companion is not liable. Where fight results into single combat and results into the death and injuries, principles of joint responsibilities do not apply. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 485. In cases of joint commission of murder, in the absence of finding of common intention, none can be convicted of murder. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 99. But where the death of the deceased was the result of the cumulative effect of the injuries caused by all the four assailant conjointly the case is within section 34 of the Penal Code and all of them are liable for murder. 4 Lah. L. J. 277. Where in the course of a commission of a dacoity some alone use deadly weapons, this section applies to the case and all are liable to conviction under s. 397. 68 Ind. Cas. 817=23 Cr. L. J. 590. In order to justify the application of this section evidence of some distinct act by the accused, which can be regarded as part of the criminal act in question, must be required. 17 L. W. 21.

In order to convict a person under this section some distinct act by the accused in furtherance of the common act must be proved. 17 Ind. Cas. 360=A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 187; 1921; M. W. N. 800; 2 Bur. L. J. 142; 90 Ind. Cas. 705=7 Pat. L. T. 388.

Section 34 has no application in the construction of s. 398. A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 52.

Abetment—This section does not involve abetment and therefore does not imply any conspiracy and does not require proof that any particular accused was responsible for the commission of the actual offence. 18 C. W. N. 580.

35. Whenever an act, which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a criminal knowledge or intention, is done by several persons, each of such persons who joins in the act with such knowledge or intention is liable for the act in the same manner as if the act were done by him alone with that knowledge or intention.

Scope. This section makes it clear that, where a number of persons join in an act which is criminal only by reason of its being done with a certain knowledge or intention, each person is liable for the act to the content of his knowledge or intention; in other words, that the Court or jury have to consider what was the knowledge or intention with which the persons joined in the act. 31 C. W. N. 314=10 Ind. Cas. 718=28 Cr. L. J. 334=45 C. L. J. 131=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 324. "Where A and B unite in assaulting and resisting C, a public servant, in the execution of his duty; A, not knowing C's character, may be guilty only of an assault; but B, if he knowingly resists C, may commit the offence of obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. If an act which is an offence in itself and without any reference to any criminal knowledge or intention on the part of the doers is done by several persons, as if several commit a nuisance by carrying on an offensive trade, each of such person is liable for the offence."—Morgan and Macpherson.

36. Wherever the causing of a certain effect, or an attempt to cause that effect, by an act or by an omission, is an offence, it is to be understood that the causing of that effect, partly by an act, and partly by an omission, is the same offence.

Illustrations.

A intentionally causes Z's death, partly by illegally omitting to give Z food, and partly by beating Z. A has committed murder.

Notes.—When an offence is the effect partly of an act or partly of an omission it is one offence only. 28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 41.

37. When an offence is committed by means of several acts, whoever intentionally co-operates in the commission of that offence by doing any one of those acts, either singly or jointly with any other person, commits that offence.

Co-operation by doing one of several acts constituting an offence.

Illustrations.

(a) A and B agree to murder Z by severally and at different times, giving him small doses of poison. A and B administer the poison according to the agreement with intent to murder Z. Z dies from the effects of the several doses of poison so administered to him. Here A and B intentionally co-operate in the commission of murder, and as each of them does an act by which the death is caused they are both guilty of the offence, though their acts are separate.

(b) A and B are joint jailors, and, as such have the charge of Z, a prisoner, alternately for 6 hours at a time. A and B, intending to cause Z's death, knowingly co-operate in causing that effect by illegally omitting, each during the time of his attendance, to furnish Z with food supplied to them for that purpose. Z dies of hunger. Both A and B are guilty of the murder of Z.

(c) A, a jailor, has the charge of Z, a prisoner. A, intending to cause Z's death, illegally omits to supply Z with food; in consequence of which Z is much reduced in strength, but the starvation is not sufficient to cause his death. A is dismissed from his office and B succeeds him. B, without collusion or co-operation with A, illegally omits to supply Z, with food, knowing that he is likely thereby to cause Z's death. Z dies of hunger. B is guilty of murder, but as A did not co-operate with B, A is guilty only of an attempt to commit murder.

Notes.—Where a number of persons, acting in concert with one another, caused death by beating the deceased with lathis, and the attack by them was a single and indivisible thing, held that all of them must be taken to have intended to cause death or to have had every reason to know that the probable result of their joint act would be death. 35 A. 506=11 A. L. J. 804; 14 C. L. J. 615; 21 Ind. Cas. 663; 15 Bom. L. R. 303; 19 Ind. Cas. 331=14 Cr. L. J. 235; 40 A. 686; 47 Ind. Cas. 805; see also 73 Ind. Cas. 769=24 Cr. L. J. 673=A. I. R. (1924) All 78. By section 37, when an offence is committed by means of several acts, whoever intentionally co-operates in the commission of that offence by doing any one of these acts, either singly or jointly with any other person, commits that offence. 29 C. Persons concerned in criminal act may be guilty of different offences.

38. Where several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of a criminal act, they may be guilty of different offences by means of that act.

Illustration.

A attacks Z under such circumstances of grave provocation that his killing of Z would be only culpable homicide not amounting to murder. B, having ill-will towards Z, and intending to kill him, and not having been subject to the provocation, assists A in killing Z. Here, though A and B are both engaged in causing Z's death, B is guilty of murder, and A is guilty only of culpable homicide.

Notes.—When several persons are engaged or concerned in the commission of a criminal act, they may be guilty of different offence by means of that act. 29 C. W. N. 181 (189)=52 C. 197=41 C. L. J. 240=27 Bom. L. R. 148=23 A. L. J. 314 P. C.; see also A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 313=28 Cr. L. J. 662=103 Ind. Cas. 198. Different punishment for different offence can be given to persons under s. 38. A. Cases.—Where in a quarrel, one accused person hit the deceased with a stick and another with an axe and the latter caused death and there was no proof of common intention, held, that the latter was guilty of culpable homicide while the former was guilty only of grievous hurt. A. W. N. 1882, 23.

39. A person is said to cause an effect "voluntarily," when he causes it by means whereby he intended to cause it or by means which at the time of employing those means, he knew or had reason to believe to be likely to cause it.

Illustrations.

A sets fire, by night, to an inhabited house in a large town, for the purpose of facilitating robbery, and thus causes the death of a person. Here, A may not have intended to cause death, and may even be sorry that death has been caused by his act; yet if he knew that he was likely to cause death, he has caused death voluntarily.

Voluntarily.—The English law by means of an artificial presumption viz, that a man is presumed to intend the natural or probable consequences of his own act, gives to the words which denote intention, the meaning here annexed to "voluntarily".—Morgan and Macpherson 21. Where A intentionally aided the murderers by calling the deceased and bringing him into their power his action cannot be said to be 'voluntarily' within the meaning of s. 39. 1912 M. W. N. 1108=19 Ind. Cas. 207=14 Cr. L. J. 207.

40. Except in the "chapters" and sections mentioned in clauses two and three of this section, the word "offence" denotes a thing made punishable by this Code.

In Chapter IV, "Chapter VA" and in the following sections, namely, sections 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 109, 110, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, 187, 194, 195, 203, 211, 213, 214, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 347, 348, 388, 389 and 445 the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as hereinafter defined.

And in sections 141, 175, 177, 201, 202, 212, 216 and 441, the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months, or upwards, whether with or without fine.

Amendments.—S. 40 has been substituted for the original by Act 17 of 1870 s. 2. The figures 64, 65, 66 and 71, in the second clause have been inserted by Act 8 of 1882, and the figures 67 by Act X of 1886 s. 21 (1). The word 'chapters' has been substituted by Act VIII of 1930.

The words "Chapter VA" were inserted by Act 8 of 1913.

S. 114—Section 114 has been intended to apply to special law by this section. 29 C. 496.

Notes.—Section 40 refers to definition of the word "offence" and not to punishment. A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 203=7 Rang. 329=30 Cr. L. J. 961=118 Ind. Cas. 637 (F. B.) "The word 'offence' denotes a thing made punishable by this Code. It is obvious that the word 'punishable' is here used according to a common idiom for 'rendering a person liable to punishment'; for it is obvious that, in the strict and primary usage of the word nothing is punishable, and no person since Xerxes except a child with his doll, has ever supposed otherwise. The expression therefore, is incomplete".—Per Holloway J. in 3 Mad. H. C. Rep. App. 11 at p. 12. According to Innes J. 'a thing made punishable' means an act or omission which by this Code is constituted one to which a punishment is attached. Ibid at p. 21; see also 5 B. 338; 7 A. 67. The abetment of an offence is an offence. 49 P. R. 1887; see also 24 C. W. N. 196=54 Ind. Cas. 78; so also an attempt to commit an offence. 17 A. 120 (123). "Special law."

41. A "special law" is a law applicable to a particular subject.

Notes.—Special laws such as the Excise, Opium, Cattle Trespass Acts etc. create fresh offences other than those specified in the Act. 7 L. B. R. 63=22 Ind. Cas. 147. 43. The word "illegal" is applicable to everything which is an offence, or which is prohibited by law, or

51. The word "oath" includes a solemn affirmation substituted by law for an oath, and any declaration required or authorized by law to be made before a public servant, or to be used for the purpose of proof, whether in a Court of Justice or not.
"Oath".

52. Nothing is said to be done or believed in "good faith" which is done or believed without due care and attention.
"Good faith".

Good faith—The question of good faith must be considered with reference to the position of the accused and the circumstances under which he acted. The law does not exact the same care and attention from all persons regardless of the position they occupy. 12 B. 377. All acts must be done with due care and attention 21 M. 249. What is done by a person who in good faith believes himself to be bound to do it, or what is done in good faith for a man's benefit, though in fact it causes harm to him, is not an offence (sections 76 and 88.) This explanation of good faith shews in what sense the above and other similar cases are not to be understood. Mere good faith in the sense of simple belief, actual belief, without any grounds of believing, is not sufficient; the belief must be a reasonable not an absurd belief, that is, there must be some reasonable ground for it. Good faith in fact or belief requires due care and attention to the matter in hand. The law cannot mark, except in this vague way, the amount of care and attention requisite, but if a man takes upon himself an office or duty requiring skill or care, and a question arises whether he acted in good faith, he must shew not merely a good intention, but such care and skill as the duty reasonably demands for its due discharge. The degree of care requisite will vary with the degree of danger which may result from the want of care: where the peril is the greatest the greatest caution is necessary. Simple belief may negative malice and is a strong argument against any criminal intention, but where the question is whether a Magistrate or other public servant is justified in doing a certain thing, his justification must have a better foundation than his mere private belief; for a man may be very foolish in believing himself justified and the law could not adopt so vague and unsafe a criterion.—Morgan and Macpherson. R. 1888 Cr. A man cannot be convicted of perjury for having acted rashly and credulously and having failed to make reasonable enquiry with regard to the facts alleged by him to be true. CHAPTER III.

OF PUNISHMENTS.

53. The punishments to which offenders are liable under the provisions of this Code are—

"Punishments"

First.—Death;

Secondly.—Transportation;

Thirdly.—Penal servitude;

Fourthly.—Imprisonment, which is of two descriptions, namely:—

(1) Rigorous, that is, with hard labour;

(2) Simple ;

Fifthly.—Forfeiture of property ;

Sixthly.—Fine.

Notes—The punishments provided for offences by this Code are contained in this chapter ; but the mode of inflicting, commuting and remitting punishments belong to the law of procedure,—Morgan and Macpherson. Every conviction must be followed by a sentence A. W. N. 1884. 219. A sentence must be plain and complete by itself. 15 A. 208 ; 24 M. 13. In the case of technical offence, a nominal sentence is quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice. 16 P. R. 1910 Cr.=6 Ind. Cas. 952. The maximum sentence whether of fine or of imprisonment, provided for by law, represents the sentence to be inflicted on extreme cases. Because a man may easily pay a fine is not a ground for ordering him to pay the maximum fine fixed by law, if the nature of the offence committed by him is not of the most serious character, having regard to the description of the offence itself. A. I. R. 1929 All. 919=1930 A. L. J. 26=31 Cr. L. J. 88. List of punishments given in s. 53 is not exhaustive. 1933 Cr. C. 1146=A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 329. 54. In every case in which sentence of death shall have been passed, the Government of India or the Government of the place within which the offender shall have been sentenced may, without the consent of the offender, commute the punishment for any other punishment provided by this Code.

55. In every case in which sentence of transportation for life shall have been passed, the Government of India or the Government of the place within which the offender shall have been sentenced may, without the consent of the offender, commute the punishment for imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding fourteen years.

56. Whenever any person being a European or American is convicted of an offence punishable under this Code with transportation, the Court shall sentence the offender to penal servitude, instead of transportation, according to the provisions of Act XXIV, of 1855 ;

Provided that, where a European or American offender would, but for such Act, be liable to be sentenced or ordered to be transported for a term exceeding ten years, but not for life he shall be liable to be sentenced or ordered to be kept in penal servitude for such term exceeding six years as to the Court seems fit, but not for life.

Amendment.—This proviso has been added by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 27 of 1870 s. 3.

Penal servitude.—The punishment of penal servitude is only applicable to Europeans and Americans. 19 M. 483=1 Weir 298.

57. In calculating fractions of terms of punishment, transportation for life shall be reckoned as equivalent to transportation for twenty years.

58. In every case in which a sentence of transportation is passed, the offender, until he is transported, shall be dealt with in the same manner as if sentenced to rigorous imprisonment, and shall be held to have been undergoing his sentence of transportation during the term of his imprisonment.

Notes.—The Supreme Government appoints a place or places of transportation within the British territories, and the local governments give orders for the removal of persons sentenced to transportation to the places so appointed.—Morgan and Macpherson.

59. In every case in which an offender is punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, it shall be competent to the Court which sentences such offender, instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment, to sentence the offender to transportation for a term not less than seven years, and not exceeding the term for which by this Code, such offender is liable to imprisonment.

Scope.—Under the provisions of this section, a sentence of transportation can be awarded in lieu of rigorous imprisonment for a similar term. 1 W. R. Cr. Letters 5. Under the provisions of this section, a sentence of rigorous imprisonment should first be passed and then commuted to one of transportation. 1 W. R. Cr. Letters 10. This section has no application to sentences under a local or special law, but only to offenders convicted under the Penal Code. 11 M. L. J. 127. But the commutation of two sentences, one of four years' rigorous imprisonment and the other of three years' rigorous imprisonment to one of transportation for seven years is illegal. 2 Cr. L. J. 473. Transportation must not exceed the maximum term of imprisonment. 48 I. A. 35 (P. C.) ; I. A. 43 (F. B.) The words "in every case" in s. 59 were construed as meaning "on any charge" or "for any offence". 2 Cr. L. J. 473. A sentence of transportation for 14 years passed upon a person found guilty of theft, after 4 previous convictions is illegal, as under s. 75. I. P. Code (as amended by Act III of 1910), the Court, if it awards sentence of transportation must sentence the convict to transportation for life. The Court may, however, in lieu of such sentence, sentence the prisoner to a term of ten years' imprisonment and under the provisions of s. 59. I. P. Code. 14 P. R. 1915 Cr. = 16 Cr. L. J. 554. The restriction imposed by s. 35, Cr. Pro. Code must be read with sections of the Penal Code which prescribe the limits of punishments for different offences. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 478. Transportation can not be awarded in default of payment of fine. 17 P. R. 1880 Cr. ; 8 Ind. Cas. 985 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1161. This section enacts a general rule to the effect that in the case of offences for which no transportation is specially mentioned as a punishment and which are punishable with imprisonment for a term of seven years or upward, it is competent to the Judge to substitute a sentence of transportation as a substantive sentence for that of imprisonment. This section does not authorize the substitution of transportation for the imprisonment provided by the Court in default of payment of fine. 5 M. 28 = 1 Weir 30 ; see also 2 A. W. N. 116. This section applies only to cases where the punishment inflicted on one offence alone is seven years' imprisonment, and not to cases where it is made up by adding two sentences together and then commuting the amalgamated period to transportation. 2 W. R. Cr. ; 5 W. R. Cr. 44 ; 3 W. R. Cr. 441 ; 63 P. R. 1866 Cr. ; 27 P. R. 1901. The Indian Penal Code in no instance specifically provides transportation for any term short of life as a punishment and s. 59 is the only authority for passing sentences of transportation for short periods. 14 P. L. R. 1904 = 1 Cr. L. J. 89 = 31 P. R. 1903 Cr. The proper procedure in cases where a Judge desires to pass a sentence of transportation for a term is to pass a sentence of rigorous imprisonment and then, under this section, commute the sentence to one of transportation. L. B. R. (1893-1900) 483, but see 1 L. B. R. 292 by which this is overruled. A sentence of transportation cannot, under s. 59 I. P. Code, be for a period less than 7 years whatever might be the charge. 8 W. R. Cr. 2. A period of ten years is the maximum which a sentence of transportation under ss. 412 and 59, must not exceed. 5 W. R. Cr. 16. In order to make this section applicable, (1) the offence must be such as could be punished with seven years' imprisonment or more ; (2) no sentence of imprisonment for a shorter period than seven years can be passed in any case. 4 L. B. R. 65 = 6 Cr. L. J. 290 ; see also 17 P. R. 1880 Cr. This section has no application to sentences under a special or local law. 11 M. L. J. 127. The High Court on appeal cannot enhance the sentence by imposing a sentence of transportation for a term of years exceeding the maximum term for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed. 40 M. 60. In every case in which an offender is punishable with imprisonment which may be of either description, it shall be competent to the Court which sentences such offender to direct in the sentence that such imprisonment shall be wholly rigorous, or that such imprisonment shall be wholly simple, or that any part of such imprisonment shall be rigorous and the rest simple.

Sentence may be (in certain cases of imprisonment) wholly or partly rigorous or simple.

Notes—Four men were convicted under s. 459 I. P. Code and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment and fine. It appeared that the accused belonged to an humble walk of life. Held, that under these circumstances it was not necessary to impose fine in addition to substantial sentence of imprisonment. 30 P. 62. [Forfeiture of property in respect of offenders punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment] Repealed by Act 16 of 1921].

63. Where no sum is expressed to which a fine may extend the amount of fine to which the offender is liable is unlimited, but shall not be excessive.

Amount of fine.

Object.—The difficulty of framing any general rule for the limiting of fine has always been felt. The rule here laid down, that excessive fines shall not be imposed, follows the words of the Bill of Rights (1 Will and Mary St. 2. C. 2). In cases which are not very heinous, the amount of fine, which the Courts may impose is, as has been shown above, limited by the Code; but in serious cases the amount is left to their discretion.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Civil cases.—“In every cases in which fine is part of the punishment of an offence, it ought to be competent to the tribunal which has tried the offender acting under proper checks, to award the whole or part of the fine to the sufferer, provided that the sufferer signifies his willingness to receive what is so awarded in full satisfaction of his civil claim for reparation. If the Criminal Court shall not make such an award or if the sufferer shall not be satisfied with such an award, he must be left to his civil action. But if, in such an action, he recovers damages, the fine ought, in our opinion, to be employed, as far as the fine will go, in satisfying those damages. The plan we propose would not be open to the strong and indeed unanswerable objections which Mr. Livingstone has urged against the plan of blending a civil and criminal trial together. Yet we think it likely that our plan could in a great majority of cases render a civil proceeding unnecessary. We are happy to be able to quote the high authority of Mr. Livingstone in favour of the doctrine that every fine imposed for an offence ought to be expended, as far as it will go, in paying any damages which may be due in consequence of injury caused by that offence”,—Note A.

Amount—A fine should be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case in which it is imposed and the condition in life of the offender, 18 P. R. 1878 Cr.; 20 P. R. 1895 Cr.; U. B. R. The intention of the framers of the Penal Code was that fines inflicted should not be disproportionate to all possible means of the criminals, if Magistrates should not be influenced by the consideration that the criminals, though poor, are backed up by the influential persons. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 553=Cr. Rg. 34 of 1891.

64. In every case of an offence punishable with imprisonment as well as fine, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine, whether with or without imprisonment, and in every case of an offence punishable with imprisonment or fine or with fine only, in which the offender is sentenced to a fine ;

it shall be competent to the Court which sentences such offender to direct by the sentence that, in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall suffer imprisonment for a certain term, which imprisonment shall be in excess of any other imprisonment to which he may have been sentenced, or to which he may be liable under a commutation of sentence.

Act VIII of 1882.—Section 1 of Act VIII 1882, extends this section to all local and special Acts. whether passed before or after the General Clauses Act, 1868, but does not extend it to general Acts of the Governor-General in Council passed prior to 1868. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 473 ; but see 6 Bom. L. R. 357=1 Cr. L. J. 327.

Imprisonment in default of fine.—The sentence of imprisonment in default of fine should bear some reasonable proportion to the amount of fine. L. B. R. (1872—1892) 353. A sentence of imprisonment may be imposed in default of a sentence of a fine in an offence under s. 391. Municipal Act. 58C. 1293=35 C. W. N. 865. A sentence of imprisonment in default of a fine to run concurrently with any other sentence should not be imposed. 131 Ind. Cas. 61=A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 51=1932 Cr. C. 153. 65. The term for which the Court directs the offender to be imprisoned in default of payment of a fine shall not exceed one-fourth of the term of imprisonment which is the maximum fixed for the offence, if the offence be punishable with imprisonment as well as fine.

Scope.—The words “imprisonment as well as fine” contained in this section, must be held to include “imprisonment and fine” and also “imprisonment or fine,” L. B. R. (1893-1900), 494. A sentence of 5 months’ imprisonment in default of fine, when the maximum sentence for the offence is one year’s imprisonment, is illegal. 25 Cr. L. J. 110 (1). The provisions of ss. 65 and 67 equally apply to punishments inflicted under special laws like the Bombay Gambling Act. 20 S. L. R. 31=27 Cr. L. J. 90=91 Ind. Cas. 394=A. I. R. 1926 Sind 144. Section 67 does not apply to cases where the offence is punishable either with imprisonment and fine or with imprisonment or fine. To the latter class of cases, s. 65 applies and the imprisonment in default of payment of fine cannot exceed one-fourth of the maximum term of imprisonment provided for the offence, 22 M. 338=1 Weir 32 ; see also 1898 P. S. C. 65 Oudh.

Principle. "The next question which it becomes our duty to consider was this; When a fine has been imposed what measures shall be adopted in default of payment? And the two modes of proceeding, with both of which we are familiar, naturally occurred to us. The offender may be imprisoned till the fine is paid, or he may be imprisoned for a certain term, such imprisonment being considered as standing in place of the fine. In the former case, the imprisonment is used in order to compel him to part with his money; in the latter case, the imprisonment is a punishment substituted for another punishment. Both modes of proceeding appear to us to be open to strong objections. To keep the offender in imprisonment till his fine is paid is, if the fine be beyond his means to keep him in imprisonment all his life: and it is impossible for the best Judge to be certain that he may not sometimes impose a fine which shall be beyond the means of an offender. On the other hand, to sentence an offender to fine and to a certain fixed term of imprisonment in default of payment, and then to leave it to himself to determine whether he will part with his money or lie in gaol, appears to us to be a very objectionable course. The high authority of Mr. Livingstone is here against us. We regret we cannot agree with him; the object of the penal law is to deter from offences, and this can only be done by means of inflictions disagreeable to offenders. The law ought not to inflict punishments unnecessarily severe; but it ought not on the other hand, to call the offender into council with his Judge, and to allow him an option between two punishments. In general, the circumstance that he prefers one punishment raises a strong presumption that he ought to suffer the other.....We are far from thinking that the course which we propose is unexceptionable, but it appears to us to be less open to exception than any other which has occurred to us. We propose that at the time of imposing a fine the Court shall also fix a certain term of imprisonment which no offender shall undergo in default of payment.....But we do not mean that this imprisonment shall be taken in full satisfaction of the fine"—Report of the Law Commissioners, Note A.

66. The imprisonment which the Court imposes in default of payment of a fine may be of any description to which the offender might have been sentenced for the offence.

Notes.—Where the offence is punishable with rigorous imprisonment in that case the sentence in lieu of fine would be also rigorous imprisonment. 7 W. R. 31.

67. If the offence be punishable with fine only, "the imprisonment which the Court imposes in default of payment of the fine shall be simple, and" the term for which the Court directs the offender to be imprisoned, in default of payment of fine, shall not exceed the following scale, that is to say, for any term not exceeding two months when the amount of the fine shall not exceed fifty rupees, and for any term not exceeding four months when the amount shall not exceed one hundred rupees, and for any term not exceeding six months in any other case.

Scope. This section refers only to cases in which the offence is punishable with fine only. 22 M. 238=1 Weir 32. This section does not authorize a sentence of rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of fine in the case of a conviction under s. 61 of the Stamp Act. 40 P. R. 1880 Cr. The sentence of imprisonment, awarded in default of payment of fine passed on a person sentenced under s. 290 I. P. C. should be simple and not rigorous. 5 B. H. C. Cr. 45. The provisions of ss. 65 and 67 I. P. C. equally apply to punishments inflicted under special law like the Bombay

68. The imprisonment which is imposed in default of payment of a fine shall terminate whenever that fine is either paid or levied by process of law.
 Imprisonment to terminate on payment of fine.

69. If, before the expiration of the term of imprisonment fixed in default of payment, such a proportion of the fine be paid or levied that the term of imprisonment suffered in default of payment is not less than proportional to the part of the fine still unpaid, the imprisonment shall terminate.
 Termination of imprisonment on payment of proportional part of fine.

A is sentenced to a fine of one hundred rupees, and to four months' imprisonment in default of payment. Here, if seventy-five rupees of the fine be paid or levied before the expiration of one month of the imprisonment, A will be discharged as soon as the first month has expired. If seventy-five rupees be paid or levied at the time of the expiration of the first month, or at any later time while A continues in imprisonment, A will be immediately discharged. If fifty rupees of the fine be paid or levied before the expiration of two months of the imprisonment, A will be discharged as soon as the two months are completed. If fifty rupees be paid or levied at the time of the expiration of those two months or at any later time while A continues in imprisonment, A will be immediately discharged.

Notes.—Having undergone a portion of the alternative imprisonment provided for non-payment of fine a person is not discharged from payment on the proportionate portion of the fine. A. W. N. 1882, 85. A sentence of imprisonment in default of fine is illegal in a conviction under s. 3 of Act. XXXI of 1850, since s. 69, I. P. Code, applies only to conviction for offences under the Penal Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 40.

70. The fine, or any part thereof which remains unpaid, may be levied at any time within six years after the passing of the sentence, and if, under the sentence, the offender be liable to imprisonment for a longer period than six years, then at any time previous to the expiration of that period; and the death of the offender does not discharge from the liability any property which would, after his death be legally liable for his debts.
 Fine leviable within six years, or during imprisonment.
 Death not to discharge property from liability.

Notes. The fact of a Magistrate having written off a fine as irrecoverable is no bar to the realization thereof at any time within the period allowed by law, if it subsequently appears that the person from whom the fine was due, has acquired the means of paying it. 3 A. L. J. 818. This section is not applicable to immoveable property. 5 B. H. C. R. 63; 20 C. 478. Even after imprisonment in default of payment of fine, the property of the accused may be seized by distress and sold. 3 W. R. Cr. 61; 23 A. 497. After a lapse of seven years a prisoner's property is saved but he may be personally arrested. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 207.

71. Where anything which is an offence is made up of parts, any of which parts is itself an offence, the offender shall not be punished with the punishment of more than one of such his offences, unless it be so expressly provided.
 Limit of punishment of offence made up of several offences.

“Where anything is an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished, or “Where several acts, of which one or more than one would, by itself or themselves constitute, an offence, constitute, when, combined, a different offence,

"the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the Court which tries him could award for any one of such offences."

Illustrations.

(a.) A gives Z fifty strokes with a stick. Here A may have committed the offence of voluntarily causing hurt to Z by the whole beating and also by each of the blows which make up the whole beating. If A were liable to punishment for every blow, he might be imprisoned for fifty years, one for each blow. But he is liable only to one punishment for the whole beating.

(b.) But if, while A is beating Z, Y interferes, and A intentionally strikes Y, here as the blow given to Y is no part of the act whereby A voluntarily causes hurt to Z, A is liable to one punishment for voluntarily causing hurt to Z, and to another for the blow given to Y.

Amendments. The clauses quoted have been added by Act 8 of 1882, s. 4.

72. In all cases in which judgment is given that a person is guilty of one of several offences specified in the judgment, but that it is doubtful of which of these offences he is guilty, the offender shall be punished for the offence for which the lowest punishment is provided if the same punishment is not provided for all.

Objects. This provision is intended to prevent an offender whose guilt is fully established from eluding punishment on the ground that the evidence does not enable the tribunals to pronounce with certainty under what penal provision his case falls. Whether the doubt is merely between an aggravated and mitigated form of the same offence or between two offences neither of which is a mitigated form of the other, the offender must be punished for the offence to which the lowest punishment is provided. If the same punishment is provided for each of the offences, the offender of course is liable to that punishment.—Morgan and Macpherson. If a conviction is justified only on one or other of the heads, and it is uncertain on which of the two occasions falsehood was uttered, then this section applies. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 336.

Cases.—When an accused person is convicted in the alternative, one of the offences of which he might be guilty being murder punishable under s. 302 of Indian Penal Code, s. 72 so far overrides s. 302 as to admit, in such case, of a less punishment than transportation for life being inflicted. 26 A. 73. Whenever any person is convicted of an offence for which, under this Code, the Court has power to sentence him to rigorous imprisonment, the Court may, by its sentence, order that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of the imprisonment to which he is sentenced, not exceeding three months in the whole according to the following scale, that is to say :—

- a time not exceeding one month if the term of imprisonment shall not exceed six months ;
- a time not exceeding two months if the term of imprisonment shall exceed six months, and “shall not exceed one year” ;
- a time not exceeding three months if the term of imprisonment shall exceed one year.

Amendment.—The words quoted have been substituted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1882) s. 5.

Period of solitary confinement. The intention of this section is that a term of three months is the maximum period of solitary confinement that can be judicially awarded in a continuous period of imprisonment. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 247.

Solitary confinement cannot be awarded when a person is punished under a local or special law. 76 Ind. Cas. 184.; L. R. 5 A. 19 Cr.; A person cannot be kept in solitary confinement for the whole term of his imprisonment. Under this section it is to be imposed at intervals. 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 49. This section provides that whatever the length of the sentence may be, a solitary imprisonment for a period exceeding 3 months cannot be passed (U. B. R. 1892—1896) Vol I, 146; 68 Ind. Cas. 817. Even cumulative sentences of solitary confinement exceeding 3 months are illegal. U. B. R. (1802—1896) Vol. I, 146; 5 C. P. L. R. 23; 37 P. R. 1905 Cr.; 13 P. R. 1877. Solitary confinement in lieu of fine is illegal. 26 P. R. 1878 Cr.; 36 A. 495; 20 P. R. 1896; 9 P. R. 1882; 53 P. R. 1887. Solitary imprisonment is legal only if a person is convicted under this Act. 46 A. 114=21 A. L. J. 914=1924 All. 319; 24 P. R. 1879; 76 Ind. Cas. 184.; 120 P. R. 1866; 20 P. R. 1870; (1899) P. R. 1933 All. 676=1933 A. L. J. 777=1933 Cr. C. 1188.

74. In executing a sentence of solitary confinement, such confinement shall, in no case, exceed fourteen days at a time, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than such periods, and when the imprisonment awarded shall exceed three months, the solitary confinement shall not exceed seven days, in any one month, of the whole imprisonment awarded, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than such periods.

Notes. Solitary imprisonment must not be imposed for the whole term of the imprisonment. 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 49.

75. Whoever having been convicted,—

(a) by a Court in British India of an offence punishable, under Chapter XII or Chapter XVII of this Code, with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, or,

Enhanced, punishment for certain offences under chapter XII or chapter XVII after previous conviction.

in India acting under the general or special authority of the Governor-General in Council, or of any Local Government, of an offence which would, if committed in British India, have been punishable under those Chapters of this Code with like imprisonment for the like term, shall be guilty of any offence punishable under either of those Chapters with like imprisonment for the like term, shall be subject, for every such subsequent offence, to transportation for life, or to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years.

Amendment—This section has been substituted for the original by Act III of 1910.

Scope.—Under this section, an accused renders himself liable to enhanced punishment by reason of previous convictions against him only if such convictions were made before he committed the offence he stands charged with. 9 L. B. R. 77. In the case of men with previous convictions, regard should be had to their career and to the time that had elapsed between the convictions passed upon them. This section was not intended for the purpose of automatically enhancing by a kind of geometrical progression the sentence to be passed after a previous conviction. The reason for passing a more severe sentence in the case of a criminal with a previous conviction is primarily to protect the society from the predations and offences committed by a habitual rogue, who has shown no signs of repentance. A Magistrate or Judge should make an enquiry into the repute and the antecedent behaviour of a man whom he proposes to sentence severely. 19 Cr. L. J. 655. This section properly applies to cases where it is intended to pass sentences more severe than those provided in the Penal Code for the particular offences charged. 52 Mad. 358=115 Ind. Cas. 483=30 Cr. L. J. 471=A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 306. It must be something apart from the nature of the offence such as youth, age, illness or sex and the interval of time which has lapsed between the accused person coming out of prison after serving the last sentence and the commission of the offence that should be considered for reduction of sentence. A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 841=53 M. 80=57 M. L. J. 743=30 M. L. W. 710=1929 Cr. C. 609. Where the accused was bound over under s. 101 Cr. Pro. Code, it is no ground for enhanced punishment. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 294; see also A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 195=28 S. L. R. 199. Enhancement of sentence should not rest on previous security bond when accused is not questioned about it. A. I. R. 1930 Sind. 58=125 Ind. Cas. 46. Previous conviction must be proved strictly and in accordance with law 43C. 1128=17 Cr. L. J. 185=20 C. W. N. 725. Previous convictions should be proved according to s. 511 Cr. Pro. Code and not merely by admission of accused. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 768=33 P. L. R. 530=30 Cr. L. J. 1082=119 Ind. Cas. 429; 36 P. L. R. 7; 35 P. L. R. 697=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 693. Although accused admits previous conviction, formal charge under s. 75 is necessary. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 544 129 Ind. Cas. 300. This section has no application in case of a single previous conviction about 10 years before. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 195=28 S. L. R. 199=1934 Cr. C. 1405. This section does not apply to attempts punishable under s. 511. 106 Ind. Cas. 340; see also 22 Cr. L. J. 750=24 O. C. 260=64 Ind. Cas. 142; 88 Ind. Cas. 724=A. I. R. 1926 All 144=23 A. L. This section should also not be used when the previous offence took place as much as 12 years before the present one and there is only one previous offence. 106 Ind. Cas. 448. A previous security order under section 110 Cr. Pro. Code, is irrelevant for the purpose of this section. 110 Ind. Cas. 804=29 Cr. L. J. 772. There is no justification for the view that whenever there is a previous conviction within the terms of this section, against an accused person, the Court is bound to pass an enhanced sentence on him, that is to say a sentence wholly disproportionate to the actual offence under investigation. This section does not empower a Court to pass an enhanced sentence merely because there are previous convictions against the accused person although it enables the Court to sentence a person to transportation for life or to imprisonment up to 10 years. This section enables a Court to pass a sentence commensurate with the nature of the offence on the accused person. It does not empower a Court to pass a sentence disproportionate to the nature of the actual offence; recourse should not be had to this section if the punishment provided for the offence is sufficient. (1919) Pat. 463; see also 30 P. L. R. 530=119 Ind. Cas. 429=30 Cr. L. J. 1082. Where an accused is charged under the provisions of s. 75 it is absolutely essential that the previous conviction in question should be clearly and legally proved. The proper way to prove such a conviction is either (1) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer in whose custody are the records of the Court which convicted; or (2) by a certificate under the hand of the officer in charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was undergone, or else by production of the actual warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered. In every case there must be evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted. A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 107. A Magistrate can take into consideration the previous conviction at the time of awarding sentence independently of s. 75 A. I. R. 1928 (F. B.) R. 200. Under this section the Sessions Judge had no power to order transportation for ten years. A. W. N. 1883, 225. In a second conviction, a Magistrate cannot lawfully pass a sentence of more than double the amount of punishment, which might be passed on a prisoner for a first conviction of theft. S. C. 79 Oudh. The summary procedure laid down in Chapter XXII, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, is not adapted to the trial of offences to which this section applies. L. B. R. (1872-1892) 386. A sentence of seven years' transportation on a fifth conviction for theft is not excessive. 4 U. B. R. (1892-1895) Vol. 1. 147. The evidence of previous conviction must be clear and precise. 14 W. R. For the application of this section, the previous conviction must be under the Code. 10 C. L. R. 392. The object of this section is to pass an additional sentence on the accused not a less severe sentence. 9 C. 877. This section does not authorize a Magistrate to pass a sentence beyond his jurisdiction. 6 M. H. C. R. App. 2.

GENERAL EXCEPTIONS.

General exceptions.—Where an accused person has raised pleas inconsistent with the defence which would bring his case within one of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, he cannot, in appeal, set up a case, upon the evidence taken at his trial, that his act came within such general exceptions. The circumstances which would bring the case of an accused person within any of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code can and may be proved from the evidence given for the prosecution or to be found elsewhere in the record. In the absence of such evidence, the Court is not competent to assume the existence of those circumstances, more particularly when the pleas taken are inconsistent with the assumption that such circumstances might have existed or that doubt may arise in consequence of such assumption and the accused ought to be given the benefit of the doubt. 7 A. L. J. 438=32 A. 451=11 Cr. L. J. 374=6 Ind. Cas. 589. Where a defamatory statement was made by a person as a witness in a case, but the person was not bound by law to go into the witness box and make it, this section did not apply. 18 A. L. J. 846.

Prince's case on mistake of facts.—The following rules were laid down in Prince's case (R v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. 154):—

(1) That when an act is in itself plainly criminal, and is more severely punishable if certain circumstances, co-exist,—ignorance of the existence of such circumstances is no answer to a charge for the aggravated offence.

(2) That where an act is prima facie innocent and proper, unless certain circumstances co-exist, then ignorance of such circumstances is an answer to the charge.

(3) That even in the last named cases, the state of the defendant's mind must amount to absolute ignorance of the existence of the circumstances which alters the character of the act, or to a belief in its non-existence.

(4) Where an act which is in itself wrong is, under certain circumstances, criminal; a person who does the wrong act cannot set up as a defence that he was ignorant of the facts which turned the wrong into a crime.—Vide Mayne's Criminal Laws, ss. 133—134.

Object of the Chapter.—“This chapter has been framed in order to obviate the necessity of repeating in every penal clause a considerable number of limitations. Some limitations relate only to a single provision or to a small class of provisions. Thus the exception in favour of true imputations on character (section 499) is an exception which belongs wholly to the law of defamation, and does not affect any other part of the code. The exception in favour of the conjugal rights of the husband (s. 376) is an exception which belongs wholly to the law of rape, and does not affect any other part of the code. Every such exception evidently ought to be appended to the rule which it is intended to modify.

“But there are other exceptions which are common to all the penal clauses of the code, or to a great variety of clauses dispersed over many chapters. Such are the exceptions in favour of infants, lunatics, idiots, persons under the influence of delirium; the exceptions in favour of acts done by the direction of the law, of acts done in the exercise of the right of self-defence, of acts done by the consent of the party harmed by them. It would obviously be inconvenient to repeat these exceptions several times in every page. We have, therefore, placed them in a separate chapter, and we have provided that every definition or penal provision shall be construed subject to the provisions contained in that chapter. Most of those exceptions appear to us to require no explanation or defence. But the meaning and the ground of the rules laid down in clause 88 and in the three following clauses may not be obvious at first sight. On these, therefore, we wish to make a few observations.

“We conceive the general rule to be, that nothing ought to be an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause to a person of ripe age who, undeceived, has given a free and intelligent consent to suffer that harm or to take the risk of that harm. The restrictions by which the rule is limited affect only cases where human life is concerned. Both the general rule and the restrictions may, we think, be easily indicated.” Note B.

“We propose (clauses 74 to 84) to except from the operation of the penal clauses of the Code large classes of acts done in good faith for the purpose of repelling unlawful aggressions. In this part of the chapter we have attempted to define, with as much exactness as the subject appears to us to admit, the limits of the right of private defence. It may be thought that we have allowed too great a latitude to the exercise of his right; and we ourselves are of opinion that if we had been framing laws for a bold and highspirited people, accustomed to take the law into their own hand, and to go beyond the line of moderation in repelling injury, it would have been fit to provide additional restrictions. In this country the danger is on the other side; the people are too little disposed to help themselves; the patience with which they submit to the cruel depredations of gang-robbers, and to trespass and mischief committed in the most outrageous manner by bands of ruffians, is one of the most remarkable, and at the same time one of the most discouraging symptoms which the state of society in India presents to us. Under these circumstances we are desirous rather to rouse and encourage a manly spirit among the people than to multiply restrictions on the exercise of the right of self-defence. We are of opinion that all the evil which is likely to arise from the execution of that right is far less serious than the evil which would arise from the execution of one person for over-stepping what might appear to the Courts to be the exact line of moderation in resisting body of dacoits." Note B.

76. Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is, or who by reason of a mistake of fact, and not by reason of a mistake of law, in good faith believes himself to be bound by law to do it.

ing himself bound by law.

Application.—In its application to Hill-tribes to which the Kochin Hill-tribes Regulation (1 of 1895) is applied, the Code is to be read as if the following additional section were inserted.—

"75 A. Notwithstanding anything in this Code, or in any other enactment for the time being in force, a person convicted of any offence punishable under this Code or under any other enactments shall be punishable with fine in lieu of, or in addition to, any other punishment to which he may be liable.

Scope.—"Ss. 76 & 79 relate to the case of person who are and who justifiably believe that they are acting in conformity with law. Where their acts are, on their face, legal, of course no further question can arise. But cases of considerable difficulty occur where persons act under superior, or even the highest authority, when the orders given to them are not in accordance with the usual working of the law. Such orders may be absolutely illegal, or they may be legalized by an emergency which sets aside the ordinary procedure applicable to similar cases, or they may be done by virtue of a power which stands above the law, and is exempt from its jurisdiction"—Mayne's Criminal Law. A police-officer, is liable to punishment for carrying out the illegal act under the orders of his superior officer. L. B. R. (1872-1892), 164. The rule as regards mistake of fact is thus stated by Stephen J. in Reg. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. at p. 188: "I think it may be laid down as a general rule, that an alleged offender is deemed to have acted under that state of facts which he in good faith, and on reasonable grounds, believed to exist when he did that act alleged to be an offence." 26 Bom. L. R. 138. A wrongful intent being the essence of every crime, it necessarily follows that whenever one without fault or carelessness is misled concerning facts and acts as he would be justified in doing were they what he believes them to be, he is legally innocent the same as he is innocent morally. The rule in morals is stated by Wayland to be that if a man "know not the relations in which he stands to others, and have not the means of knowing them, he is guiltless. If he knew them, or have the means of knowing them, and have not improved these means, he is guilty." Wayland, Moral Science, 81. The legal rule is enunciated by Baron Parke, as follows: "The guilt of the accused must depend on the circumstances as they appear to him." Reg. v. Thorburn, 1 Den. C. C. 387; Reg. v. Cohen, 8 Cox. C. C. 41; Bishops Cr. Law Vol. I. p. 205. See also 17 P. R. 1883 Cr. "So" says Mr. Kenny "our criminal law often allows mistake or ignorance to afford a good defence by showing, even where there has been an actus reum that no sufficient mens rea preceded it. But such a defence can only arise when three conditions are fulfilled :—(1) The first condition is that the mistake must be of such a character that, had the supposed circumstances been real, they would have prevented any guilt from attaching to the person in doing what he did..... (2) A further condition is that the mistake must be a reasonable one..... (3) The final condition is, that the mistake however reasonable, must not relate to matters of law but to matters of 'fact'. For a mistake of law even though inevitable, is not followed in England to afford any excuse for crime. Ignorantia juris neminem excusat." Outlines of Criminal Law pp 65—67. "At common law an honest and reasonable belief in the existence of facts, which, if true, would make the act for which the prisoner is indicated an innocent act has always been held a good defence"..... 77. Nothing is an offence which is done by a Judge when acting judicially in the exercise of any power which is, or which in good faith he believes to be, given to him by law.

Object.—"One who serves in a judicial capacity is required to exercise a judgment of his own and as his duty obliges him to decide all questions of law and fact which are submitted for his judgment he is not punishable for error or mistake whether of fact or law. This large exemption is conferred on him when acting judicially, not only in those cases in which he proceeds irregularly in the exercise of a power which the law gives to him but also in cases where he, in good faith exceeds his jurisdiction and has no lawful powers."—Morgan and Macpherson. In Kemp v. Neville, 10 C. B. N. S. p. 54 Earle C. J. observed : "The rule that a judicial officer cannot be sued for an adjudication, according to the best of his judgment, upon a matter within his jurisdiction, has been uniformly maintained." As regards their criminal liability Cockburn C. J. thus observed in Reg. v. Nelson, Cockburn pp. 124, 156: "When there is jurisdiction but the jurisdiction is exercised under a misapprehension, either with reference to a person not within it, or in excess of the power of the tribunal, in such cases the persons acting with judicial authority would not be criminally responsible." See also 2 M. I. A. 293; 4 M. I. A. 353; 14 B. L. R. 254, 257; Taxer v. Child, 7 E. & B. 377; R. v. Loggen, 1 Str. 74; Anderson v. Gorrie, (1895) 1 Q. B. 665. The very existence of the exceptions to s. 499 indicates that the provisions of s. 77 cannot by themselves cover the case of remarks made by a Judge or Magistrate in the course of his office, so as to exempt him from any liability of section 500. A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 123=17 N. L. J. 43=1934 Cr. C. 515=35 Cr. L. J. 947=30 N. L. R. 234=149 Ind. Cas. 140. Where an act is done by Magistrate in official capacity in performance of official duty even if he has exceeded his powers, complaint cannot be entertained without sanction of Local Government. A. I. 78. Nothing which is done in pursuance of, or which is warranted by the judgment or order of, a Court of Justice, if done whilst such judgment or order remains in force, is an offence, notwithstanding the Court may have had no jurisdiction to pass which judgment or order, provided the person doing the act in good faith believes that the Court had such jurisdiction.

Scope.—The protection given under this section to ministerial officers acting under the authority of a Court of Justice is in terms rather less than that which is given to them against civil suits by Act VII of 1850, and rather more than is given to the public generally by s. 79. Mayne's Criminal Law. Under this section where the Court had no jurisdiction to issue an order, it is necessary further to show that the officer acting upon the order in good faith believed that the Court had jurisdiction. On the other hand, this section goes beyond s. 79 since under the former section a mistake in law may be pleaded as justification while under the latter section the mistake must be one of fact. Practically the burden of proof thrown upon the ministerial officer will vary very much according to his position, and to the amount of care and knowledge which he is expected to exercise in that position. Every such officer will be held harmless, if he acts on a warrant which is valid on its face, and which is issued by a person who had jurisdiction to issue it. It is neither his right nor his duty to go behind the warrant. Herdson v. Preston, 21 Q. B. D. 362 cited in Mayne's Criminal Law § 150. This section does not extend to the oral order of a Judge. 4 L. B. R. 253=8 Cr. L. J. 68. Where a person exceeds the power given to him by the warrant he is liable. 7 B. H. C. R. 83; 12 W. R. 329; 8 B. H. C. R. (A.C.) 177.

79. Nothing is an offence which is done by any person who is justified by law, or who, by reason of a mistake of fact and not by reason of a mistake of law in good faith, believes himself to be justified by law, in doing it.

Illustration.

A sees Z commit what appears to A to be a murder. A, in the exercise, to the best of his judgment, exerted in good faith, of the power which the law gives to all persons of apprehending murderers in the act, seizes Z in order to bring Z before the proper authorities. A has committed no offence, though it may turn out that Z was acting in self-defence.

Scope.—The protection of this section is, it seems, given only where there is some law or colour of law to justify what is done; it extends not to things the doing of which, though not prohibited by any law, cannot be said to be justified—Morgan and Macpherson. Protection under s. 79 Penal Code, is protection against conviction while that under s. 132 Cr. Pro. Code is protection against trial. 143 Ind. Cas. 115=34 Cr. L. J. 528=1933 M. W. N. 1225=1933 Cr. When an act is prima facie innocent and proper, unless certain circumstances co-exist, then the ignorance of such circumstances is an answer to a criminal charge. 1 Weir 43.

Although ignorance of law does not excuse a person, who does an act, which is an offence irrespectively of any guilty knowledge on the part of the alleged offender yet when, to constitute the offence, it must be shown that there was a certain knowledge, the offence, is not committed by one, who acts without that knowledge and it is immaterial whether the absence of the knowledge required to constitute the offence proceeded from ignorance of law or ignorance of fact. For though ignorance of law is no ground of defence, it is evidence of mental condition. 1 Weir. 74. There is no justification within the meaning of s. 79 for a husband either under the Hindu law or Mahomedan law to use force or restraint to compel his wife to live with him in spite of the general English law and the provisions of the I. The law sets bounds to the extent to which human life might be endangered by mistakes arising from timidity so excessive as to become inexcusable when a little ordinary precaution would prevent such mistakes from arising. L. B. R. (1893—1900) 221. When a village Revenue Officer exercising powers of village Magistrate in the latter's absence, sentenced a woman to be imprisoned for five hours he was excused under this section. 1 Weir. 74.

A constable is justified in arresting a person if he entertains a bona fide belief that he is a thief. 12 B 377; see also 2 W. R. Cr. 9. So a person deputed by Court to arrest a judgment-debtor is not liable to be punished where he detained the closed palanquin of a purdah lady on the bona fide belief that the judgment-debtor is escaping by that palanquin. 24 C. 885=1 C. W. N. 665. By detention of suspended police-officer under illegal circular order of the Commissioner of Police no offence is committed. 47 C. 818.

When an arrest is made bona fide in pursuance of the power contemplated under s. 59 of the Cr. Pro. Code and the person assisting believes in good faith by reason of a mistake of fact that a non-bailable offence had been committed, this section is a complete answer to the charge. 5 P. L. Where a police constable acts under colour of his office there is no right of private defence against the arrest effected by him even though such arrest was not justified by law. 106 Ind. Cas. 581=29 Cr. L. J. 69.

Mistake of law—The plea or excuse of ignorance applies only to ignorance or mistake of facts, and not to error of law. Ignorance of the law is not allowed to excuse any one who is of age of discretion and compose mentes from its penalties when broken. On an indictment for a common nuisance by keeping a lottery house the jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy, on the ground that 'perhaps he did not know that he was acting contrary to law.' This was ruled to be a verdict for the Crown, for ignorance of a Statute is no excuse if the Statute is violated. R. v. Crawshaw, 30 L. J. M. C. 58, 64. One feels compelled, with the late Prof. Henry Sidgwick, to regard the rule as "not a realisation of ideal justice, but an exercise of society's right of self-preservation." Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 68.

80. Nothing is an offence which is done by accident or misfortune, and without any criminal intention or knowledge, in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner, by lawful means, and with proper care and caution.

Illustration.

A is at a work with a hatchet; the head flies off and kills a man who is standing by. Here, if there was no want of proper caution on the part of A, his act is excusable and not an offence.

Notes.—If the accused person puts forward a substantive defence of accident within the purview of this section, it is incumbent upon him to prove it. Where the evidence as to the deed is sufficiently convincing, it is immaterial to consider with what motive it was done, 19 C. W. N. 1043. Where a person has several intercourse with a girl of a little over twelve years of age, with her consent and thereby causes grievous hurt to her, he commits an offence under s. 325 I. P. Such sports and exercises as tend to give strength, activity and skill in the use of arms, and are entered into as private recreations amongst friends without any intention to cause bodily harm, such as playing at cudgels, or foils, or sparring with gloves (R. v. Young 10 Cox. 371), wrestling by consent, or foot ball (R. v. Bradshaw, 14 Cox 83 ; R. v. Moore, 14 T. L. R. 229), are deemed lawful ; and if either party happens accidentally to be killed in such sports, it is excusable homicide by misadventure. Fort 259, 260 ; 1 East. P. C. 268. Homicide by misadventure is where in doing a lawful act, without any intention of bodily harm and using proper precautions to prevent danger, one man unfortunately happens to kill another. The act must be lawful ; for if it is unlawful, the homicide will amount to murder, or man-slaughter, according to the attending circumstances, and it must not be done with intent to inflict great bodily harm ; for then the legality of the act, considered in the abstract, would be no more than a mere cloak, or pretence and consequently avail nothing. The act must also be done in a proper manner, and with a due caution to prevent danger. 1 East. P. C. 261. Russ. Cr. 808. Thus, if people, in following their common occupations, use due caution to prevent danger, and nevertheless happen, unfortunately, to kill any one, such killing is homicide by misadventure. Thus where a person driving a cart or other carriage, happens to drive over another and kill him, if the accident happen in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death, and the driver will be excused. Fori. 263 ; Russ. Cr. 808.

81. Nothing is an offence merely by reason of its being done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause harm, if it be done without any criminal intention to cause harm, and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property.

Explanation.—It is a question of fact in such a case whether the harm to be prevented or avoided was of such a nature and so imminent as to justify or excuse the risk of doing the act with the knowledge that it was likely to cause harm.

Illustrations.

(a) A, the captain of a steam-vessel, suddenly and without any fault or negligence on his part, finds himself in such a position that before he can stop his vessel, he must inevitably run down a boat, B, with 20 or 30 passengers on board, unless he changes the course of his vessel, and that, by changing his course, he must incur risk of running down a boat, C, with only two passengers on board, which he may possibly clear. Here, if A alters his course without any intention to run down the boat C, and in good faith for the purpose of avoiding the danger to the passengers in the boat B, he is not guilty of an offence, though he may run down the boat C by doing an act which he knew was likely to cause that effect, if it be found as a matter of fact that danger which he intended to avoid was such as to excuse him in incurring the risk of running down C.

(b) A in a great fire pulls down houses in order to prevent the conflagration from spreading. He does this with the intention in good faith, of saving human life or property. Here, if it be found that the harm to be prevented was of such a nature and so imminent as to excuse A's act, A is not guilty of the offence.

Principle—This section is intended to give legislative sanction to the principle that, where, on a sudden and extreme emergency, one or other of two evils is inevitable, it is lawful so to direct events that the smaller only shall occur.—Mayne's Criminal Law.

Scope—This section applies only to acts done without any criminal intention to cause harm. 5 B. H. C. R. Cr. 59. An act done for the prevention of greater harm falls under this section. 17 B. 626. Inoculation is not an offence in itself, though s. 6 of the Vaccination Act prohibits the practice within the areas to which the Act is extended. Being really practised as a remedial measure, this section will apply. L. B. R. (1893—1900) 45. The rule of English Common Law that it is open to a private citizen to arrest any person who is reasonably apprehended to commit a breach of the peace is not applicable to India. 45 M. 605=44 M. L. J. 655=17 L. W. 592=73 Ind. Cas. 343=24 Cr. L. J. 599=1923 Mad. 523 (F. B.) overruling, 44 M. 913.

Criminal intention.—In Queen v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. 168 Will. J. said : "It is, however, undoubtedly a principle of English Criminal Law, that, ordinarily speaking, a crime is not committed if the mind of the person doing the act in question be innocent." "It is a principle of natural justice and of our laws," says Lord Kenyon C. J., "that actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea." The intent, and act must both concur to constitute the crime. Fowler v. Paget, 7 T. R. 509, 514. The guilty intent is not necessarily that of intending the very act or thing done and prohibited by common or statute law, but it must at least be the intention to do something wrong. That intention may belong to one or other of two classes. It may be to do a thing wrong in itself and apart from positive law, or it may be to do a thing merely prohibited by statute or by common law, or both elements of intention may co-exist with respect to the same deed. There are many things prohibited by no statute—fornication or seduction, for instance—which nevertheless no one would hesitate to call wrong ; and the intention to do an act wrong in this sense at the least must as a general rule exist before the act done can be considered as a crime. Knowingly and intentionally to break a statute must, I think, from the judicial point of view, always be morally wrong in the absence of special circumstances applicable to the particular instance and excusing the breach of the law, as for instance, if a municipal regulation be broken to save life or to put out a fire. But to make it morally right some such special matter of excuse must exist, inasmuch as the administration of justice and, indeed the foundations of civil society rest upon the principle that obedience to the law, whether it be a law approved of or disapproved of by the individual, is the first duty of a citizen. Although prima facie and as a general rule there must be a mind at fault before there can be a crime, it is not an inflexible rule, and a statute may relate to such a subject matter and may be so framed as to make an act criminal whether there has been any intention to break the law or otherwise to do wrong or not."

"In all ordinary crimes" says Mr. Kenny "the psychological element which is thus indispensable may be fairly and accurately summed up as consisting simply in 'intending to do what you know to be criminal' Outlines of Criminal Law p. 41. In Reg. v. Prince, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154, Lord Esher M. R. held that to constitute criminal mens rea there must always be an intent to commit some criminal offence. In that case, Denman J. was clearly of opinion that an intention to do anything that was legally wrong at all, even though it were no crime but only a tort, would be a sufficient mens rea. And seven other Judges, including Bramwell B. appear to have gone still farther, and taken a third view, according to which there is a sufficient mens rea wherever there is one intention to do anything that is morally wrong, even though it be quite innocent legally. If this last opinion be correct the rule as to mens rea will simply be that any man who does any act which he knows to be immoral must take the risk of its turning out, in fact, to be also criminal. But such a doctrine (even if it be right to construe the language of these seven Judges as maintaining it) must be considered highly questionable in view of the observations of Cave J. in Reg. v. Tolson, 23 Q. B. D. at p. 182 and of the express decision in Reg. v. Hibbert, L. R. I. C. C. R. 184 which none of the Judges who decided Reg. v. Prince, supra seem to have wished to overrule. A further argument against holding the intention of doing a merely moral wrong to be a sufficient mens rea is that in Mac Naughtens' Case, 10 Cl. & F. 200, the Judges, in defining the mens rea required insane criminals, were careful to speak only of "knowing that his act was contrary to the law of the land." Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 42.

In Toppen v. Morcus, (1908) 2 Ir. Rep. 423, 425, Palles C. B. adopting in substance the opinion of Wright J. in Sherros v. v. de Ret Zen, (1895) 1 Q. B. 918, 921, said : "There is a presumption that mens rea, a knowledge of the facts which render the act unlawful, is an essential ingredient, in every criminal offence. That presumption is however liable to be displaced by the words of the statute creating the offence or the subject matter with which it deals, and both must be considered."

82. Nothing is an offence which is done by a child under seven years of age.

Notes.—The presumption of English Law against the possibility of the offence of rape by a boy under 14 does not apply to India and the question is one of fact only. 13 A. L. J. 254=37 A. 197=16 Cr. L. J. 372=28 Ind. Cas. 658. Where the accused is under seven years of age, he cannot be prosecuted. 22 W. R. 27. But receiving stolen property from such a child is an offence, 1 Weir 470.

"Under the law of England a child under seven years of age cannot be guilty of any criminal offence, whatever evidence may be available of his possessing a mischievous discretion; for ex præsumptione juris he 'has not discretion and understanding' (Reniger v. Fogossa, Plowd. 1, 19); and the presumption cannot be rebutted. 1 Hale, 27, 28. In consequence of this rule it has been held illegal to arrest a child under seven found stealing wood. Marsh v. Loader, 14 C. B. N. S. 535." Russ. Cr. 58. Beyond the provisions of ss. 82 and 83 the Penal Code does not say anything about there being any age limit for capital sentence. 1930 M. W. N. 681=32 M. L. W. 220=129 Ind. Cas. 228.

83. Nothing is an offence which is done by a child above seven years of age and under twelve, who has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct on that occasion.

Scope.—In construing this section, the capacity of doing what is wrong is not so much to be measured by years, as by the strength of the offender's understanding and judgment; such a degree of malice may be disclosed by the circumstances of a case as to justify the application of the maximum malitia supplet aetatem 1 W. R. Cr. 43.

Consequences of his conduct.—"The consequences of his conduct" referred to in the section, are not the penal consequences to the offender, but the natural consequences which flow from voluntary act. 22 W. R. Cr. 27. Where an accused person is under twelve years, the Magistrate should, under this section, find that the accused has attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his act. 27 C. 133. Under the section a child between seven and twelve years of age cannot be held guilty of an offence with respect to any act unless it is shown that the child had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of that act 5 M. L. T. 296. A child under 10 years of age was acquitted when charged with an offence of bigamy. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 876=Cr. Rg. 55 of 1896. The presumption of English Law, against the possibility of the offence of rape by a boy under 14 does not apply to India and the question is one of fact only. 13 A. L. J. 254=37 A. 178=16 Cr. L. J. 322=28 Ind. Cas. 658. The conviction of a person charged with receiving stolen property is not bad on the ground that the child who sold the property was under twelve years of age. 6 M. 373=7 Ind. Jur. 304. A boy of 12 can be convicted for an attempt to commit rape, 11 Bur. L. V. 135.

If a child commits an offence when he is unable to understand the nature of the offence it can hardly be supposed that he will be able to understand that he must plead his own lack of understanding when placed upon his trial. He cannot be debarred from the defence allowed him by this section merely because of his ignorance of Court procedure. 10 O. & A. L. R. 788. A person who is not under 12 years of age cannot come under this section even if it is proved that he was not of sufficiently mature mind. 10 Lah. L. J. 463=113 Ind. Cas. 11=30 Cr. L. J. 65=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 64.

English Law—A child of seven and under fourteen is presumed to be incapable of criminal intent (doli incapax); but the presumption may be rebutted, and weakens with the advance of child's years towards fourteen, and the particular facts and circumstances attending the doing of the act and manifesting the extent of the understanding and disposition of the child. The evidence of criminal capacity which is allowed to displace the presumption (expressed in the phrase malitia supplet aetatem) should be strong and clear beyond all doubt and contradiction. R. Vamplew, 3 F. & F. 520; Russ. Cr. 59.

I. P. Code—8

84. Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law.

Principle—Since a criminal intent is an indispensable element in every crime, a person incapable of entertaining such intent cannot incur legal guilt."—Bishop's Cr. Law § 375.

Unsoundness of mind.—This section requires that the unsoundness of mind, in order to be valid ground of non-liability, must be such as would make the accused incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is contrary to law. And it is for the defence to make out this ground of non-liability. 22 C. 817. See also 26 M. L. T. 361; 3 W. R. 9; 29 Cr. L. J. 204; 29 Cr. L. J. 827; 33 C. W. N. 136. The nature and extent of the unsoundness of mind must be such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. 23 C. 604. Mere fact that accused's mind is partially deranged or that he is subject to some uncontrollable impulse due to insanity would not do. So long as he is not insane as to make it impossible for him to know nature of act or to realize that his act is wrongful or contrary to law, he would be guilty of offence committed by him. A. I. A person who though of unsound mind, knows that in killing another he is committing a wrongful act is not entitled to the benefit of this section 3 A. L. J. 463. The provisions of this section which are in substance the same as those laid down in the answers of the Judges to the questions put to them by the House of Lords in MacNaughten's Case, show that it is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cogitative faculty of the mind that can form a ground of exception from criminal responsibility, the nature and extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. A person subject to insane impulses is not entitled to exemption from criminal liability if his cogitative faculties are left unimpaired. 23 C. 604; see also 23 C. W. N. 621=29 C. L. J. 209; 32 Ind. Cas. 671; 48 I. Only insanity of a particular and appropriate kind will produce any exemptive effect. For lunatics are usually capable of being influenced by ordinary motives, such as the prospect of punishment; they usually plan their crimes with care, and take means to avoid detection.' Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 51. The nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind must be such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. M' Naughten's Case. In Reg v. Daniel M' Naughten, 10 Cl. & F. 200, Tindal, C. J. told the jury that the question to be determined was whether at the time the act in question was committed the prisoner had or had not the use of his understanding, so as to know that he was doing a wrong or wicked act. The verdict of the jury was 'Not guilty' on the ground of insanity. This verdict, and the question of the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind which would excuse the commission of a crime, attracted great attention throughout England and became the subject of a debate in the House of Lords. The House determined to take the opinion of the Judges on the law. Accordingly, on June 19, 1843, all the Judges attended the House of Lords; when (no argument having been made) the following questions of law were propounded to them:—

"1st—What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons; as, for instance, where at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?

"2nd—What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury when a person alleged to be afflicted with an insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime (murder, for example), and insanity is set up as a defence?

"3rd—In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time upon the act was committed?

"4th—If a person under an insane delusion as to the existing facts commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?

"5th—Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of all the witness, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time?"

Lord Chief Justice Tindal, in answering the opinion of the Judges said: "My Lords, Her Majesty's Judges with the exception of Mr. Justice Maule, who has stated his opinion to your lordships, in answering the questions proposed to them by your lordships House, think it right in the first place, to state that they have forborne entering into any particular discussion upon these questions, from the extreme and almost insuperable difficulty of applying those answers to cases in which the facts are brought judicially before them. The facts of each particular case must of necessity present themselves with endless variety, and with every shade of difference in each case. As it is their duty to declare the law upon each particular case on facts proved before them, and after hearing argument of counsel thereon, they deem it at once impracticable, and at the same time dangerous to the administration of justice if it were practicable, to make minute applications of the principles involved in the answers given by them to your lordship's questions.

"1. In answering to the first question, assuming that your lordships' inquiries are confined to those persons who labour under such partial delusions only, and are not in other respect insane, we are of opinion that (notwithstanding the party accused did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit) he is nevertheless punishable, according to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew, at the time of committing such crime, that he was acting contrary to law; by which expression we understand your lordships to mean the law of the land.

"2&3. As the second and third questions appear to us to be more conveniently answered together, we have to submit our opinion to be, that the jury ought to be told in all cases that every man is to be presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction, and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from the disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he knew it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. The mode of putting the latter part of the question to the jury on these occasions has generally been, whether the accused at the time of doing the act knew the difference between right and wrong; which mode, though rarely, if ever leading to any mistake with the jury, is not as we conceive, so accurate when put generally and in the abstract, as when put with reference to the party's knowledge of right and wrong in respect to the very act with which he is charged. If the questions were to be put as to the knowledge of the accused, solely and exclusively with reference to the law of the land, it might tend to confound the jury, by inducing them to believe that an actual knowledge of the law of the land was essential in order to lead to a conviction, whereas the law is administered upon the principle that every one must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if the act was the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable. The usual course, therefore, has been to leave the question to the jury, whether the party accused had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong; and this course we think is correct, accompanied with such observations and explanations as the circumstances of each particular case may require.

"4. To the 4th question the answer must of course depend, on the nature of the delusion, but, making the same assumption as we did before, namely, that he labours under such partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane, we think he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. For example, if, under the influence of his delusion, he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away his life, and he kills that man, as he supposes in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for some supposed injuries, he would be liable to punishment.

"5. In answer to the 5th question, we state to your lordships, that we think the medical man, under the circumstances supposed, cannot in strictness be asked his opinion in the terms above stated; because each of those questions involves the determination of the truth of the facts deposed to which it is for the jury to decide, and the questions are not mere questions upon a matter of science, in which case such evidence is admissible. But where the facts are admitted, or not disputed, and the question become substantially one of science only it may be convenient to allow the question to be put in the general form; though the same cannot be insisted on as a matter of right."

Maule J. in answering the question said: "To render a person irresponsible for crime on account of unsoundness of mind the unsoundness should, according to the law as it has been long understood and held, be such as to render him incapable of knowing right from wrong."

To the second question the learned Judge answered. "If on a trial such as is suggested in the question the Judge should have occasion to state what kind and degree of insanity would amount to a defence, it should be stated conformably to what I have mentioned in my answer to the first question as being, in my opinion the law on the subject". See also R. v. Higginson, 1 C. & K. 129; R. v. Burton, 3 Cox. 275; R. v. Burton 3 F. & F. 772; R. v. Towley, 3 F. & F. 389.

English cases. In Earl Ferrer's Case, 19 St. Tr. 886, 947, it was urged successfully by the prosecution, that complete possession of reason was unnecessary to warrant the judgment of the law, and that it was sufficient if the party had such possession of reason as enabled him to comprehend the nature of his actions, and discriminate between moral good and evil. In Arnold's Case, Tracey J. told the jury that where a person has committed a great offence, the exemption of insanity must be every clearly made out before it is allowed; that where a man is totally deprived of his understanding and memory, and does not know what he is doing, any more than an infant, or a wild beast, he will properly be exempted from the punishment of the law. See also Parke's Case, 1 Collin 477; Bowler's Case 1 Coll. 673 (n). In order to support such a defence it ought to be proved by the most distinct and unquestionable evidence that the prisoner was incapable of judging between right and wrong. Bellingham's Case, Russ. Cr. 65. In R. v. Oxford, 5 C. & P. 168, Lord Lyndhurst C. B. told the jury that 'they must be satisfied, before they could acquit the prisoner on the ground of insanity, that he did not know, when he committed the act, what the effect of it, if fatal, would be, with reference to the crime of murder. The question was, did he know that he was committing an offence against the laws of God and nature.' See also R. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 532. "If a prisoner seeks to excuse himself upon the plea of insanity, it is for him to make it clear that he was insane at time of committing the offence charged. The onus rests on him; and the jury must be satisfied that he actually was insane. If the matter be left in doubt, it will be their duty to convict him; for every man must be presumed to be responsible for his acts till the contrary is clearly shown." Per Rolfe B. in R. v. Stokes, F. 3 C. & K. 185.

In R. v. Haynes 1 F & F. 666, Bramwell B. said: "It has been urged that you should acquit the prisoner on the ground that, it being impossible to assign any motive for the preparation of the offence, he must have been acting under what is called a powerful and irresistible influence, or homicidal tendency. But the circumstances of an act being apparently motiveless, is not a ground from which you can safely infer the existence of such an influence. Motive exists unknown and innumerable which might prompt the act. A morbid and restless, but resistible thirst for blood, would itself be a motive urging to such a deed for its own relief. But if an influence be so powerful as to be termed irresistible, so much the more reason is there why we should not withdraw any of the safe-guards tending to counteract it. There are three powerful restraints existing, all, tending to the assistance of the person who is suffering under such an influence,—the restraint of religion, the restraint of conscience, and the restraint of law. But if the influence itself be held as a legal excuse, rendering the crime dispunishable, you at once withdraw a most powerful restraint—that forbidding and punishing its preparation. We must therefore return to the simple question you have to determine—did the prisoner know the nature of the act he was doing, and did he know that he was doing what was wrong". See also R. v. Layton, 4 Cox, 149. But Sir James Stephen, supports the view that an insane impulse should be admitted as a defence if really irresistible because then the act would not be voluntary act at all. See also per Denman C. J. Reg. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525. In the United States both the Supreme Court and the Courts of almost all the States recognise irresistible impulse as being a sufficient defence, even when accompanied by a knowledge that the act was wrong. Kenny Outlines, of Cr. Law, 56; Life v. Terry, 15 Wall. 580. The American Law on the subject is thus stated by Bishop: "The medical writers are in substantial accord on the further proposition and the mental and physical machine may slip the control of its owner; so that a man may be conscious of what he is doing, and of its criminal character and consequences while impelled to it by a power to him irresistible. Whether or not this is so must, in the nature of things, be a pure question of fact, not of law." Bishop's Cr. Law § 387.

85. Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, is by reason of doing it, is by reason of intoxication, incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong, or contrary to law: provided that the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge or against his will.

Principle.—Drunkenness is described by by Coke and Hale as clementia affecta or acquired madness—Russ. Cr. 87.

Scope.—Where the acts proved are themselves sufficient to establish the offence, relieving the prosecution of the responsibility of proving intention, proof of motive is not called for. But where there are circumstances which have any bearing on the degree of the criminality involved, it is certainly the duty of the prosecution to bring them forward, whether they tell for or against the accused. Voluntary drunkenness is never an excuse for crime. The fact that a man was drunk makes no difference per se to the question of his criminal liability. Involuntary drunkenness, as a ground of exemption, is ground treated in just the same way as insanity under section 84. Therefore it would be no ground of excuse for crime to plead merely that the accused was involuntarily drunk. It must be shown that he was so drunk and that he did not know (1) the nature of the act or (2) that it was wrong or (3) that it was contrary to law. But though neither voluntary drunkenness nor involuntary drunkenness nor which does not involve one or other of the three states of mind mentioned in this section, is an excuse for crimes committed under its influence, yet the fact of drunkenness may alter the nature of the legal offence committed though it is no excuse for the act. This occurs when the essential of the crime is the presence of some particular knowledge of intention. Intention is sometimes a presumption of law; sometimes it is a mere fact to be proved like any other fact. 7 N. L. R. 180=13 Ind. Cas. 919. Evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his act. 30 P. L. R. 357=116 Ind. Cas. 707=30 Cr. L. J. 662= A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 637; see also 29 Cr. L. J. 63=A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 196. Where an act done is not an offence unless done with a particular intention, it is permissible to consider voluntary drunkenness in determining whether the accused had that intention. 11 Cr. L. J. 659. But in the other cases voluntary drunkenness is no reason for not inflicting maximum sentence. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 428=7 Lah. 141=27 P. L. R. 332=27 Cr. L. J. 764=95 Ind. Cas. 284. Evidence merely establishing that the accused was a drunkard is not sufficient. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 232=7 Lah. 500=27 P. L. R. 294=27 Cr. L. J. 630=94 Ind. Cas. 406. For drunkenness to operate as a ground of immunity, the accused's mind should be so much affected by the drink that he must be incapable of understanding what he was doing. 8 Bur. L. T. 220=17 Cr. L. J. 49=8 L. B. R. 306 (F. B.)=32 Ind. Cas. 641; see also 27 C. W. N. 290=39 C. L. J. 34 (where lesser sentence was given).

Incapable of knowing the nature of the act.—Drunkenness is a defence when it amounts to unsoundness of mind. Although drunkenness is no excuse for any crime whatever, yet it is often of very great importance in cases where it is question of intention R. v. Cruse, 8 C & P. 541, 546; R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox. 306. But even in such cases the intoxication must be such as to prevent his restraining himself from committing the act in question, or to take away from him the power of forming any specific intention. R. v. Monkhouse, 4, Cox. 55; R. v. Moore, 3C. & K. 319; R. v. Doody, 6 Cox. 463. An accused is liable for criminal act, where drunkenness is not sufficient to incapacitate accused from forming intent necessary to constitute crime. A. I. R. 1930 P. 108.

Without knowledge or against his will.—The older authorities lay it down as a general rule that voluntary drunkenness does not take away responsibility for any crime. [R. v. Meade (1209) 1 K. B. 895; Co. Litt. 247; 1 Hale, 32] and must be considered rather an aggravation than a defence. Co. Litt. 247; Beairley's Case 4 Co. Rep. 125. In Reniger v. Fogossa, 1 Plowd. 1, 19, it is said, if a person that is drunk kills another this shall be felony, and he shall be hanged for it, and yet he did it through ignorance, for when he was drunk he had no understanding or memory; but inasmuch as that ignorance was occasioned by his own act and folly, and he might have avoided it, he shall not be privileged." Russ Cr. s. 7.

86. In cases where an act done is not an offence unless done with a particular knowledge, or intent, a person who does that act in a state of intoxication shall be liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated, unless the thing which intoxicated him, was administered to him without his knowledge, or against his will.

Scope.—In most cases, intention has to be inferred from the nature of the acts done and from all the circumstances of the case. If a drunkard, by reason of his drunkenness, does not know the nature of his act, he cannot be presumed to have intended the consequences of that act. Therefore in cases where an act is not an offence at all unless it is done intentionally, drunkenness is an excuse. A drunkard is often fully conscious of what he is doing and what are the natural consequences of his acts. If he fails to prove that owing to his intoxication, he had not the same knowledge in relation to the offence as he would have had if sober, then s. 86 will not apply at all and an intention will be presumed or not, just as it would be in the case of a sober man. 17 Ind. Cas. 800. This section creates an artificial rule for the effect of evidence and the significance of facts. The section must be read as it is and should be construed strictly. 30 Ind. Cas. 451. This section does not establish any presumption of law relating directly to intention, but it binds the Court to treat the accused as having the same knowledge as he would have had, if he had been sober, and intention on this case is an inference from knowledge. 4 L. B. R. 406=9 Cr. L. J. 5. No further intention than what can be ascribed to a sober man can be ascribed to a drunkard. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 433=11 L. L. J. 44=31 Cr. L. J. 44=120 Ind. Cas. 183. Cases where intent has to be found as a fact, voluntary drunkenness may be relied on to show that intent is absent. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 196=27 M. L. W. 77=29 Cr. L. J. 68=55 M. L. J. 221=106 Ind. Cas. 559; but see 12 Rang. 445=152 Ind. Cas. 1054=1934 Cr. C. 1326=A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 361. Drunkenness where not available as a defence can be pleaded in mitigation of sentence. 28 P. R. 1917=18 Cr. L. J. 868=41 Ind. Cas. 980. This section deals with question of knowledge of the accused and leaves open the question of his intention. 1931 M. W. N. 113. This section makes it clear that ordinary drunkenness makes no difference to the knowledge with which a man is credited. If the accused knew what the natural consequences of his act were, he must be presumed to have intended to cause them. Per Ayling, in 38 M. 479=30 Ind. Cas. 451=16 Cr. L. J. 627; 8 Pat. 911. It is true that s. 86 lays down that in certain cases an intoxicated person shall be liable to be dealt with "as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated." But it does not provide that the intoxicated person shall be dealt with as if he had the same intent. 33 M. 479=30 Ind. Cas. 451=16 Cr. L. J. 627, per Tyabji J. This section gives the drunken man that knowledge of the sober man when judging of his action; but does not give him that intention; it does not render him liable to be dealt with as if he had the same intent. 6 L. B. R. 100=5 Bur. L. T. 193=17 Ind. Cas. 800=13 Cr. L. J. 864 (F. B.); see also U. B. R. (1910) 2nd Qr. 77.

Although drunkenness by itself does not excuse the commission of an offence, this along with other circumstances can well be taken into account in considering the nature of the penalty to be inflicted. 8 Pat. 911.

Cases requiring a specific intent—It is plain that when the law requires a specific intent in distinction from general malevolence to render one guilty, the intent to drink followed by intoxication cannot stand in the stead of this intent. Reg. v. Monkhouse, 3 Cox. C. C. 55. Evidence of intoxication there is admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the mind of the accused, to determine whether he was incapable of entertaining the specific intent charged, where such intent, under the law, is an essential ingredient of the particular crime alleged to have been committed. Bishop's Criminal Law § 408. Where the very nature and essence of the crime is made to depend upon the condition of mind at the time, the fact of intoxication is a proper subject of consideration in the determination of the question whether a particular crime has been committed. There is a plain distinction between cases where the act done constitutes the offence and cases where an evil intent must be combined with the act. In cases where the intent or purpose of the party is a necessary element of the crime it may be shown that intoxication has so affected the physical and mental condition of the defendant as to preclude the formation of a criminal intent. This applies even to drugs. A person rendered insane from the voluntary recent use of cocaine and morphine who on that account does not understand the nature and quality of his act and is incapable of forming an intent cannot be guilty of assault with intent to commit murder. Complete deprivation of reason by intoxication eliminates the essential element of specific intent, when such intent is essential. Bishop's Cr. Law § 408.

Involuntary drunkenness.—If a person, by the unskilfulness of his physician, or by the contrivance of the enemies, eat or drink such a thing as causes frenzy, this puts him in the same condition with any other frenzy, and equally excuses him. 1 Hale. 22. The law deems it wrong for a man to cloud his mind or excite it to evil by the use of intoxicating drinks; and one who does this, then, moved by the liquor while too drunk to know what he is about, performs what is ordinarily criminal subjects himself to punishment; for the wrongful intent to drink coalesces with the wrongful act done while drunk, and makes the offence complete. The exception is that if the offence is of a sort constituted only where there is a particular intent, and the accused person did not intend it until he became too drunk to entertain the intent, it is not committed simply by the formal doing where the special purpose is wanting. Bishop's Criminal Law § 398.

Intoxication if ground of leniency.—Insanity is no excuse for the commission of a crime but may be in some cases be taken into consideration when awarding punishment for a crime committed in a state of drunkenness. 1923 Lah. 294.

87. Nothing which is not intended to cause death or grievous hurt, and which is not known by the doer to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, to any person, above eighteen years of age, who has given consent, whether express, or implied, to suffer that harm; or by reason of any harm which it may be known by the doer to be likely to cause to any such person who has consented to take the risk of that harm.

Illustration.

A and Z agree to fence with each other for amusement: This agreement implies the consent of each to suffer any harm which, in the course of such fencing, may be caused without foul play; and if A, while playing fairly, hurts Z, A commits no offence.

Principle.—"Another class of cases of misadventure, of still greater practical importance, are those where death is accidentally caused in the course of some lawful game or sport.....At the present day, all such exercises with naked swords would be illegal however licensed. But ordinary fencing, and, similarly, boxing, wrestling, football, and the like, are lawful games if carried on with due care. Every one who takes part in them gives, by so doing, his implied consent to the infliction upon himself of a certain (though a limited) amount of bodily harm. But no one has the right to consent to the infliction upon himself of a certain (though a limited) amount of bodily harm. But no one has the right to consent to the infliction upon himself of an excessive degree of bodily harm, such harm as amounts to 'maiming' him, and thus his agreement to play a game under dangerously illegal rules will, if he be killed in the course of the game, afford no legal excuse to the killer." Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law P. 110.

Object.—"Generally speaking, every man is free to inflict any suffering or damage he chooses on his own person and property ; and if instead of doing this himself, he consents to its being done by another, the doer commits no offence. A man may give away his property, and so another, who takes it by his permission does not commit theft. He may inflict self-torture or he may consent to suffer torture at the hands of another. But the law, as declared by this exception does not permit him to give his consent to any thing intended, or known to be likely, to cause his own death or grievous hurt"—Morgan and Macpherson. When death is caused under misconception of fact, but where no intention or knowledge of the accused was proved, the case is governed by ss. 87 and 90. 16 Cr. L. J. 581=30 Ind. Cas. 133 ; see also U. B. R. (1892—1901) Vol. 1, 298.

Cause death or grievous hurt.—Criminal responsibility for the use of any means intended to cause death nor to the doing of any act which is in itself an offence against the law, is not removed by the consent of the person on whom they are used, to the use of the means. The same rule applies as to the use of force likely to cause death or grievous hurt, if used with knowledge of the consequences likely to ensue and with indifference and recklessness as to whether death or serious injury would ensue. Russ. Cr. 886. In 1 East. P. C. 269, it is said : "In cases of friendly contests with weapons, which though not of a deadly nature may breed danger there should be due warning given that each party may start upon equal terms. For if two were engaged to play at cudgels and the one made a blow at the other likely to hurt before he was on his guard and without warning and death ensued, the want of due and friendly warning would make such an act amount to manslaughter." Ibid ; see also Ex parte Barronet, 1 E & B. 1 ; Dears 51.

88. Nothing which is not intended to cause death, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, or be known by the doer to be likely to cause, to any person for whose benefit it is done in good faith, and who has given a consent, whether express or implied, to suffer that harm, or to take the risk of that harm.

Illustration.

A, a surgeon, knowing that a particular operation is likely to cause the death of Z, who suffers under a painful complaint, but not intending to cause Z's death and intending, in good faith, Z's benefit, performs that operation on Z with Z's consent. A has committed no offence.

Principle.—"The reason on which the general rule which we have mentioned rests is this, that it is impossible to restrain men of mature age and sound understanding from destroying their own property, their own health, their own comfort, without restraining them from an infinite number of salutary or innocent actions. It is by no means true that men always judge rightly of their own interests. But it is true that in the vast majority of cases, they judge better of their own interest than any lawgiver, or any tribunal, which must necessarily proceed on general principles and which cannot have within its contemplation—the circumstances of particular cases and the tempers of particular individuals, can judge for them." Note B.

Scope.—No consent can justify an intentional causing of death. But a person for whose benefit a thing is done, may consent that another shall do that thing even if death may probably ensue. It is often the wisest thing that a man can do to expose his life to great hazard. It is often the greatest service that can be rendered to him to do what may probably cause his death. He may labour under a cruel and wasting malady which is certain to shorten his life, and which renders his life, while it lasts, useless to others and a torment to himself. Suppose that under these circumstances he gives his free and intelligent consent to take the risk of an operation which in a large proportion of cases has proved fatal but which is the only method by which his disease can possibly be cured, and which if it succeeds, will restore him to health and vigour ; the person, who with due care and skill, performs the operation, commits no offence. Again, if a person attacked by a wild beast should call out to his friends to fire, though with imminent hazard to himself, and they were to obey the call they would commit no offence though by firing they might cause death, and though when they fired they knew themselves to be likely to cause his death.—Morgan and Macpherson. p. 66.

Benefit.—Pecuniary benefit is not the benefit within the meaning of this section (vide s. 92 expl). Hence dangerous exhibitions are not protected by it. Nor are mutilations permissible which are consented to for some indirect motive, such as making the sufferer an object of charity or prevent enlistment as a soldier, or for the purpose of procuring a discharge.—Mayne's Criminal Law, 432.

Cases.—Where a person has several intercourse with a girl of a little over twelve years of age, with her consent and thereby causes grievous hurt to her, he commits an offence under s. 325 I. P. C. and is not protected by s. 80 or s. 88. 12 P. C. L. R. 4. A Kabiraj who had training in surgery cannot be exempted under this section, for causing the death of a patient by surgical operation. 14 C. 566 ; see also 5 W. R. Cr. 7. But where the operation is done in accordance with recognized Indian method, he is protected under this section. 28 A. W. N. 91=5 A. L. J. Cr. 155.

89. Nothing which is done in good faith for the benefit of a person under twelve years of age, or of unsound mind, by or by consent, either express or implied, of the guardian or other person having lawful charge of that person, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause or be known by the doer to be likely to cause, to that person :

Provisos.

Provided—

First.—That this exception shall not extend to the intentional causing of death, or to the attempting to cause death ;

Secondly.—That this exception shall not extend to the doing of any thing which the person doing it knows to be likely to cause death, for any purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity ;

Thirdly.—That this exception shall not extend to the voluntary causing of grievous hurt, or to the attempting to cause grievous hurt, unless it be for the purpose of preventing death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity ;

Fourthly.—That this exception shall not extend to the abetment of any offence, to the committing of which offence it would not extend.

Illustration.

A, in good faith, for his child's benefit without his child's consent, has his child cut for the stone by a surgeon, knowing it to be likely that the operation will cause the child's death, but not intending to cause the child's death. A is within the exception, inasmuch as his object was the cure of the child.

Principle.—"We have now explained the provisions contained in clauses 69 and 70. The cases to which the two next clauses relate bear a close affinity to those which we have just considered. A lunatic may be in a state which makes it proper that he should be put into a strait waist coat. A child may meet with an accident which may render the amputation of a limb necessary. But to put a strait waist coat on a man without his consent is, under our definition, to commit an assault. To amputate a limb, is by our definition, voluntarily to cause grievous hurt, and, as sharp instruments are used, is a very highly penal offence. We have therefore provided, by clause 71, that the consent of the guardian of a sufferer who is an infant or who is of unsound mind, shall, to a great extent, have the effect which the consent of the sufferer himself would have, if the sufferer were of ripe age and sound mind. That there should be some provision of this sort is evidently necessary. On the other hand, we feel that there is considerable danger in allowing people to assume the office of judging for others in such cases. Every man always intends in good faith his own benefit, and has a deeper interest in knowing what is for his benefit than any body else can have. That he gives free and intelligent consent to suffer pain or loss creates a strong presumption that it is good for him on the whole to suffer that pain or loss. But we cannot safely confide to him the interest of his neighbours in the same unreserved manner in which we confide to him his own, even when he sincerely intends to benefit his neighbours. Even parents have been known to deliver their children up to slavery in a foreign country to inflict the most cruel mutilations on their male children, to sacrifice the chastities of their female children, and to do all this declaring, and perhaps with truth, that their object was something which they considered as advantageous to the children. We have therefore not thought it sufficient to require that on such occasion the guardian should act in good faith for the benefit of the ward. We have imposed several additional restrictions which, we conceive, carry their defence with them"—Note B.

Scope.—This section provides that the consent of the guardian shall to a great extent, have the effect which the consent of the sufferer himself would have, if the sufferer were of ripe age and sound mind. But because there is considerable danger in allowing people to assume the office of judging for others in such cases, some restrictions are imposed on the guardian's power to consent besides the requisites of good faith and benefit to the sufferer. Every man always intends in good faith his own benefit and has a deeper interest in knowing what is for his own benefit than any body else can have. Therefore the fact that he gives a free and intelligent consent to suffer pain or loss, creates a strong presumption that it is good for him on the whole to suffer that pain or loss. But the interest of his neighbours is not to be confided to him in the same unreserved manner in which we confide to him his own even when he sincerely intends to benefit his neighbours. For these reasons where the consent required is that of some one other than the individual himself, some thing more than mere good faith and the benefit of that sufferer are by this section made necessary. Morgan and Macpherson p. 67. School-master inflicting corporal punishment on child below 12 years necessary for school discipline is protected under s. 89. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 107=27 Cr. L. J. 636=3 Rang. 659=94 Ind. Cas. 412.

90 A consent is not such a consent as is intended by any section of this Code, if the consent is given by a person under fear of injury, or under a misconception of fact, and if the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that the consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception ; or if the consent is given by a person who, from unsoundness of mind or intoxication, is unable to understand the nature and consequence of that to which he gives his consent ; or,— unless the contrary appears from the context, if the consent is given by a person who is under twelve years of age.

Scope.—This section is rather a General Explanation than a General exception. A free and intelligent consent must be given. Fear of injury or mistake of fact are not consistent with such a consent. Suppose an ignorant person to represent himself as having skill to perform a difficult operation and by this pretence to obtain consent to perform it, such consent can avail him nothing. But where the facts which invalidate a consent are unknown to the person to whom it is given as if other persons without his knowledge represent that he possesses medical skill and thus obtain consent to his administering a potent medicine etc., this will not make the consent invalid. Morgan and Macpherson, p. 68. The object and effect of s. 90. obviously was not to lay down that a child under 12 years of age is in fact incapable of expressing or withholding his or her consent to an act, but to provide that when the consent of person may afford a defence to a criminal charge such consent must be a real consent, not vitiated by immaturity, fear or fraud. Every act done "against the will" of a person no doubt, is done "without his consent" but an act done "without the consent" of a person is not necessarily "against his will" which expression imports that the act is done in spite of the opposition of the person to the doing of it. 143 Ind. Cas. 872=1933

Cr. C. 573=11 Rang. 213=34 Cr. L. J. 696=A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 98 (F. B.) Section 90 is not to be applied to s. 366 and mere absence of a valid consent does not raise presumption as to intention necessary under the section. Ibid. The expression "under a misconception of fact" is broad enough to include all cases when the consent is obtained by misrepresentation; the misrepresentation should be regarded as leading to a misconception of the fact with reference to which consent was given. A misrepresentation as to the intention of a person is a misrepresentation of a fact. 36 M. 453=22 Ind. Cas. 168=15 Cr. L. J. 24; see also 14 C. 566; 5 W. R. 7; 12 W. R. 7; 17 P. R. 1919 but see 8 L. B. R. 166.

91. The exceptions in sections 87, and 88, and 89, do not extend to acts which are offences independently of any harm which they may cause, or be intended to cause, or be known to be likely to cause, to the person giving the consent, or on whose behalf the consent is given.

Illustration.

Causing miscarriage (unless caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman) is an offence independently of any harm which it may cause or be intended to cause, to the woman. Therefore it is not an offence "by reason of such harm;" and the consent of the woman or of her guardian to the causing of such miscarriage does not justify the act.

92. Nothing is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause to a person for whose benefit, it is done in good faith, even without that person's consent, if the circumstances, are such that it is impossible for that person to signify consent, or if that person is incapable of giving consent, and has no guardian or other person in lawful charge of him from whom it is possible to obtain consent in time for the thing to be done with benefit:

Provisos.

Provided—

First,—That this exception shall not extend to the intentional causing of death, or the attempting to cause death;

Secondly,—That this exception shall not extend to the doing of anything which the person doing it knows to be likely to cause death, for any purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;

Thirdly,—That this exception shall not extend to the voluntary causing of hurt, or the attempting to cause hurt, for any purpose other than the preventing of death or hurt;

Fourthly,—That this exception shall not extend to the abetment of any offence, to the committing of which offence it would not extend.

Illustrations.

(a) Z is thrown from his horse, and is insensible. A, a surgeon, finds that Z requires to be trepanned. A, not intending Z's death but in good faith, for Z's benefit, performs the trepan before Z recovers his power of judging for himself. A has committed no offence.

(b) Z is carried off by a tiger. A fires at the tiger knowing it to be likely that the shot may kill Z, but not intending to kill Z, and in good faith intending Z's benefit A's ball gives Z a mortal wound. A has committed no offence.

(c) A, a surgeon, sees a child suffer an accident which is likely to prove fatal unless an operation be immediately performed. There is not time to apply to the child's guardian. A performs the operation in spite of the entreaties of the child, intending, in good faith, the child's benefit. A has committed no offence.

(d) A is in a house which is on fire, with Z, a child. People below hold out a blanket. A drops the child from the house-top, knowing it to be likely that the fall may kill the child, but not intending to kill the child, and intending, in good faith, the child's benefit. Here, even if the child is killed by the fall, A has committed no offence.

Explanation.—Mere pecuniary benefit is not benefit within the meaning of sections 88, 89, and 92.

Principle.—There yet remains a kindred class of cases which are by no means of rare occurrence. For example, a person falls down in an apoplectic fit. Bleeding alone can save him, and he is unable to signify his consent to be bled. The surgeon who bleeds him commits an act falling under the definition of an offence. The surgeon is not the patient's guardian, and has no authority from any such guardian; yet it is evident that the surgeon ought not to be punished. Again, a house is on fire. A person snatches up a child too young to understand the danger, and flings it from the house-top, with a faint hope that it may be caught in a blanket below but with the knowledge that it is highly probable that it will be dashed to pieces. Here, though the child may be killed by the fall, though the person who threw it down knew that that it would very probably be killed and though he was not the child's parent or guardian, he ought not to be punished."—Note B.

Scope.—In these examples there is what may be called a temporary guardianship justified by the exigency of the case and by the humanity of the motive. This section extends to act done in the exercise of this temporary guardianship a protection very similar to that given by section 89 to the acts of regular guardians—Morgan and Macpherson p. 70.

Pecuniary benefit.—The benefit alluded to in this section must be some physical benefit i. e., the alleviation of some disease or diseased or disorganized condition of some part or member of the body. 5 W. R. 7.

93. No communication made in good faith is an offence by reason of any harm to the person to whom it is made, if it is made for the benefit of that person.

Illustration.

A, a surgeon, in good faith, communicates to a patient his opinion that he cannot live. The patient dies in consequence of the shock. A has committed no offence though he knew it to be likely that the communication might cause the patient's death.

94. Except murder, and offences against the State, punishable with death, nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is compelled to do it by threats, which, at the time of doing it, reasonably cause the apprehension that instant death to that person will otherwise be the consequence: provided the person doing the act did not of his own accord, or from a reasonable apprehension of harm to himself short of instant death, place himself in the situation by which he became subject to such constraint.

Explanation 1.—A person who, of his own accord, or by reason of a threat of being beaten, joins a gang of dacoits, knowing their character, is not entitled to the benefit of this exception, on the ground of his having been compelled by his associates to do anything that is an offence by law.

Explanation 2.—A person seized by a gang of dacoits, and forced, by threat of instant death, to do a thing which is an offence by law, for example, a smith compelled to take his tools, and to force the door of a house for the dacoits to enter and plunder it, is entitled to the benefit of this exception.

Principle.—Persons are properly excused from those acts which are not done of their own free will, but in subjection to the power of others. 1 Hale; 43; Russ. Cr. 90.

Scope.—This section is the only law which allows the doer of a crime to plead necessity as a defence. In order that the doctrine may be applicable, there must be a reasonable fear at the very time, of instant death. The Indian law about compulsion and necessity as a justification of an act otherwise criminal, is based on the law of England. The law does not, where there is no fear of instant death, require the Courts to discuss the philosophy of free will, or determine whether the person who bribes to secure some advantage to himself is a victim of extortion or feels helpless or not. 14 B. 115. But in order to get protection under this section the fear must be of instant death. 10 W. R. 48; 20 B. 215; 20 B. 394; 1912 M. W. N. 1108. Thus although the fear of having houses burnt or goods spoiled is no excuse in law for joining and marching with rebels, yet an actual force upon the person and present fear of death may form such excuse, provided they continue all the time during which the party remains with the rebels. Mc Growther's Case, Fort. 13; R. v. Tyler, 8 C. & P. 616; Russ Cr. gr; R. v. Crutchley, 5 C. & P. 133. Moral force put upon the person is no legal excuse. 1 Hale, 43; 1 East. P. C. 225. As to persons in private relations, neither a child nor a servant is excused for the commission of any crime, by the command or coercion of the parent or master. 1 Hale, 44, 516; Russ Cr. gr. This section is not applicable when the accused voluntarily subjects himself to threats. A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 204=1933 Cr. C. 919. Compulsion by threats of instant death is good defence except for 'murder' and offences against State. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 1031=52 C. 112=40 C. L. J. 143=28 C. W. N. 1046=26 Cr. L. J. 11=83 Ind. Murder.—Does not mean abetment of murder. 52 C. 112; see also A. I. R. 1925 All. 315=26 Cr. L. J. 676=47 A. 306=23 A. L. J. 25=86 Ind. Cas. 52.

95. Nothing is an offence by reason that it causes, or that it is intended to cause, or that is known to be likely to cause, any Act causing slight harm. harm, if that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm.

Object.—'Clause 73 (this section) is intended to provide for those cases which, though, from the imperfections of language, they fall within the letter of the penal law, are yet not within its spirit and are all over the world considered by the public, and for the most part dealt with by the tribunals, as innocent. As our definitions are framed, it is theft to dip a pen in another man's ink, mischief to crumble one of his wafers, an assault to cover him with a cloud of dust by riding past him, hurt to incommode him by pressing against him in getting into a carriage. There are innumerable acts without performing which men cannot live together in society, acts which all men constantly do and suffer in turn, and which it is desirable that they should do and suffer in turn, yet which differ only in degree from crimes. That these acts ought not to be treated as crimes is evident, and we think it far better expressly to except them from the penal clauses of the Code than to leave it to the judges to except them in practice; for if the code is silent on the subject the judges can except these cases only by resorting to one of two practices which we consider as most pernicious, by making law, or by wresting the language of the law from its plain meaning.—Note B.

Scope—This section is only intended to provide for those cases which fall within the letter but not within the spirit of the law. 12 M. 198.

This section will have no application unless the act in question amounted to an offence under the Code. Emperor v. Preo Nath Chowdhury, 29 C. 489; 1 N. L. R. 189. A theft of pods of no value falls under this section. 5 B. H. C. Cr. 35. OF THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE DEFENCE.

Principle.—"We propose (clauses 74-84=sections 96 to 106) to except from the operation of the penal clauses of the Code large classes of acts done in good faith for the purpose of repelling unlawful aggressions. In this part of the chapter we have attempted to define, with as much exactness as the subject appears to us to admit, the limits of the right of private defence. It may be thought that we have allowed to great a latitude to the exercise of this right; and we are ourselves of opinion that if we had been forming laws for a bold and high spirited people, accustomed to take the law into their own hand, and to go beyond the line of moderation in repelling injury, it would have been fit to provide additional restrictions. In this country the danger is on the otherside; the people are too little disposed to help themselves; the patience with which they submit to the cruel depredations of gang robbers, and to trespass and mischief committed in the most outrageous manner by bands of ruffians, is one of the most remarkable, and at the same time one of the most discouraging symptoms which the state of society in India presents to us. Under these circumstances we are desirous, rather to rouse and encourage a manly spirit among the people than to multiply restrictions on the exercise of the right of self-defence. We are of opinion that all the evil which is likely to arise from the abuse of that right is far less serious than the evil which would arise from the execution of one person for overstepping what might appear to the Courts to be the exact line of moderations in resisting a body of dacoits.

"We think it right, however to say that there is no part of the Code with which we feel satisfied than this. We cannot accuse ourselves of any want of diligence or care. No portion of our work has cost us more anxious thought or has been more frequently rewritten. Yet we are compelled to own that we leave it still in a very imperfect state; and though we do not doubt that it may be far better executed than it has been by us, we are inclined to think that it must always be one of the least exact parts of every system of criminal law.

"We have now made such observations as appears to us to be required on the general exceptions which we propose. It is proper that we should next explain why we have not proposed any exception in favour of some classes of acts which, as some persons may think, are entitled to indulgence.

"We long considered whether it would be advisable to except from the operation of the penal clauses of the Code acts committed in good faith from the desire of self-preservation; and we have determined not to except them.

"We admit indeed that many acts falling under the definition of offences ought not be punished when committed from the desire of self-preservation; and for this reason, that as the Penal Code itself appeals solely to the fears of men, it can never furnish them with motives for braving dangers greater than the dangers with which it threatens them. Its utmost severity will be inefficacious for the purpose of preventing the mass of mankind from yielding to a certain amount of temptation. It can indeed, make, those who have yielded to temptation miserable afterwards. But misery which has no tendency to prevent crime is so much clear evil. It is, vain to rely on the dread of instant death, or the sense of actual torture. An eminently virtuous man indeed will prefer death to crime; but it is not to our virtue that the penal law addresses itself; nor would the world stand in need of penal laws if men were virtuous. A man who refuses to commit a bad action when he sees preparations made for killing or torturing him unless he complies, is a man who does not require the fear of punishment to restrain him. A man on the other hand who is withheld from committing crimes solely or chiefly by the fear of punishment will never be withheld by that fear when a pistol is held to his forehead or a lighted torch applied to his fingers for the purpose of forcing him to commit a crime.

"It would, we think, be mere useless cruelty to hang a man for voluntarily causing the death of others by jumping from a sinking ship into an over-loaded boat. The suffering caused by the punishment is considered by itself, an evil, and ought to be inflicted only for the sake of some preponderating good. But no preponderating good, indeed no good whatever, would be obtained by hanging a man for such an act. We cannot expect that the next man who feels the ship in which he is left descending into the waves, and sees a crowded boat putting off from it, will submit to instant and certain death from fear of a remote and contingent death. There are men, indeed, who in such circumstances would sacrifice their own lives rather than risk the lives of others. But such men act from the influence of principles and feelings which no penal laws can produce, and which, if they were general, would render penal laws unnecessary. Again, a gang of dacoits, finding a house strongly secured, seize a smith, and by torture and threats of death induce him to take his tools and to force the door for them; here, it appears to us, that to punish the smith as a house-breaker would be to inflict gratuitous pain; we cannot trust to the deterring effect of such punishment. The next smith who may find himself in the same situation will rather take his chance of being at a distant time, arrested, convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, than incur certain and immediate death.

"In the cases which we have put, some persons may perhaps doubt whether there ought to be impunity; but those very persons would generally admit that the extreme danger was a mitigating circumstance to be considered in apportioning the punishment. It might, however, with no small plausibility be contended that if any punishment at all is inflicted in such cases, that punishment ought to be not merely death, but death with torture; for the dread of being put to death by torture might possibly be sufficient to prevent a man from saving his own life by a crime; but it is quite certain, as we have said, that the mere fear of capital punishment which is remote, and which may never be inflicted at all, will never prevent him from saving his life. And a fortiori, the dread of a milder punishment will not prevent him from saving his life. Laws directed against offences to which men are prompted by cupidity, ought always to take from offenders more than those offenders expect to gain by crime. It would obviously be absurd to provide that a thief or a swindler should be punished with a fine not exceeding half the sum which he had acquired by theft or swindling; in the same manner, laws directed against offences to which men are prompted by fear ought always to be framed in such a way as to be more terrible than the dangers which they require men to brave. It is on this ground, we apprehend, that a soldier who runs away in action is punished with a rigour altogether unproportioned to the moral depravity which his offence indicates. Such a soldier may be an honest and benevolent man, and irreproachable in all the relations of civil life; yet he is punished as severely as a deliberate assassin, and more severely than a robber or a kidnapper. Why is this? Evidently because, as his offence arises from fear, it must be punished in such a manner that timid men may dread the punishment more than they dread the fire of the enemy.

"If all cases in which facts falling under the definition of offences are done from the desire of self-preservation were as clear as the cases which we have put of the man who jumps from a sinking ship into a boat, and of the smith, who is compelled by dacoits to force a door for them, we should, without hesitation, propose to exempt this class of acts from punishment. But it is to be observed, that in both these cases the person in danger is supposed to have been brought into danger, without the smallest fault on his own part by mere accident, or by the depravity of others. If a captain of a merchantman were to run his ship on shore in order to cheat the insurers, and then to sacrifice the lives of others in order to save himself from a danger created by his own villainy; if a person who had joined himself to a gang of dacoits with no other intention than that of robbing were at the command of his leader, accompanied with threats of instant death in case of disobedience, to commit murder though unwillingly, the case would be widely different, and our former reasoning would cease to apply; for it is evident that punishment which is inefficacious to prevent a man from yielding to a certain temptation may often be efficacious to prevent him from exposing himself to that temptation. We cannot count on the fear which a man may entertain of being brought to the gallows at some distant time as sufficient to overcome the fear of instant death ; but the fear of remote punishment may often overcome the motives which induce a man to league himself with lawless companions, in whose society no person who shrinks from any atrocity that they may command can be certain of his life. Nothing is more usual than for pirates, gang-robbers and rioters to excuse their crimes by declaring that they were in dread of their associates, and durst not act otherwise. Nor is it by any means improbable that this may often be true. Nay, it is not improbable that crews of pirates and gangs of robbers may have committed crimes which every one among them was unwilling to commit, under the influence of mutual fear ; but we think it clear that this circumstance ought not to exempt them from the full severity of law.

"Again nothing is more usual than for thieves to urge distress and hunger as excuses for their thefts. It is certain, indeed, that many thefts are committed from the pressure of distress so severe as to be more terrible than the punishment of theft and than the disgrace which that punishment brings with it to the mass of mankind. It is equally certain that, when the distress from which a man can relieve himself by theft is more terrible than the evil consequences of theft, those consequences will not keep him from committing theft ; yet it by no means follows that it is irrational to punish him for theft ; for though the fear of punishment is not likely to keep any man from theft when he is actually starving, it is very likely to keep him from being in a starving state. It is of no effect to counteract the irresistible motive which immediately prompts to theft ; but it is of great effect to counteract the motives to that idleness and that profusion which end in bringing a man into a condition in which no law will keep him from committing theft. We can hardly conceive a law more injurious to society than one which should provide that as soon as a man who had neglected his work, or who had squandered his wages in stimulating drugs, or gambled them away, had been thirty six hours without food, and felt the sharp impulse of hunger, he might, with impunity, steal food from his neighbours.

"We should therefore think it in the highest degree pernicious to enact that no act done under the fear even of instant death should be an offence. It would a fortiori be absurd to enact that no act under the fear of any other evil should be an offence.

"There are, as we have said, cases in which it would be useless cruelty to punish acts done under the fear of death, or even of evils less than death. But it appears to us impossible precisely to define these cases. We have therefore, left them to the Government, which, in the exercise of its clemency, will doubtless be guided in a great measure by the advice of the Courts"—Note B.

Things done in private defence. 96. Nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence.

Principle.—"The whole law of self-defence rests upon these propositions :—(1) that the society undertakes, and, in the great majority of cases, is able to protect private persons against unlawful attacks upon their persons or properties ; (2) that where its aid can be obtained, it must be resorted to ; (3) that where its aid cannot be obtained, the individual may do everything that is necessary to protect himself, but (4) that the violence used must be in proportion to the injury to be avoided and must not be employed for the gratification of vindictive or malicious feeling—Mayne's Criminal Law. This right arises to every man on a reasonable apprehension of danger to himself or others, when the protection of the law and its officers cannot be obtained. It exists for the defence not only of his own person and property, but also of the persons and properties of others, and it extends to causing death in some cases and harm in others. As the right is founded not upon any idea of retributive justice but of prevention, it cannot extend to the inflicting of more harm than is necessary for the purpose of defence—Morgan and Macpherson, 73. For the application of the law regulating the right of self-defence, greater pains should be exercised to record the incidents and stages of the fight so far as they are material. L. B. R. (1893—1900), 262. When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights, or supposed rights, by unlawful force, and when they engage with men, who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights, or supposed rights no question of self-defence arises. 24 A. 143=A. Scope.—Where the accused happened to hit the deceased on the head, while resisting an attack made by the latter, but rather harder than perhaps he intended to have done and thus killed him, he cannot be said to have exceeded his right of self-defence and should not be convicted. A. I. R. 1929 All. 897. Where the right of private defence of property is set up, the burden of proof is on the accused to show that he injured the other party in defence of his property. Where neither side had peaceful possession of the property it cannot be said that the property belonged to the accused so as to invoke the right of private defence. To prove that it was done in defence, it should be shown that he did all he could to avoid it. So where both parties arm themselves for a fight to enforce their rights the right of private defence cannot be pleaded in defence. 5 P. 520=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 433. W. N. 1053=39 C. 896.

English law.—The common law, from a very early stage in its history, regarded the defence of one-self against a wrong-doer even in cases of homicide as being strictly justifiable; and therefore as involving no legal penalty whatever. A man is justified in using force against an assailant, in defence of himself (Howle's Case, Maitland's Select Pleas 94). Hence if he has a reasonable apprehension of danger and adopts none but reasonable means of warding it off, he will be innocent even though the wrong-doer be killed by the means thus adopted. But reasonable these means must be. Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 104.

Whether the right should be pleaded.—One who depends upon the right of private defence must prove it by evidence. 1 C. L. R. 62; 11 C. L. R. 232; 24 A. W. N. 113; 31 C. W. N. 314=45 C. L. J. 131. Right of private defence of the body and of property. 97. Every person has a right, subject to the restrictions contained in section, 99, to defend—

First—His own body, and the body of any other person, against any offence affecting the human body;

Secondly—The property, whether moveable or immoveable of himself or of any other person, against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass, or which is an attempt to commit theft, robbery, mischief, or criminal trespass.

Offences—Offences against the person, and such offences against property as are or probably may be, accompanied by force as distinct from mere fraud, are meant—Morgan and Macpherson, 74.

First—Under the English law a person has no right to commit an assault merely in defence of other person, unless he stands in a particular relation to them. Such reciprocal relations are husband and wife, (Leward v. Basely, 1 L. Raym. 62), and parent and child. A servant may assault in defence of his master, and perhaps vice versa. Dalton's Justice Ch. 121. But 'neither can the farmer or tenant justify such an act, in defence of his landlord, nor, a citizen etc. in defence of the mayor (or bailiffs) of the city or town corporate where he dwelleth.' Dalton, ib; Roscoe Cr. Ev. 409. But this section is wider than the English law. Under this section a stranger can exercise the right of private defence. 46 M. 605 (F. B.); 29 Cr. L. J. 445; 2 Pat. 595; 20 W. Secondly—The right of private defence of property can only exist in favour of the person who possesses a clear title to that property and where no such title has been determined, no right of private defence of property can exist. 17 Cr. L. J. 180. Section 97 gives a right of private defence of property against an act which amounts inter-alia to an offence of criminal trespass or mischief. 148 Ind. Cas. 644=35 Cr. L. J. 730=1934 A. Extent of right—There is no obligation upon a person entitled to exercise his right of private defence to retire merely because the assailant threatens him with violence. As regards the extent of the right, a man acting under an apprehension of death cannot be expected to judge too nicely the force of his own blow. He is not bound to moderate his defence step by step according to the attack before there is reason to believe the attack is over. 2 Pat. 595. The right of private defence, as described in s. 97 of the Penal Code, is subject to the restrictions mentioned in s. 99, that is, it should be exercised only in defence of one's own body or that of another person against an offence affecting the body. 4 B. L. R. Ap. 101=13 W. R. Cr. 55. Where the accused found some others taking away moveable property in which they were interested, held that they had a right to retain the same by force. A. W. The law must not be invoked to oppress the persons, who, when there is no time to have recourse to the public authorities, find themselves in a position in which they must either exert the privilege of private defence as provided and restricted by the law or submit to a forcible invasion of a right of person or property in cases, where under s. 97, the law does not require any such submission. L. B. R. (1893-1900), 219. The law allows every person to use reasonable force to defend his possession from a trespasser. But when the property has been taken possession of by another, however wrongful it might be, the person dispossessed would not be entitled to take the law into his own hands and forcibly recover possession. 6 S. Facts unknown to the accused at the time but proved before the Court at the trial should not be taken into account and made the basis for finding against the plea of self-defence. The question is not what a perfectly cool by-stander would think absolutely necessary but whether there was reasonable apprehension of danger to life or property on the part of the accused having regard to all the circumstances and allowances should be made for one who with the instinct of self-preservation strong upon him pursues his defence a little further than might appear to be absolutely necessary to a cool by-stander. 1929 M. He can rely on the presumption of continuance of possession. 100 Ind. Cas. 383=24 Cr. L. J. 303=A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 181. Before an accused person can set up a right to private defence of property, he must show that the property was his property and that he actually was in peaceful possession of it. A blow or other violence necessary for the defence of a man's person is not a battery. Thus if A, lift up his stick, and offer to strike B, it is a sufficient assault to justify B in striking A ; for he need not stay till A has actually struck him. B. N. P. 18. But every assault will not justify every battery, it must be proportionable to the assault where it appeared that A had in a scuffle 'ran his finger' towards B's eye, it was held a justification for B's biting off A's finger. Cockcroft v. Smith, 2 Salk. 641 ; 1 L. Raym. 177, 1704. If one use violence more than necessary to repel the assault, he may be convicted of an assault. R. v. Mabel, 9 C. & P. 474. An attack with fists must not be met with wounding by a razor. R. v. Morse, 4 Cr. A. R. 50, (1910). In assault, as in other cases of trespass, the attacked ought not, in the first instance, to be at the assailant unless the attack is made with such violence as to render the battery necessary. Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78, 1898. It is not the law that 'no more than warding off a blow must be attempted by any one attacked ; a battery in return for an assault which missed being a battery is justified. R. v. Deana, 73 J. P. 255. Where a man strikes at another within reaching distance, the latter is justified in using such a degree of force as will prevent a repetition (but no more). Per Perke B. Anon. 2 Lewin, C. In execution of a decree possession was given to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors were allowed to reap the standing crops that were on the land. The right of private defence can be exercised by a person, who is attacked by a party armed with dangs while carrying away his own tree. 102 Ind. Cas. 769. Right of private defence does not exist in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of public authorities and therefore a person when dispossessed of land can claim no right of private defence of property as against the complainant, assuming him to be a trespasser who had just entered the land. 114 Ind. Cas. 464=28 Cr. L. J. 148. Under section 97, every person has a right to defend the property whether moveable or immoveable of himself or of any other person against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of theft, robbery or criminal trespass. 22 A. Where two parties are in joint actual possession of property, the act of one party in excluding the other from the enjoyment of such a possession by collecting rent from the tenants for his own benefit to the exclusion of the other party is clearly wrongful and the other party is justified in using force in the exercise of the right of private defence for the purpose of preventing the wrongful act. 11 O. L. J. 743.

If a person kills a wild animal or wild bird on the property of another person, such dead creature does not belong to the killer but to the proprietor of the property, and such proprietor either himself or by his only authorised agent can lawfully demand and if refused seize such dead creature from the possession of the killer, and such persons as help him to exercise his right are doing no wrong, but, as against any person other than the proprietor of the estate or his only authorised agent or those lawfully helping the proprietor or his agent the killer has a right to certain possession of the dead creature and any body else depriving him forcibly of possession commits an offence. 81 Ind. Cas. 82=25 Cr. L. J. 94=3 Pat. 549.

Where a right of private defence is set up the essence of the case should be to ascertain who was the aggressor and whether the accused party used more violence than was necessary. It is only against a danger present and imminent that the right of private defence avails. The right is a limited one and cannot be converted into one of refusal. 85 Ind. Cas. 731=26 Cr. L. J. 587=A. Men who have reason to fear that a man is going to attack them with a loaded weapon are entitled to attack him first and to use force in order to destroy his power of attack or take the weapon from him. 23 A. L. J. 1069=88 Ind. Cas. 13=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 372. There can be no right of private defence where both parties, in a riot, are aware that a fight is likely to happen and expecting to be attacked, turn out in force and go out of their way to be attacked; in such a case it is immaterial who was the first to attack unless it be shown that the accused were right in the right of private defence. If both the parties were determined to vindicate their supposed rights and engaged in a fight no question of private defence can arise; in other words, the law does not permit rival claimants to settle their dispute by entering into a cold-blooded battle. The tendency of law in civilised countries is to restrict the right of private defence within constantly narrowing limits. 6 Pat. L. T. 87=A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 388. 98. When an act, which would otherwise be a certain offence, is not that offence, by reason of the youth, the want of maturity of understanding, the unsoundness of mind, or the intoxication, of the person doing that act, or by reason of any misconception on the part of that person ; every person has the same right of private defence against that act which he would have if the act were that offence.

(a) Z, under the influence of madness attempts to kill A. Z is guilty of no offence. But A has the same right of private defence which he would have if Z were sane.

(b) A enters by night a house which he is legally entitled to enter. Z, in good faith taking A for a house-breaker, attacks A. Here Z, by attacking A under this misconception, commits no offence. But A has the same right of private defence against Z, which he would have if Z were not acting under that misconception.

Principle.—The right of private defence arises from the natural right of self protection and not from any supposed criminality on the part of the person who causes the danger. Although he may be blameless, or an insane person incapable of committing an offence, I am no more bound to suffer what he attempts to inflict than I should be, if he had a criminal intention. Of course if the right is exercised against a woman or a child, it must not exceed the moderate bounds which in such a case, will ordinarily be sufficient—Morgan and Macpherson.

99. There is no right of private defence against an act which does not reasonably cause the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt, if done, or attempted to be done, by a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, though that act may be not strictly justifiable by law.

There is no right of private defence against an act which does not reasonably cause the apprehension, of death or of grievous hurt, if done or attempted to be done, by the direction of a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, though that direction may not be strictly justifiable by law.

There is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities.

The right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.

Explanation 1.—A person is not deprived of the right of private defence against an act done or attempted to be done, by a public servant, as such, unless he knows, or has reason to believe, that the person doing the act is such public servant.

Explanation 2.—A person is not deprived of the right of private defence against an act done, or attempted to be done, by the direction of a public servant, unless he knows, or has reason to believe, that the person doing the act is acting by such direction, or unless such person states the authority under which he acts, or, if he has authority in writing unless he produces such authority, if demanded.

Principle—Ministerial officers of Justice and other public servants are protected by the law in the discharge of their duties and if questions arise touching any trivial excess or irregularity committed by them or by their orders in good faith, such questions must be determined by the civil tribunals. The risk to public servants would be extreme, if any departure from the strict letter of their authority justified resistance to them. The expressions "under colour of this office," and "in good faith" show that the protection is intended to be given only to a public servant acting honestly in discharge of powers conferred or of duties imposed on him. The right of private defence does not arise when recourse may be had to the public authorities for this right does not take the place of the functions of those public servants who are specially charged with the protection of life and property and the apprehension of offenders, and where the assistance of the public authorities can be procured, the right cannot lawfully be exercised.—Morgan and Macpherson, 75.

First clause.—This clause has its application in cases in which the public servant is acting in good faith under colour of his office, 18 A. 246. This section has no application in a case when the police officers were acting under a warrant the issue of which was altogether illegal. 24 C. 320; see also 20 Ind. Cas. 992; 3 C. W. N. 627; 13 B. 168. A Court ought not to set up, on behalf of persons accused before it a defence they were acting in the exercise of the right of private defence of property, which defence the accused themselves did not set up. A. W. N. 1904, 113=1 Cr. L. J. 427. But when the evidence shows that the accused was acting in private defence he may be acquitted. 15 Ind. Cas. 310=13 Cr. L. J. 470=11 M. L. T. 251.

Where the right of private defence of property exists it is difficult to distinguish between the right of private defence of property and the right of private defence of the person where the prosecution party comes upon the land in possession of the accused not only to deprive them of their property but also to violently, attack them if they tried to defend their possession by force. 15 Cr. L. J. 447=86 Ind. Cas. 218. When a man strikes another it is not easy for the man who is struck to calculate with accuracy the exact force which he can use in defence. Even if he uses more force, he is protected by the law. 26 Cr. L. J. 730=86 Ind. Cas. 218.

Clause (2).—There is no right of private defence against the arrest by a constable acting under colour of his office even though such arrest is not strictly justified by law. 29 Cr. L. J. 69=106 Ind. Cas. 581; see A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 851=28 P. L. R. 290=28 Cr. L. J. 972=105 Ind. Cas. 684.

Clause (3).—The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences. 14 B. 441. This clause allows no right of private defence in cases where there is time to have recourse to the authorities. 1 Weir, 44; 26 P. L. R. 267; 74 Ind. Cas. 73; 60 Ind. Cas. 33; A. I. Explanation I—A right of private defence exists where the alleged offender does not know and has no reason to believe that the person doing the act is a public servant. A. I. R. 1924 All. 615=22 A. L. J. 501=26 Cr. L. J. 501=85 Ind. Cas. 245.

Cases.—The plea of private defence can be taken up in the Appellate Court. A. I. R. 1926, Nag. 202. Under this section, the right of private defence against an injury apprehended to be done by a public servant extends only to those cases in which there is a reasonable cause of apprehension of death or grievous hurt being caused by the act of such public servant. 9 Lah. L. J. 424. In order to establish the exercise of the right of private defence it is absolutely necessary to detail the exact circumstances which led the accused to strike the blow in question; obviously such a defence can seldom successfully be made out when the accused's case is that they did not strike the blow at all. 32 C. W. N. 839=48 C. L. J. 138=A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 700. Three or four men being armed with lathis, etc., came to a village during night time apparently to commit dacoity. The accused saw them and feeling the danger fired a gun at the thieves and one of them was killed. In a prosecution for murder, held, that the accused was justified in firing and that he had not exceeded the right of private defence. One does not wait for firing until a dacoit or robber comes up to shake hands or to enquire after another's health. 27 A. L. J. 148=115 Ind. Cas. 609=30 Cr. L. J. 504=A. I. R. 1929 A. 299. When an Income-tax officer whose notice to produce account books is not complied with, enters on the premises and takes possession of the books and remains on the premises though asked to go away, the owners are within their rights in turning him out by force, and section 99 does not deprive them of their right of private defence. 7 Lah. 104=27 P. L. R. 298=95 Ind. Cas. 308=27 Cr. L. J. 772. This section is inapplicable to a case where a police officer attempted to snatch a kutthari from a person, in trying to prevent which injuries were inflicted to him. The possession of a kutthari not being forbidden by law, the act of the police officer is wholly without jurisdiction. 6 Lah. 392=90 Ind. Cas. 927=26 Cr. L. J. 1631. Force can be used to defend possession of property but not for recovery. A. I. R. 1925 Nag. Even if a warrant of attachment is illegal, an accused cannot plead a right of private defence of property when he is charged under s. 323 I. P. C. 26 P. L. R. 290. The right of private defence does not extend to shooting after retreat. L. R. 3 A. 20 Cr. When the direction under which certain public servants acted was not a lawful one in respect of what they were directed to do or of their superior's right to give such a direction at all, the right of private defence is not taken away by s. 99 and resistance to such public servant will be justified. 28 M. There is no right of private defence where two parties arm themselves for a fight and deliberately engage in a violent riot without seeking the protection of the police authorities near by. 36 P. R. Order of arrest without imergency contemplated by Cr. Pro. Where the deceased was aggressor but was made helpless by being disarmed, accused has no right of private defence by causing injuries. A. I. R. 1935 Pesh. 59.

100. The right of private defence of the body extends, under the restrictions mentioned in the last preceding section, to the voluntary causing of death, or of any other harm, to the assailant, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be of any of the descriptions hereinafter enumerated, namely :—

First.—Such an assault, as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death will otherwise be the consequence of such assault ;

Secondly.—Such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault ;

Thirdly.—An assault with the intention of committing rape ;

Fourthly.—An assault with the intention of gratifying unnatural lust ;

Fifthly.—An assault with the intention of kidnapping or abducting ;

Sixthly.—An assault with the intention of wrongfully confining a person, under circumstances which may reasonably cause him to apprehend that he will be unable to have recourse to the public authorities for his release.

Scope—Certain aggravated assaults which are here enumerated justify the exercise of the right of private defence to the extent of causing death (if this be necessary). The reference to the restrictions in the preceding section should probably be understood to apply to the restrictions, therein mentioned exclusive of those in the first and second clauses, as to which this reference is inapplicable.—Morgan and Macpherson, 78. The right of private defence arises in case of assault to one's wife. 27 Cr. L. J. 617=94 Ind. Cas. 36=1926 M. W. N. 212. The extent to which the exercise of the right of self-defence is justified depends not on the actual danger but whether there was a reasonable apprehension of such danger. 25 Cr. L. J. 625=81 Ind. A person will be justified, in the exercise of his right of private defence of his person, in stabbing the assailant, when the latter attacks him with a knife inflicting a serious wound, even though the person exercising the right of private defence may have escaped further injury by resorting to less violence or by running away. 28 M. 454=3 Cr. Where the solitary injury received by the deceased which proved fatal was inflicted by one of the two accused, in exercise of his right of private defence the other accused could on no account be held responsible for the same. 89 Ind. In the heat of the moment and while defending one-self from a man armed with a stick it is practically impossible to calculate with accuracy the exact force which one is entitled to employ in self-defence. 26 P. According to section 100, Indian Penal Code, the right of private defence of the body extends under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing of death or of any other harm to the assailant, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will be the consequence of such assault. 72 Ind. An accused person, who pleads the benefit of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code regarding the right of private defence, has to satisfy the Court affirmatively, by evidence which the Court can believe and act upon that he is entitled to the benefit of these provisions. 1923 All. 277. Under this section detailed circumstances must be set out. 1928 Cal. 700.

101. If the offence be not of any of the descriptions enumerated in the last preceding section, the right of private defence of the body does not extend to the voluntary causing of death to the assailant, but does extend, under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing to the assailant of any harm other than death.

102. The right of private defence of the body commences as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence though the offence may not have been committed, and it continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues.

Commencement and continuance of the right of private defence of the body.

Reasonable apprehension.—There must be an attempt or a threat, and consequent thereupon an apprehension of danger; but it is not mere idle threat, or every apprehension of a rash or timid mind, that will justify the exercise of the right. Reasonable ground for the apprehension is requisite. Suppose that threat to proceed from a woman or child and to be addressed to a strong man; in such a case there could hardly be a reasonable apprehension. Present and imminent danger seems to be meant. But if a man is preparing himself, as by seizing a dangerous weapon in such a way that he manifestly intends immediate violence, this seems sufficient justification of the exercise of the right; for his conduct amounts to a threat, and the other has reason to consider the danger to be imminent—Morgan and Macpherson,

79. Whether the right of private defence of his body, which the accused possessed was exceeded by him or not, will depend, not on the actually continuing danger but on whether there was a reasonable apprehension of such danger. 28 M. 454; see also 22 A. L. J. 625. When a person is attacked while doing a lawful act, he is entitled to stand his ground and defend himself, and the law does not intend that he must run away to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities. 10 O. C. 196=6 Cr. L. J. 271. An offence is excused only if the right of private defence is rightly exercised. 25 Cr. L. J. 693=81 Ind. Cas. 181=A. I. R. 1924 All. 441; A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 167. There is no right of private defence when the trespasser is out of it. A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 275=5 P. L. T. 198=24 Cr. L. J. 813. Mere presence of persons does not take away right of private defence. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 167=34 P. L. R. 259=146 Ind. Cas. 27=1933 Cr. C. 312.

103. The right of private defence of property extends under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing of death, or of any other harm to the wrong doer, if the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, occasions the exercise of the right, be an offence of any of the descriptions hereinafter enumerated, namely :—

First—Robbery ;

Secondly—House-breaking by night ;

Thirdly—Mischief by fire committed on any building, tent or vessel, which building, tent, or vessel, is used as a human dwelling, or as a place for the custody of property ;

Fourthly—Theft, mischief, or house-trespass, under such circumstances as may reasonably cause apprehension that death or grievous hurt will be the consequence, if such right of private defence is not exercised.

Comment.—Violence is the characteristic of all offences enumerated in this section.—Maynes' Criminal Law.

Notes.—Under this section the right of private defence of property to the extent of causing death arises not only when house is broken into but when an attempt is made to break into the house. 98 Ind. Cas. 193=27 Cr. L. J. 1287=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1012. Right of killing an offender found committing burglary given by s. 103 is subject to the provisions of s. 99. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 26=6 Lah. 463=27 Cr. L. J. 38=26 P. L. R. 719.

104. If the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, occasions the exercise of the right of private defence, be theft, mischief, or criminal trespass, not of any of the descriptions enumerated in the last preceding section, that right does not extend to the voluntary causing of death, but does extend, subject to the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing to the wrong-doer of any harm other than death.

Scope.—Under this section the right of private defence extends to the causing of any harm other than death subject to the restriction in s. 99 that it is limited to the inflicting of only such harm as is necessary for the purpose of defence. 18 Cr. L. J. 862. Where a person is enjoying a right and in protecting his right repelled attack of the prosecutors, he commits no offence. 41 C. 43=20 Ind. Cas. 140. It cannot be said that, when after a thief has effected his retreat with stolen property the property is subsequently found in his possession the owner's right of private defence would revive for the purpose of its recovery. 28 P. Under section 104, Penal Code, the right of private defence extends to the causing of any harm other than death subject to the restriction in section 99 that it was limited to the inflicting of only such harm as was necessary for the purpose of defence. 18 Cr. Commencement and continuance of the right of private defence of property. 105. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences.

The right of private defence of property against theft continues till the offender has effected his retreat with the property, or either the assistance of the public authorities is obtained or the property has been recovered.

The right of private defence of property against robbery continues as long as the offender causes or attempts to cause to any person death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or as long as the fear of instant death or of instant hurt or of instant personal restraint continues.

The right of private defence of property against criminal trespass or mischief continues as long as the offender continues in the commission of criminal trespass or mischief.

The right of private defence of property against house-breaking by night continues as long as the house-trespass which has been begun by such house-breaking continues.

Notes.—Where a person whose property has been stolen finds the thief or the property, he is not bound to put off the capture of the thief or the property, until he can find assistance from public authority. 7 Cr. L. J. 49=3 N. L. R. 117. The Penal Code does not give any right of private defence of property in regard to which an offence under s. 403 or 411 I. P. C. has been committed. 37 P. R. 1914 Cr.=16 Cr. L. J. 209=27 Ind. Cas. 833=219 P. L. R. 1915. If serious disorder are to be avoided the right of private defence must strictly be confined within the limits fixed by statute. 7 Lah. 21=27 P. L. R. 280=96 Ind. Cas. 385. Where the owner of the land on which cattle has trespassed had them chased and the chaser followed the cattle to the field of the accused who inflicted mortal injuries on one of them who in consequence died and the accused pleaded private defence, held, the mere fact that the cattle had left the land trespassed upon did not deprive the owner of the right of seizure under s. 10 of the Cattle Trespass Act, and that no case of private defence has been established. A. I. R. 192 Lah. 692. Killing a thief after he has thrown away the stolen property is not for the purpose of recovering the property and as such is not covered by this section. A. I. 106. If, in the exercise of the right of private defence against an assault which reasonably causes the apprehension of death, the defender be so situated that he cannot effectually exercise that right without risk of harm to an innocent person, his right of private defence extends to the running of that risk.

Right of private defence against deadly assault when there is risk of harm to innocent person.

Illustration.

A is attacked by a mob who attempt to murder him. He cannot effectually exercise his right of private defence without firing on the mob, and cannot fire without risk of harming young children who are mingled with the mob. A commits no offence if, by so firing, he harms any of the children.

Principle.—A man must not escape death by designedly causing the death of an innocent person but in the case supposed he is excused for causing an innocent person to run the risk of death—Morgan and Macpherson, 82.

CHAPTER V.

OF ABETMENT.

Abetment of a thing.

107. A person abets the doing of a thing who—

First.—instigates any person to do that thing; or

Secondly.—engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing ; or Thirdly—intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing.

Explanation 1.—A person who, by wilful misrepresentation, or by wilful concealment of a material fact which he is bound to disclose, voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, a thing to be done, is said to instigate the doing of that thing.

Illustration.

A, a public-officer is authorised by a warrant from a Court of Justice to apprehend Z. B, knowing that fact, and also that C is not Z, wilfully represents to A that C is Z, and thereby intentionally causes A to apprehend C. Here B, abets by instigation the apprehension of C.

Explanation 2.—Whoever, either prior to, or at the time of, the commission of an act, does anything, in order to facilitate the commission of that act, and thereby facilitates the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act.

Application.—Chapter V applies to offences punishable under ss. 8, 121A, 124A, 125A, 225B 249A, and 304A.—Vide, s. 13 of Act 22 of 1870.

Comment.—When an offence is committed and several persons take part in the commission of it each person may contribute in a manner and degree different from the other to the doing of the criminal act. Mere knowledge or standing by while an offence under s. 379 is being committed cannot be covered by the definition of abetment. 1929 A. I. R. Sind. 9. Emigration or assisting in the emigration is not an abetment within s. 213. 1928 Cal. 339. To substantiate a charge under section 109, it is necessary to show intentional aid by some act or illegal omission. 1 Bom. L. R. 351. Guilty knowledge on the part of the abettor is necessary. 6 A. 491 ; see also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 93 ; 15 Cr. L. J. 617. The mere presence at the commission of a crime of a person, who has no authority to interfere will not constitute an abetment of the offence. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 844 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 303 ; 8 C. 728 ; 1 Weir, 52 ; 20 B. 394.

An offence of abetment is committed by intentional aiding. 12 W. R. Cr. 52 ; 4 C. W. N. 309 ; 30 P. R. 1868 Cr. So an abetment by instigation depends on abettor's intention. 22 W. R. Cr. 8 ; 24 P. In order to convict a person of abetting the commission of a Crime, it is not only necessary to prove that he has taken part in those steps of the transaction which are innocent, but in some way or other, it is absolutely necessary to connect him with those steps of the transaction which are criminal. 20 W. R. Cr. 41. The mere fact of allowing an illegal marriage to take place at one's house does not amount to the abetment of an illegal marriage W. R. 1864 Cr. 13 ; 6 B. 126. The act may be done by the hands of one person while another is present or is close at hand ready to afford help ; or the actual doer may be guilty agent acting under the orders of an absent person ; and besides these participators there may be other person who contribute less directly to the commission of the offence by advice, persuasion, incitement or aid. It is proper to mark the nature and degree of participation which is essential to criminal liability, but it will be seen that the several gradations of action above referred to are not always treated as denoting necessarily different measures of guilt with a view to distinctions in respect of punishment.

The law concerning principal offenders and accessories or abettors is contained in sections 34 to 38 of Chapter II, and in the present chapter. The several definitions of offences throughout the Code, construed with reference to these provisions extend the operation of the Code to all who commit or abet the commission of an offence or who contribute to it in any degree which a penal law can notice.

"We have seen that if several persons, combining both in intent and act, commit an offence jointly each is guilty, as if he had done the whole alone ; and that so it is if each has his several part to do, all contributing to one result. When all thus combine each does the act so far as his own part extends and as to the residue may be regarded as procuring it to be done by means of guilty agents. All the parties so concerned stand in the mutual relation of principals and agents.

"The present chapter treats of criminal agency of a less direct and immediate kind ; the agent being urged forward by a person who will not himself act, but who procures or instigates another to put in execution his criminal intention.

"The offence of abetment must mainly depend on the guilty knowledge or intention of the abettor. The knowledge and intention of the person he employs to act for him, will not affect or alter the abettor's guilt although the acts of that person may have an important bearing in determining it. The measure of punishment which the Code awards to abettors depends on the effect of abetment ; a distinction being made between cases in which the abetment is successful, and those in which the effect intended is not accomplished. If the act abetted is done, the abettor is punished as if he had himself committed the offence. If the act abetted is not done, he is punished less severely, but regard is had to the result of his abetment, any hurt which may be caused being deemed an aggravation of his offence. But no distinction seems to be made, as regards the abettor's punishment, between cases in which the person abetted involuntarily fails, or is prevented from carrying his intention into execution, and those in which he resists altogether the solicitations of the abettor.

"Again, the person abetted may be guilty of a criminal act and his abettor may in no way be answerable for it, because the act done goes beyond or is quite distinct from the act intended by the abettor ; he must answer for any probable consequence or his abetment, notwithstanding that the act or result may not be precisely what he intended, but he is not further responsible. The question will be this. Is the act done, although not precisely the act intended to be done, yet substantially the same, or a probable result of that act ? If so, the abettor must answer for it. The sort of conduct which constitutes abetment is explained, but no rule is or could be laid down on the subject of the degree of incitement or the force of persuasion used, which will suffice to make a person an abettor"—Morgan and Macpherson.

General exceptions.—The provisions of this and all succeeding chapters, must be read with the foregoing chapters of General Explanation and General Exceptions. Construed with reference to the latter chapter, it is clear that those who cannot commit offence cannot be abettors of offences ; therefore infants, insane persons and others excepted from criminal liability cannot be abettors.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Scope of the Section.—This section explains what acts or conduct of a person shall be deemed to constitute him an abettor of the doing of a thing whether such thing is in him an offence or not. The thing done may be criminal and yet no offence (in the language of the Code) attaches to the actual doer, because being an infant or an insane person, etc. no guilt can be imputed to him. To distinguish between things done by such persons and things done by guilty agents this form of expression is used—Morgan and Macpherson.

Clause (1)—'Instigation' necessarily indicates some active suggestion or support or stimulation to the commission of the act itself which constitutes the offence and advice can become 'instigation' only if it is found that it was meant actively to suggest or stimulate the commission of an offence. Advice per se cannot necessarily be instigation under clause (1) and the conviction based upon the finding that the accused must have advised etc. is wrong. 5 P. L. J. 129=1 P. L. T. 60. Abetment by aiding or instigation necessarily means some action, suggestion or support or stimulation to the commission of the offence itself; negligence does not amount to abetment. 2 Pat. L. T. 73. Mere intention or preparation to instigate is not abetment. To complete abetment as crime, there must be abettor and he must abet an offence. A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 760=36 C. W. N. 982=60 C. 982=1932 Cr. C. 803=34 Cr. L. J. 78. The placing of a temptation is not instigation, but actively stimulating a person is instigation. 12 M. L. T. 373=19 Cr. L. J. 29=42 Ind. Cas. 989. Mere presence on the occasion of the commission of the offence does not amount to an abetment. 43 Ind. Cas. 95. Abetment may be committed by instigation through letters sent by post. 16 A. 389. When the accused encourages the committing of a crime he can be rightly convicted under this section. 1 Weir, 50. A man cannot be convicted for abetment for sympathy with an unlawful assembly. 4 C. W. N. 500; see also 1 Weir 47. Informing husband against intriguing wife and her lover by virtue of which murder is committed does not amount to abetment. 30 P. R. 1872 Cr.

Concealment.—As to mere omissions, such as an omission by a private person to give the police information respecting an offence, they cannot amount to instigation by concealment or otherwise, unless they are illegal,—that is unless the law has imposed the duty of giving such information on the persons charged with the omission.—Morgan and Macpherson; 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 7. Abetment by omission is punishable only if the omission is illegal omission. 9 Bom. L. R. 159.

Clause (2)—Two or more persons may be said to engage in a conspiracy, or for the doing of a thing when they combine and agree to do it or to cause it to be done; but this combination alone will not make them abettors, though they may have discussed plans, adopted resolutions and interchanged promises of fidelity, unless an act in pursuance of the conspiracy has taken place.—Morgan and Macpherson: see also A. W. N. 1887, 236; 17 Cr. L. J. 233; 18 P. R. 1179 Cr.: 36 A. 26. A knowledge on the part of the abettor that the offence is intended to be committed is essential. 17 Cr. L. J. 175; A. W. N. 1896, 194. Clause (3)—Concealment which is wilful and relates to a fact which a person is bound to disclose, constitutes abetment by aid, the aid being given by this illegal omission.—Morgan and Macpherson. 86; 14 Cr. L. J. 610; 24 W. R. Cr. 7. A person who knowingly aids in disposal of stolen property is one accomplice. 67 M. L. J. 693=A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 721.

Cases.—A person aiding must know that he is aiding a criminal act. 1928 Nag. 257. A person who identified another, who intended to cheat the treasury officer by personation, made the identification on the assurance of another in whom he had confidence, but did not tell Treasury Officer that he identified only on such assurance, could not be convicted of abetting the offence unless it is definitely proved that he knew that the offence was being committed, that is to say, that the man whom he identified was not the same. 10 Pat. Abettor.

act which would be an offence, if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence, with the same intention or knowledge as that of the abettor.

Explanation 1.—The abetment of the illegal omission of an act may amount to an offence, although the abettor may not himself be bound to do that act.

Explanation 2.—To constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused.

Illustrations.

(a) A instigates B to murder C. B refuses to do so. A is guilty of abetting B to commit murder.

(b) A instigates B to murder D. B, in pursuance of the instigation, stabs D. D recovers from the wound. A is guilty of instigating B to commit murder.

Explanation 3.—It is not necessary that the person abetted should be capable by law of committing an offence, or that he should have the same guilty intention or knowledge as that of the abettor, or any guilty intention or knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a) A, with a guilty intention, abets a child or a lunatic to commit an act which would be an offence, if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence, and having the same intention as A. Here A, whether the act be committed or not, is guilty of abetting an offence.

(b) A, with the intention of murdering Z, instigates B, a child under seven years of age, to do an act which causes Z's death. B, in consequence of the abetment, does the act in the absence of A, and thereby causes Z's death. Here, though B was not capable by law of committing an offence, A is liable to be punished in the same manner as if B had been capable by law of committing an offence, and had committed murder, and he is, therefore subject to the punishment of death.

(c) A, instigates B to set fire to a dwelling-house. B, in consequence of the unsoundness of his mind being incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law sets fire to the house in consequence of A's instigation. B has committed no offence, but A is guilty of abetting the offence of setting fire to a dwelling house, and is liable to the punishment provided for that offence.

(d) A, intending to cause a theft to be committed, instigates B to take property belonging to Z out of Z's possession. A induces B, to believe that the property belongs to A. B takes the property out of Z's possession, in good faith, believing it to be A's property. B, acting under this misconception, does not take dishonestly and therefore does not commit theft. But A is guilty of abetting theft, and is liable to the same punishment as if B had committed theft.

Explanation 4.—The abetment of an offence being an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence.

Illustrations.

A instigates B to instigate C to murder Z. B accordingly instigates C to murder Z and C commits that offence in consequence of B's instigation. B is liable to be punished for his offence with the punishment for murder; and, as A instigated B to commit the offence, A is also liable to same punishment.

Explanation 5.—It is not necessary to the commission of the offence of abetment by conspiracy that the abettor should concert the offence with the person who commits it. It is sufficient if he engage in the conspiracy in pursuance of which the offence is committed.

Illustration.

A consents with B a plan for poisoning Z. It is agreed that A shall administer the poison. B then explains the plan to C, mentioning A's name. C agrees to procure the poison, and procures and delivers it to B for the purpose of its being used in the manner explained. A administers the poison; Z dies in consequence. Here though A and C have not conspired together, yet C has been engaged in the conspiracy in pursuance of which Z has been murdered, C has therefore, committed the offence defined in this section, and is liable to the punishment for murder.

Intention.—To constitute a man the abettor of a crime committed by another, it must be clearly established that both intended to commit or further the same crime.—Rat. Un. Cr. Cas. 93. When the accused sold to another trees which in fact and to his knowledge, though not to the knowledge of the vender, belonged to a third person, with the intention that they should be cutdown and taken away by the vendee, held that the accused had committed the offence of abetment. A. W. N. 1898, 147. In case of abduction by motor, owner of motor is not necessarily an abettor. A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 297=1933 Cr. C. 1128.

Explanation (1)—If a public servant is guilty of an illegal omission of duty made punishable by the Code, and a private person instigates him, he abets the offence of which such public servant is guilty although the abettor, being a private person, could not himself have been guilty of that offence.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Explanation (2)—In the punishment of abetment regard is had to its effect; but the offence is complete notwithstanding that the person abetted refuses to do the thing, or fails involuntarily in doing it, or does it and the expected result does not follow.—Ibid; see also A. I. R. 1935 Sind. 78.

Explanation (3)—Under explanation 3, it makes no difference in the guilt of the abettor that the agent carries out the desired object under a mistaken belief that the act which he is employed to do is an innocent act. 14 C. P. L. R. 192. Explanation (3) applies to abetment generally and not only to abetment by instigation only. 34 Cr. L. J. 623=1933 Cr. C. 853=A. I. R. 5933 All 513.

Explanation (4)—The words "when the abetment of offence is an offence in this explanation, do not mean "when the abetment of an offence is actually committed." They mean when the abetment of an offence is by definition or description an offence under the Code, that is when an offence is punishable under s. 109 or s. 116 or some other provisions of one Code, than the abetment of such abetment is also an offence. 22 C. W. N. 1945; see also A. I. R. 1934 Pesh. 110=1934 Cr. C. 1315=152 Ind. Cas. 893.

Explanation (5)—Under this explanation, it is not necessary to the commission of the offence of abetment of conspiracy that the abettor shall concert the offence with the person who commit it. 21. W. R. Cr. 35.

108A. A person abets an offence within the meaning of this Code who, in British India, abets the commission of any act without and beyond British India which would constitute an offence if committed in British India.

Illustrations.

A, in British India instigates B, a foreigner in Goa, to commit a murder in Goa. A is guilty of abetting murder.

Amendment.—This section has been added by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act (IV of 1898) s. 3.

109. Whoever abets any offence shall, if the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, or punished with the punishment provided for the offence.

Explanation. An act or offence is said to be committed in consequence of abetment when it is committed in consequence of the instigation, or in pursuance of the conspiracy, or with the aid which constitutes the abetment.

Illustration.

(a) * A offers a bribe to B, a public servant, as a reward for showing A some favour in the exercise of B's official functions, B accepts the bribe. A has abetted the offence defined in section 161.

(b) A instigates B to give false evidence. B, in consequence of the instigation, commits that offence. A is guilty of abetting that offence, and is liable to the same punishment as B.

(c) A and B conspire to poison Z. A, in pursuance of the conspiracy, procures the poison, and delivers it to B, in order that he may administer it to Z. B, in pursuance of the conspiracy, administers the poison to Z in A's absence, and thereby causes Z's death. Here B is guilty of murder. A is guilty of abetting that offence by conspiracy, and is liable to the punishment for murder.

Omission.—Abetment by omission is punishable only if the omission is an illegal omission. 9 Bom. L. R. 159. Illegal omission has reference to intention of aiding the doing of a thing. A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 36=36 C. W. N. 722=56 C. L. J. 231=140 Ind. Cas. 550=1933 Cr. C. 71.

Conspiracy.—Under the Indian Criminal Law, conspiracy, except in certain cases is a mere species of abetment, when an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of the conspiracy, and amounts to a distinct offence for each distinct offence abetted by the conspiracy. But under the English law, the agreement or combination to do an unlawful thing by unlawful means amounts, in itself, to a criminal offence. The Penal Code follows the English law of conspiracy only in a few exceptional cases which are made punishable under ss. 311, 400, 402 and 121 A of the Penal Code. In these cases whether an act is done or not or an offence committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, the conspirator is punishable and he can also be punished separately for every offence committed in furtherance of the conspiracy. In all other cases, conspiracy is only one species of "abetment of an offence" and stands on the same footing as abetment by intentional aiding. 24 M. 523. A conspiracy is a mere species of abetment and every time the commission of that offence is abetted, a separate offence of the abetment of that offence is committed and a separate charge lies. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I. 249. But a man cannot be charged as an abettor by conspiracy as well as a perpetrator of the offence abetted cumulatively. 24 M. 523. See also, 24 Ind. Cas. 976. But now see Chapter VA, infra which was enacted following the English law of conspiracy. An agreement to commit the offence of criminal intimidation amounts to a criminal conspiracy. L. Procedure.—Cognizable, if the offence abetted is cognizable—Warrant of summons as to the offence abetted—Bailable or not as in the offence abetted—compoundable or not as in the offence abetted—and the offence is triable by the Court by which the offence abetted is triable.

Charge.—I (name and office of magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That X, Y (the name of the principal, and if the person is unknown in that case say, that an unknown person) on the _____ day of _____ at _____ committed the offence of _____, and that you at _____ abetted the said X Y (or the said unknown person) in the commission of the said offence of _____ which was committed as a result of your abetment, and you have thereby committed an offence punishable under section 109 and _____ of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge (by the said Court).*

In case of joint trial of the principal offender and the abettor, the charge should be as follows :—That you _____, on or about the day _____ of _____ at _____ abetted the commission of the offence of _____ by _____ which was committed as a result of your abetment, and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under section 109 and _____, of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of my Court or within the cognizance of the Court of Session.

110. Whoever abets the commission of an offence shall, if the person abetted does the act with a different intention or knowledge from that of the abettor, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence which would have been committed, if the act had been done with the intention or knowledge of the abettor, and with no other.

Procedure :—Vide Procedure under s. 109.

111. When an act is abetted, and a different act is done, the abettor, is liable for the act done, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had directly abetted it.

Provided the act done was a probable consequence of the abetment, and was committed under the influence of the instigation, or with the aid, or in pursuance of the conspiracy which constituted the abetment.

(a) A instigates a child to put poison into the food of Z, and gives him poison for that purpose. The child in consequence of the instigation, by mistake puts the poison into the food of Y, which is by the side of that of Z. Here, if the child was acting under the influence of A's instigation, and the act done was, under the circumstances, a probable consequence of the abetment, A is liable in the same manner, and to the same extent as if he had instigated the child to put the poison into the food of Y.

(b) A instigates B to burn Z's house. B sets fire to the house, and at the same time commits theft of property there. A though guilty of abetting the burning of the house, is not guilty of abetting the theft; for the theft was a distinct act, and not a probable consequence of the burning.

* Where the offence is tried by a Magistrate omit the words in the brackets.

(c) A instigates B and C to break into an inhabited house at midnight for the purpose of robbery, and provides them with arms for that purpose B and C break into the house, and being resisted by Z, one of the inmates, murder Z. Here, if that murder was the probable consequence of the abetment, A is liable to the punishment provided for murder.

Guilty knowledge.—The test in such a case, must always be whether having regard to the immediate object of the instigation of conspiracy the act done by the principal is one which according to ordinary experience and common sense, the abettor must have foreseen as probable. 6 A. 491 ; see also 43 Ind. Procedure.—Vide Procedure under s. 109.

112. If the act for which the abettor is liable under the last preceding section is committed in addition to the act abetted, and constitutes a distinct offence, the abettor is liable to punishment for each of the offences.

A instigates B to resist by force a distress made by a public servant, B, in consequence, resists that distress. In offering the resistance B, voluntarily causes grievous hurt to the officer executing the distress. As B has committed both the offences of resisting the distress and the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. B is liable to punishment for both these offences ; and, if A knew that B was likely voluntarily to cause grievous hurt in resisting the distress, A will also be liable to punishment for each of the offences.

Notes.—As to the application of ss. 112, 114 and 115 to offences under special or local laws, see s. 40 supra.

113. When an act is abetted with the intention on the part of the abettor of causing a particular effect, and on an act for which the abettor is liable in consequence of the abetment, causes a different effect from that intended by the abettor, the abettor is liable for the effect caused, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if he had abetted the act with the intention of causing that effect ; provided he knew that the act abetted was likely to cause that effect.

Liability of abettor for an effect caused by the act abetted different from that intended by the abettor.

Illustration.

A instigates B to cause grievous hurt to Z. B, in consequence of the instigation, causes grievous hurt to Z. Z dies in consequence. Here, if A knew that the grievous hurt abetted was likely to cause death, A is liable to be punished with the punishment provided for murder.

Procedure.—Vide Procedure under s. 109.

114. Whenever any person, who if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act of offence.

Scope.—This section implies that abetment had been completed before the actual offence was committed. The section deals with a person who would be guilty of abetment independent of any act done at the time of the offence, i.e., a person whose abetment is complete apart from his presence. CHAPTER VI.

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY.

Object of the chapter.—"The sections of the Indian Penal Code which directly deal with the subject of conspiracy are those contained in Chapter V and s. 121 A of that Code. Under the latter provision it is an offence to conspire to commit any offences punishable by s. 121 of the Indian Penal Code or to conspire to deprive the King of the sovereignty of British India or of any part thereof, or to overawe, by means of criminal force or show of criminal force, the Government of India or any Local Government, and to constitute a conspiracy under this section it is not necessary that any act or illegal commission should take place in pursuance thereof. Under s. 107 abetment includes the engaging with one or more person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of a thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing. In other words, except in respect of the offences particularized, in s. 121 A, conspiracy per se is not an offence under the Indian Penal Code.

"On the other hand, by the Common Law of England if two or more persons agree together to do anything contrary to law, or to use unlawful means in carrying out of an object not otherwise unlawful, the persons, who so agree, commit the offence of conspiracy. In other words, conspiracy in England may be defined as an agreement of two or more persons to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means, and the parties to such conspiracy are liable to indictment.

"Experience has shown that dangerous conspiracies are entered into in India which have for their object aims other than the commission of the offences specified in s. 121 A of the Indian Penal Code, and that the existing law is inadequate to deal with modern conditions. The present Bill is designed to assimilate the provisions of the Indian Penal Code to those of the English law with the additional safeguard that in the case of a conspiracy other than a conspiracy to commit an offence some overt act is necessary to bring the conspiracy within the purview of the criminal law. The Bill makes criminal conspiracy a substantive offence, and when such a conspiracy is to commit an offence punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, and no express provision is made in the Code, provides a punishment of the same nature as that which might be awarded for the abetment of such an offence. In other cases of criminal conspiracy the punishment contemplated is imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding six months or with fine or with both." Statement of Objects and Reasons.

The law of conspiracy is no longer in fluid state in India and recognises the principle that a conspiracy need not be established by evidence of an actual agreement between the conspirators and that overt acts raise a presumption of an agreement and knowledge of the purpose of the conspiracy. The connection has to be established with the conspiracy and not with the separate set of different conspirators which are the overt acts of the different individuals in proof of the conspiracy. 20 O. W. N. 760=90 Ind. Cas. 706=26 Cr. L. J. 1602. Conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. An overt act, though it may be specified in the charge, is not necessary. It is not necessary that each conspirator should be aware of all the acts done by each of the conspirators in the course of conspiracy. 92 Ind. Cas. 462=27 Cr. L. J. 286=A. I. R. 1926 Sindh. 174. To constitute criminal conspiracy there must be a common intention, but it is sufficient if it originated with some and others had subsequently joined the original conspirators. Criminal conspiracy might be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. In a charge for the offence of conspiracy the overt acts by which the object of the conspiracy is sought to be attained need not be given. 20 S. L. R. 18=92 Ind. Cas. 419=A. I. R. 1926 Sindh. 171=27 Cr. L. J. 243; 101 Ind. Cas. 458=28 Cr. L. J. 426=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 161. The overt act for the conspiracy consists in the agreement of the parties. 31 C. W. N. 239=109 Ind. Cas. 113(2)=28 Cr. L. J. 241.

CHAPTER VA.

CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY.

120A. When two or more persons agree to do or cause to be done—

Definition of criminal cons- (1) an illegal act, or piracy. (2) an act which is not illegal by illegal means,

such an agreement is designated a criminal conspiracy :

Provided that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy unless some act besides the agreement is done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof.

Explanation—It is immaterial whether the illegal act is the ultimate object of such agreement, or is merely incidental to that object.

Amendment—Inserted by Act 8 of 1913.

Principle.—"The general principle on which the crime of conspiracy is founded is this, that the confederacy of several persons to effect any injurious object creates such a new and additional power to cause injury as requires criminal restraint; although none would be necessary were the same thing proposed or even attempted to be done by any person singly." 7th Rep. Cr. Law. Com., 1843, p. 90.

Scope.—Where the proof of a conspiracy depends upon the proof of the participation of the accused in an overt act which itself amounts to an offence, the proper course is to put the accused on their trial for that offence. Where all that is shown against a person is evidence of his association with any of the conspirators that would not be sufficient to convict him of being one of the parties to the conspiracy and he comes within this section. 39 C. L. J. 151.

Conspiracy.—A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as much a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When to agree to carry it into effect the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced if lawful, is punishable, if for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means. 14 A. L. J. 688. When the proof of a conspiracy depends upon proof of the participation of the accused in an overt act which itself amounts to an offence the proper course is to put the accused on their trial for that offence. 83 Ind. Cas. 513=39 C. L. J. 151. Actual commission of an illegal act need not be proved. 1928 Rang. 118. The offences of conspiracy and offences committed in pursuance of that conspiracy form one and the same transaction. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 53=4 Bur. L. J. 213=27 Cr. L. J. 669=94 Ind. Cas. 717. Conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. Though an overt act may be specified in the charge yet this is not necessary. The acts done by any of the conspirators in furtherance of the purpose of the conspiracy are relevant as merely indication of what the object of the conspiracy was. A. I. R. 1926 Sind. 174=20

S. L. R. 140=27 Cr. L. J. 280=92 Ind. Cas. 462; see also 94 Ind. Cas. 717=A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 53=4 Bur. L. J. 213=27 Cr. L. J. 669. Conspiracy may be established by evidence of the conduct of the accused and surrounding circumstances both before and after the commission of the offence without proving any of his overt acts. 17 Cr. L. J. 233=9 S. L. R. 223=34 Ind. Cas. 649; see also A. I. R. 1926 Sind. 171=20 S. L. R. 18=27 Cr. L. J. 243. A person should not be convicted under s. 120A. for an offence committed before the section was put in the Act. 17 Cr. L. J. 439=20 C. W. N. 292=35 Ind. Cas. 999. Gist of conspiracy is agreement between parties. Place of conspiracy and not act in pursuance of conspiracy determines jurisdiction. A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 333=1933 Cr. C. 1130. Direct proof of agreement between several members is difficult. Question is matter of inference deduced from act of persons concerned. A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 977. Merely because agreement to do illegal act is of itself criminal conspiracy, it cannot be said that offence begins and ends at same time. It may continue so long as person constituting conspiracy remain in agreement. A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 316. A finding that conspiracy existed arrived at by Lower Court is binding on High Court. Ibid.

English law—Conspiracy is the agreement of two or more persons to effect any unlawful purpose whether as their ultimate aim or only as a means to it. This definition presents three points for notice :—(1) the act of agreement, (2) the persons agreeing, (3) the purpose agreed upon.—Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law p. 287. According to English law, "agreement is an act in advancement of the intention which each person has conceived in his mind." Per Lord Chelmsford in Mulcahy v. The Queen, L. B. 3 H.L. at p. 328. It is not mere intention, but the announcement and acceptance of intentions. Bodily movement, by word or gesture, is indispensable to effect it. In order of time, it comes intermediate between the intention and the act agreed upon. But the mere fact of the parties having come to such an arrangement suffices to constitute a conspiracy. Rex v. Gill, 2 B. & Ald. 205. Hence it is not necessary, under the English law to show that they went on to commit some overt act towards carrying it out (Rex v. Eccles, 6 T. R. 628); though this would be necessary in an action of tort for conspiracy. Mogul Steamship v. Mc Gregor, L.R. 21 Q. B. D. 549. So there the offence is complete as soon as the parties have agreed as to their unlawful purpose, although nothing has yet been settled as to the means and devices to be employed for effecting it. Rex v. Gill, supra; Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law pp. 287-288. But under this section in case of a conspiracy other than a conspiracy to commit an offence some overt act is necessary to bring the conspiracy within the purview of the criminal law. Vide proviso.

Following the English law, in the United States it is also held that "agreeing together" constitutes a sufficient act, no steps pursuant to the agreement being required. Bishop's Cr. Law. Vol. II § 172.

Two elements—We find two elements, in case of conspiracy,—each distinct from the other, and not commonly operating together but, each in its own separate class of cases, dominate the law of conspiracy. The one is combination, and the other attempt. Bishop's Cr. Law Vol. § 173.

Combination.—The very name of the crime indicates that it is essentially one of combination; one man cannot by himself conspire. Kenny's Outlines of Cr. Law p. 288. Criminal conspiracy consists in an unlawful combination of two or more persons to do that which is contrary to law, to cause a public mischief (R. v. Brailsford, 1905, 2 K. B. 730, 745), or to do that which is wrongful and harmful towards another person. Quinn v. Leatham, (1901) A. C. 495. In R. v. Vinsent, 9 C. & P. 91, Anderson B. laid it down that conspiracy is "a crime which consists either in a combination and agreement by persons to do some illegal act, or a combination and agreement to effect a legal purpose by illegal means." Russ Cr. p. 146; see also O'Connel v. R., 11 Cl. & F. 155; R. v. Peck, 9 A. & E. 686; R. v. King, 7 Q. B. 782; R. v. Jones, 4 B. & Ad. 345. In many circumstances, if two or more combine to do a wrong,—whether as a means or as contemplated end,—such mere combining endangers or disturbs the community more than would the executed wrong accomplished by a single will. This is the central idea in the law of conspiracy. Bishop's Cr. Law Vol. II § 173 see also Mogul S. Co. v. Mc Gregor, 21 Q. B. D. 544. Under the English law husband and wife are considered as one person and as such an unlawful combination by him and her alone does not amount to a conspiracy. 1 Hawking's P. C. C. 72 s. 8. But they can severally or jointly conspire with other persons. R' v. White house, 6 Cox. 38. One alone cannot conspire. Harrington v. Errington, 5

Mood. 221 ; R. v. Thorp, 5 Mood. 221. A person may however be charged to conspire with a person either known or unknown. 1 Hawk. C. 72, s. 8 ; 3 Chit. Cr. L. 1141 ; R. v. Hearne, cited in R. v. Kinnersley, 1 Str. 195, 196. But where two persons were indicted for conspiring together (no other parties being alleged), and one was convicted and the jury disagreed as to the other, it was held that the conviction of the one cannot stand. R. v. Manning, 12 Q. B. D. 341 = 53 L. J. M. C. 85 ; see also 39 C. L. J. 264 ; 45 C. L. J. 204. Similarly where three were charged jointly with conspiring together, and one pleaded guilty, but the other two were tried and acquitted, it was held that the sentence imposed on the one who had pleaded guilty could not stand. R. v. Plummer (1902) 2 K. B. 339 ; Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362, 392, 393 ; Russ Cr. p. 147 ; 30 C. W. N. 94. But a person may be charged with conspiring with a dead person. R. v. Nichols, 2 Str. 1227 ; R. v. Scott, 3 Burr. 1262 ; R. v. Kenrick, 5 Q. B. 339.

Attempt.—In other circumstances, there is no special evil in the combination, and its indictable quality does not consist in this linking of wills for wrong. Then the thing contemplated must be such as would be indictable if performed by one, and the conspiracy is punishable simply because it is an attempt. Bishop's Cr. Law Vol. II § 173. So few things are left so doubtful in the criminal law as the point at which a combination of several persons for a common object becomes unlawful. 3 Chit. Cr. L. 1130 ; Russ Cr. 146. On this point, Willes J. observed : "A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as a design rests in intention only it is not indictable. When two agreed to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means. And so far as proof goes conspiracy, as Grose J. said in R. v. Brisac, 4 East. 171 is generally a matter of inference deduced from certain criminal acts of the parties accused, done in pursuance of an apparent criminal purpose in common between them. The number and the compact give weight, and cause danger, and this is more especially the case in a conspiracy like that charged in this indictment. Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 317 and accepted by Lord Cairns in the House of Lords at p. 374 ; see also Quinn v. Leatham, (1901) A. C. 495, 529 ; see also R. v. Brailsford, (1905) 2 K. B. 730, 746. So except in cases provided in the proviso, the gist of the offence of conspiracy lies, not in doing the act, or effecting the purpose for which the conspiracy is formed, nor in attempting to do them, nor in inciting others to do them, but in the forming of the scheme or agreement between the parties. Russ Cr. 147 citing 1 East. P. C. 462 ; R. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1167 ; R. v. Spragg, 2 Burr. 993 ; R. v. Rispal, 3 Burr. 1320 ; O'Connell v. R., 11 Cl. & F. 155. The external or overt act of the crime is concert by which mutual consent to a common purpose is exchanged. R. v. Plumer, (1902) 2 K. B. 339, 348 ; Mulcahy v. R., L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 328 ; 42 C. 957 ; 31 C. W. N. 239.

Illegal Act.—The word "illegal" is applicable to every thing which is an offence or which is prohibited by law, or which furnishes ground for a civil action, (Vide, S. 43). The words illegal and unlawful have the same meaning under the Code. Vide, 1st Rep. s. 658. In the English common law the words used are "unlawful purpose." In connection with the definition of conspiracy under the English Common Law, Mr. Kenny says : "The term 'unlawful' is here used in a sense which is unique ; and, unhappily, has never yet been defined precisely. The purpose which it comprises appear to be of the following species :—(1) Agreements to commit a substantive crime (Reg. v. Darlitt, 11 Cox. 676 ; Reg. v. Whit Church, L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 420.) (2) Agreements to commit any tort that is malicious (Reg. v. Druitt, 10 Cox. 592.) (3) Agreements to commit a breach of contract under circumstances that are peculiarly injurious to the public. (Virtue v. Lord Clive, 4 Burr. 2473.) (4) Agreements to do certain other acts, which (unlike all those hitherto mentioned) are not breaches of law at all, but which nevertheless are outrageously immoral or else are in some way, extremely injurious to the public" Outlines of Criminal Law p. 289. According to the American Jurists the word "unlawful" signifies neither "indictable" nor "criminal" though it includes both ; but it means "contrary to law", which may refer either to the criminal or civil law. Bishop's Cr. Law. Vol. II § 171. "It is enough" to quote the words of Cockburn C. J. "if the acts agreed to be done, although not criminal are wrongful ; that it amount to civil wrong." Reg. v. Warburton, L. R. 1 C. C. 274, 276. It need not affect the community or public as such as distinguished from an individual. This principle however must not be overrestrained. Bishop's Cr. Law. Vol. II § 178.

"The crime of conspiracy is complete if two or more than two should agree to do an illegal thing, that is to effect some thing which is in itself unlawful or to effect by unlawful means some thing which in itself may be indifferent or even lawful. It has accordingly been always held to be the law that the gist of the offence of conspiracy is the bare engagement or association to break the law, whether any act be done in pursuance thereof by the conspirator or not." R. v. O'Connell, 11 Cl. & F. 155 (233, 235) cited in 42 C. 957=19 C. W. N. 676=29 Ind. Cas. 513; see also 31 Bom. L. R. 515.

Conspiracies to commit offence.—Every conspiracy to commit an offence punishable by law is an indictable offence. Where the conspiracy is executed, it appears to merge in the completed offence. Conspiracies of this kind are merely auxiliary to the law which creates the principal crime. Wright on Conspiracy, 80; Russ. Cr. Law 150. A person may be convicted of conspiracy to commit a crime of which he could not, if he stood alone, be convicted. Thus, a woman has been held to have been properly committed of conspiring with others to administer drugs to herself, or use instruments to herself, with intent to procure abortion, when it was proved that she believed erroneously that she was with child. R. v. Whit Church, 24 Q. B. 420; Russ. Cr. 151.

Illegal means.—When an indifferent or lawful act is done by unlawful means, the agreement to do such act amounts to conspiracy. R. v. O'Connell, 11 Cl. & F. 155, 233

Proviso.—The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy is the agreement itself and when the object of the agreement is to do an unlawful act and not to do a lawful act by unlawful means, it is sufficient to specify the unlawful object without specifying the means adopted by all or any of the conspirators to gain this object. 101 Ind. Cas. 458=28 Cr. L. J. 426=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 161. Where it was found that the accused with another person went to a place and met the second accused for the purpose of purchasing from him fire arms and ammunition, but the arms themselves were not produced at any of the meetings and there was not evidence that the second accused possessed the goods at the time of the negotiations. Held, that the accused may be convicted under s. 120B, I. P. Code, because the overt act for the conspiracy consists in the agreement of the parties and the same was proved. 31 C. W. N. 239=28 Cr. L. J. 241.

120B. (1) Whoever is a party to a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, shall, where no express provision is made in this Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy, be punished in the same manner as if he had abetted such offence.

(2) Whoever is a party to a criminal conspiracy other than a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence, punishable as aforesaid shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding six months or with fine or with both.

Scope.—The words "where no express provision is made in this Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy," refer entirely to the quantum of the punishment to be inflicted in the event of conviction under the section and do not lay down any limitation against a charge under this section even when the accused has actually committed an offence under some other section of the Penal Code. 2 Mys. L. J. 11. The above expression does not mean that when there is proof of an abetment of an offence the charge should be for abetment. It only includes cases where there is express provision for the punishment of the particular conspiracy alleged, and the only such case in the Code is under section 121 A, Indian Penal Code. 10 S. L. R. 69=17 Cr. L. J. 366=35 Ind. Cas. 670. The mere fact that the transactions alleged were independent and occurred on different dates, is not inconsistent with a general conspiracy. 27 C. W. N. 821. Conspiracy may be proved by circumstances. When one of two accused has been acquitted the other one cannot be convicted. 81 Ind. Cas. 824=39 C. L. J. 264; 45 C. L. J. 204; 28 Cr. L. J. 419. Omission to specify in the charge the persons who were parties to the conspiracy is an irregularity curable.

Procedure—The offence under sub-section (1) is cognizable, if the offence which is the object of the conspiracy is cognizable, but not otherwise. A warrant or summons should issue according as a warrant or summons may issue for the offence which is the object to the conspiracy. Bailable or not bailable according as the offence which is the object of the conspiracy is bailable or not. It is not compoundable. It is triable by the Court of Session when the offence which is the object of the conspiracy is triable exclusively by such Court: but in the case of all other offences it is triable by the Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

If it falls under sub-section (2) it is—Non-cognizable—Summons should issue—Bailable—Not compoundable and is triable by the Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge—I (name of offence of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____, agreed with (name of the conspirator), to do (or caused to be done) an illegal act, to wit _____ [or an act to wit _____ (which is not illegal) by illegal means to wit _____] and you did some acts, to wit _____ besides the agreement in pursuance of the said agreement to commit the offence of _____ punishable with death (or transportation, etc.) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 120B of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court.)

CHAPTER VI.

OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE STATE.

121. Whoever wages war against the Queen, or attempts to wage such war, or abets the waging of such war, shall be punished with death or transportation for life, or imprisonment for life, or shall also be liable to fine.

Waging or attempting to wage war, or abetting waging of war, against the Queen.

Illustrations.

(a) A joins an insurrection against the Queen. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A in India abets an insurrection against the Queen's Government of Ceylon by sending arms to the insurgents. A is guilty of abetting the waging of war against the Queen.

Amendment.—The words within quotations have been substituted by Act 16 of 1921.

Waging War.—A person who takes part in an organised armed attack on the constituted authorities, that attack having for its object the subversion of British Raj and the establishment of another Government is guilty of an offence under this section. 42 Mad. L. J. 108. Where in order to establish a republic in this country the accused actively suggested to his audience that they should use violence or stimulated them to use violence to achieve that purpose, he is guilty under this section. 24 Bom. L. R. 885. Under the English law, mere words spoken or written, however wicked and abominable, if they do not relate to any act or design then actually on foot against the life of the king, or the levying of a war against him, and in contemplation of the speaker, do not amount to treason under the Indian Penal Code, the waging or levying of war and the abetting of it are put upon the same footing by section 121. That is the abetting of the waging of war is under the Code as much an offence of treason as the waging of war itself. According to the general law as to abetment (s. 108, Expl. 2), to constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused. This applies to the abetment of the waging of war against the king, as much as to the abetment of any other offence under the Code. The only difference created between the former offence and other offence is that, while, under the general law as to abetment, a distinction is made, for the purposes of punishment between abetment which is succeeded and abetment which has failed, section 121 does away with that distinction so far as the offence of war is concerned, and deals equally with an abettor whose instigation has led to a war and one whose instigation has taken no effect whatever. Per Chandra Varkar J in 12 Bom. L. R. 105=5 Ind. Cas. 854=34 B. 394. So long as a man only tries to inflame feeling, to excite a state of mind, he is not guilty of anything more than sedition. It is only when he definitely and clearly incites to action that he is guilty of instigating and therefore of abetting the waging of war. Per Heaton J. in ibid. Attack on officers in pursuance of conspiracy to overthrow Government amounts to waging war. 14 Cr. L. J. 514=20 Ind. Cas. 994=6 Bur. L. T. 146. If a conspirator has formed the intention to leave a conspiracy and ceases to be a conspirator by his own act and intention when the other conspirators wage war, he cannot be held guilty under section 121 of the Penal Code. 6 Bur. L. T. 153=21 Ind. Cas. 658=14 Cr. L. J. 610. The law contained in this section is not a reproduction of the English law of treason in its entirety, nor did the framers of the section intend it to be so. 37 C. 467=14 C. W. N. 1114=7 Ind. Cas. 359=11 Cr. L. J. 458. If it is only inflaming of the feelings it is only sedition. But when there is a clear incitement to action, then there is instigation and consequently of abetting the waging of war. A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 284=24 Bom. L. R. 885=24 Cr. L. J. 923=75 Ind. The validity of a conviction under s. 121 is not affected by the striking off of the convictions of other offences, forming component parts of the offence of waging war. 90 Ind. Cas. 297=26 Cr. L. J. 1513.

Punishment.—As regards principle and measure of punishment, vide U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I. 252. Confiscation of property may be ordered under this section. 34 C. 986=11 C. W. N. 1046=6 C. L. Cas. 299.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused person) as follows:—

That you, on or about the _____ day of _____, at, waged war (or attempted to wage war, or abetted the waging of war) against His Majesty the King Emperor of India and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 121 of the Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

In a trial under this section the sanction of the Local Government required under s. 196, Cr. Pro. Code must be strictly proved in the manner as laid down in section 78 of the Evidence Act. L. B. R. (1872—1892), 389; 37 C. 467=14 C. W. N. 1114=11 Cr. L. J. 453; 16 P. R. 1890 Cr.

Where the several persons were charged under ss. 121, 121 A, 123, I. P. Code, and when the charge merely purported to place before the Court different aspects of the same transaction, the joint trial of the several accused on different charges was not bad for multifariousness. 37 C. 467=14 C. W. N. 1114=7 Ind. Cas. 359. In a case under s. 121 I. P. Code, even if the charge does not set out the speeches alleged to be seditious, it would not vitiate the proceedings. A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 106=25 Cr. L. J. 401=77 Ind. Cas. 481.

121A. Whoever, within or without British India, conspires to commit any of the offences punishable by section 121, or to deprive the Queen of the sovereignty of British India or of any part thereof, or conspires to overawe, by means of criminal force or the show of criminal force, the Government of India or any Local Government, shall be punished with transportation for life or any shorter term, or with imprisonment of either description which may extend to ten years "and shall also be liable to fine."

Explanation.—To constitute a conspiracy under this section it is not necessary that any act or illegal omission shall take place in pursuance thereof.

Amendment.—This section has been added by Act 27 of 1870.

Scope.—The provisions of the law however, are, comprehensive and no formidable elements either in men or means are required to satisfy the definition of conspiracy to wage war. No act or illegal omission is necessary for such a conspiracy, the mere agreement of two or more being sufficient. 38 C. 569. The essence of an offence under this section is the agreement to do all or any of the unlawful acts mentioned in the section. It is not necessary that any act or illegal omission should take place in pursuance of the agreement. 35 M. 247. See also 16 C. W. N. 1105. Conspiracy to change form of Government without criminal force is no offence under s. 121 A. But conspiracy to establish complete independence or perfectly democratic Government outside the British Empire comes within s. 121 A. 1933 A. L. J. 799=34 Cr. L. J. 967=1933 Cr. C. 1202=A. I. R. 1933 All. 690. Conspiracy to deprive King-Emperor of sovereignty of British India is sufficient. It is immaterial whether conspiracy is expected to succeed in life time of the present king Emperor. Ibid. Conspiracy is to be inferred from beliefs, associations and activities of the accused and from their statement in Court. When identity of beliefs and association are established much evidence is not necessary to prove conspiracy. Ibid. Mere agreement to do illegal act is sufficient. Actual act or omission in pursuance of conspiracy is not necessary. Ibid. To prove correspondence with particular person in foreign country it is not necessary to prove actual fact of written by such person. Proof of correspondence with some men in conspiracy with such person is sufficient. Ibid. Regard should be had to provisions of Penal Code and not to doctrines of political philosophers. Conviction under ss. 85, 121 and 121 A held proper when accused since release were plotting against Government and when he was personally responsible for death of innocent persons. Ibid.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you , on or about the day of , at [within British India (or without British India) conspired to wage war (or abet the waging of war) against His Majesty the King-Emperor of India, or conspired to deprive the King-Emperor of the sovereignty of British India or any part thereof, or conspired to overawe by means of criminal force or show of criminal force the Government of India or any Local Government, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 121 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Sanction—Under s. 196 of the criminal Procedure Code no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under this section unless the prosecution is instituted under the authority of Government. 15 C. W. N. 98=8 Ind. Cas. 1059. The requirement of law that no complaint under s. 121 A of the Penal Code should be made without special authority from Government is no doubt due in part to the fact that a charge framed in terms of that section is calculated to produce an impression that a political situation of the gravest character has arisen. 15 C. W. N. 592=38 C. 569.

Evidence—When once the existence of conspiracy is established, the sayings and doings of conspirators, though in the absence of each other, are evidence against fellow conspirators, according to section 10 of the Evidence Act. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I. 148. It is not necessary to establish by direct evidence that the accused persons did enter into an agreement to conspire. The criminality of the conspiracy lies in the concerted intention, and once reasonable grounds are made out for belief in the existence of the conspiracy amongst the accused, the acts of each conspirator in furtherance of its object are evidence against each of the others; and this, whether such acts, were done before or after his entry into the combination in his presence, or in his absence. 16 C. W. N. 1105=15 Cr. L. J. 517; see also 37 C. 467=4 C. W. N. 1114=11 Cr. R. L. J. 453. Severity of sentence varies with seriousness of acts of each accused. 135 Ind. Cas. 113=1931 A. L. J. 94=54 All. 115=A. I. R. 1931 All. 304 (S. B.). Section 497 (1) does not apply to application for bail by persons accused under s. 121 A. A. I. R. 1931 All. 356=32 Cr. L. J. 1271=53 A. 931=1931 A. L. J. 515=134 Ind. Cas. 842. Where accused is not alleged to be dangerous criminals nor charged with having done any illegal act in pursuance of conspiracy, and there is no probability of accused being sentenced to transportation for life, he should be released on bail. A. I. R. 1931 All. 356=53 A. 231. Where complaint mentions names of conspirators, charge need not contain names. 1933 Cr. C. 433=A. I. R. 1933 All. 498. Where Cawnpore is one centre of conspiracy and correspondence was carried from and to Cawnpore, conspirators can be tried at Cawnpore. A. I. R. 1933 All. 498.

122. Whoever collects men, arms, or ammunition, or otherwise prepares to wage war with the intention of either waging or being prepared to wage war against the Queen, shall be punished with transportation for life or imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding ten years, "and shall also be liable to fine."

Amendment—The words within quotations have been substituted by Act XVI of 1921.

Scope—The acts made punishable by this section cannot be considered as attempts; they are in truth preparations made for committing the offence of waging war. Such acts would seem to constitute the doer an abettor, if done in aid of others who are waging or who intended to wage war.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure—Non-cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the day of , at collected men (or arms or ammunition) with the intention of waging war (or being prepared to wage war) against His Majesty the King Emperor, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 122 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

123. Whoever, by any act, or by any illegal omission, conceals the existence of a design to wage war against the Queen, intending by such concealment to facilitate, or knowing it to be likely that such concealment will facilitate, the waging of such war, shall be punished with imprisonment with intent to facilitate design to wage war.

ment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The persons hereby comprised are the same as those in the previous sections. The offence punished by this section is like a species of abetment by aid, such as is mentioned in section 118 of the preceding Chapter. The concealment here may be either by an act or by an illegal omission; but must be a concealment with an intention and knowledge which show a wish to facilitate the execution proved in to wage war: and the existence of the design must be of desi.—Morgan and Macpherson 103.

Procedure.—Non cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the day of , at , concealed the existence of a design of waging war against the King Emperor, intending by such concealment to facilitate for knowing it to be likely that such concealment would facilitate) the waging of such war, and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 123 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

124. Whoever, with the intention of inducing or compelling the Governor-General of India, or, the Governor of any Presidency, or a Lieutenant-Governor, or a Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, or of the Council of any Presidency, to exercise or refrain from exercising in any manner any of the lawful powers of such Governor-General, Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Member of Council, assaults or wrongfully restrains, or attempts wrongfully to restrain, or overawes, by means of criminal force, or the show of criminal force, or attempts so to overawe, such Governor-General, Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Member of Council, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Non cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the day of , at , with the intention of inducing (or compelling) the Right Hon'ble A. B., the Governor General of India (or the Governor of the Presidency, or the Lieutenant Governor of 'or the Hon'ble A. B., a Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, or the Council of the Governor of the Presidency) to exercise (or refrain from exercising) a lawful power as such assaulted (or wrongfully restrained or attempted wrongfully to restrain; or overawed by means of criminal force or by the show of criminal force) such , and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 124 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

124A. Whoever, by words, either spoken or written, or by signs, or by visible presentation, or otherwise, brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards Her Majesty or the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life or any shorter term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment which may be added, or with fine.

Explanation 1.—The expression "disaffection" includes disloyalty and all feelings of enmity.

Explanation 2.—Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt, or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 3.—Comments expressing disapprobation of the administrative or other action of the Government, without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt, or disaffection, do not constitute an offence under this section.

Amendment—S. 124A has been substituted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (IV of 1898) s. 4, original s. 124 as inserted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act. 22 of 1870 s. 5.

Gist of the offence.—The gist of the offence of sedition lies in the intention of the writer and that intention is not to be gathered from isolated or stray passages here and there. It must be gathered from a fair and generous reading of the article in respect of which the charge has been laid. In gathering the intention allowance must be made for a certain amount of latitude to writers in the public press. The section is in such wide terms that unless it is very strictly or narrowly construed there is real danger that legitimate criticism may be stifled altogether. 46 C. L. J. 156=105 Ind. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 306. So long as a man only tries to inflame feeling, he is guilty of sedition. Disaffection and disapprobation.—Any one who by any of the means referred to in the section excites or attempts to excite feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in this section, no matter how guardedly he may attempt to conceal his real object. The word 'disaffection' means disloyalty. 20A. 55 (F. B.). The meaning of the Explanation in this section is that a loyal subject who disapproves of Government measures is not to be deemed disloyal or disaffected on that account if, notwithstanding his disapprobation of such measures, he is ready to obey and support government. If he is at heart loyal, he is not disaffected, merely because he disapprobates certain measures of Government. 22B 152 (F. B.). Disaffection means a feeling contrary to affection, in other words dislike or hatred. Disapprobation means simply disapproval. It is quite possible to disapprove of a man's sentiment or action and to like him. It is sufficient for the purposes of the section that the words used are calculated to excite feelings of ill-will against the Government and to hold it up to the hatred and contempt of the people, and that they were used with the intention to create such feeling. 19 C. 35. Disaffection means simply the absence of affection. It means hatred, enmity, dislike, hostility, contempt, and every form of ill-will towards the Government. Disloyalty is perhaps the best general term comprehending every possible form of bad feeling towards the Government. The amount or the intensity of the disaffection is absolutely immaterial except perhaps in dealing with the question of punishment. It is also absolutely immaterial whether any feelings of disaffection have been excited or not by the publication in question. The section places on absolutely the same footing the successful exciting of feelings of disaffection and the unsuccessful attempt to excite them. The offence consists in exciting or attempting to excite in others certain feelings towards the Government. 22B. 112. See also 30B. 421; 7 C. L. J. 49; 35 C. 945; 32 M. 384; 32 M. 338; 12 Bom. L. Although conditions in India now are much more in favour of free expression than about 20 years ago, yet to say that the object of the Government is to divide and rule and to destroy the language, culture, art etc of the people and to describe the Government as based upon brute force, cannot fail to cause feeling of disaffection and contempt if not hatred in the mind of Indian readers. To represent that Penal Code enforced by Government attacks every religion amounts to offence under s. 124A. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 885.

The gist of the offence under this section is the bringing or attempting to bring into hatred or contempt or the exciting or attempting to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or Government established in British India. The opening words of the law in section, "whoever by words, either spoken or written or by signs, or by visible representation or otherwise" merely indicate the various means by which the offence may be committed. The whole sentence might have been shortly expressed by saying "whoever by any means brings etc." Words of any kind are by no means a necessary element of the offence. It may be committed without any words being spoken or uttered. 5 M. L. T. 393=9 Cr. L. J. 456=32 M. 384=2 Ind. Cas. 33. It is not enough that a person writes certain words. He may write a seditious pamphlet and keep it locked up in his drawer. He has not thereby committed an offence. Similarly, it is not enough that he entertains an intention to excite disaffection, to bring him within the scope of the section. The offence constituted by it requires an act coupled with a distinct intention. 32 M. 384=9 Cr. L. J. 456.

Strictly speaking, the publication of a seditious article in a newspaper is not ordinarily the work of either of the writer alone, or of the proprietor alone or of the editor alone, or even of all the three together. The maxim qui facit per alium facit per se applies and the publication is held to be the act of the person or persons who authorized it, and the grant of the authority may be proved by direct evidence, or as a reasonable inference from the conduct of the parties and all the surrounding circumstances. In each case it is a pure question of fact, to be proved like any other fact by direct evidence or as a reasonable inference from facts proved or admitted, and considered in relation to all the circumstances of the particular case. 32 M. 338=2 Ind. Cas. 193=5 M. L. T. 415=9 Cr. L. J. 506. The owner of the press is presumed to know contents of seditious book that is being printed in his press. 131 Ind. Cas. 671=53 C. L. J. 182=32 Cr. L. J. 742=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 349. But proprietor of press who is away and is not aware of the publication cannot be convicted under s. 124A. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 182=32 P. L. R. 740=12 Lah. 483=32 Cr. L. J. 681=131 Ind. Cas. 273.

The fact of the accused making manuscript copies of seditious printed articles and posting them with a covering letter requesting the addressee and others to circulate the same amongst others, when the packet was intercepted by another person and never reached the addressee, amounts only to an attempt of an offence under section 124A. I. P. Code. 39 C. 522=16 Ind. Cas. 327=13 Cr. L. J. 679. But sending a seditious matter by post addressed not to a private individual but to the representative of a large number of men (e.g., captain of a school) amounts to publication if it is opened by anybody. 16 C. W. N. 812=39 C. 606=13 Cr. L. J. 289. Mere printing is sufficient and publication is not necessary. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 276=30 Cr. L. J. 707=117 Ind. Cas. 49. It cannot be said that the speech even if it brought the Government into hatred and contempt can be considered to be innocuous because contempt in existence cannot be further increased. A. I. R. 1930 All. 324=31 Cr. L. J. 429=122 Ind. Cas. 596. If certain alleged facts are used as a peg on which to hang seditious comments, the truth of the facts does not excuse the seditious commentary. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 371=31 Cr. L. J. 168=120 Ind. Cas. 798; see also 34 C. W. N. 1095=1931 Cr. C. 401. Mere reference to exploitation of India will not constitute an offence under the section. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 892=31 P. L. R. 688=129 Ind. Cas. 700.

In order to use articles than that complained of as seditious for the purpose of showing the meaning of certain expressions used in the article complained of and also to show the intention of the writer, it is necessary to show who the writer was and that all the articles produced were by the same hand. The writer may be guilty of exciting or attempting to excite feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A of the Penal Code, no matter how guardedly he may attempt to conceal his real object, but the printer and publisher cannot be punished if the concealed objects is not established by evidence on the record. A man may comment upon any measure or act of Government, whether legislative or executive, and freely express his opinion upon it. He may express the strongest condemnation of such measures and he may do so severely, and even unreasonably, perversely, or unfairly. So long as he confines himself to that, he will be protected by the explanation. But if he goes beyond, and, whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred of his readers—as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the people—then he is guilty under s. 124A and the explanation will not save him. 22 B. 112; 15 C. W. N. 141=11 Cr. L. J. 667; 10 Bom. L. R. 348=8 Cr. L. J. 583.

There can be separate conviction and sentence for attempting to promote feeling of hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects and for attempting to excite disaffection against the Government established by law in British India. 4 S. L. R. 55=8 Ind. Cas. 203=11 Cr. L. J. 583.

The essence of the crime of sedition consists in the intention with which the language is used. But this intention must be judged primarily by the language itself. Intention for this purpose is really no more than meaning. When a man is charged in respect of anything he has written or said, the meaning of what he said or wrote must be taken to be his meaning, and that meaning is what his language would be understood to mean by the people to whom it is addressed. 10 Bom. L. R. 848=8 Cr. L. J. 28. If a particular article is charged as being seditious on the ground that it says more than appears on the face of it, it is the duty of the prosecution to show that it has in fact the guilty meaning or intention attributed to it. 38 C. 214=12 Cr. L. J. 348.

Where the publication of articles in a newspaper evinces a clear attempt to create feelings of hostility to Government, it cannot be urged in defence that the accused had failed in his endeavour. If the attempt is made, the accused cannot shelter himself behind the fact that those to whom he may have addressed himself have either been too discreet or too temperate to act upon the obvious meaning of the teaching. 2 Bom. L. R. 286.

To determine whether an attempt to commit the offence mentioned in section 124A is committed by the publication of certain articles, it is necessary to determine what is their meaning, what is the innuendo they convey, and what is the covert meaning, if any, they have. The probable or natural effect of the words used must then be decided, that is, whether they are calculated to bring into hatred or contempt the Government, or excite against it feelings of disloyalty or enmity. 2 Bom. L. R. 304. When a compilation is made with the determination to corrupt the minds of the children and thus comes within the terms of s. 124A, it can be proscribed by the Government. 47A. 298=86 Ind. Cas. 55. A publisher of an article must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard to the character and description of people expected to read them. 30 Cr. L. J. 850=117 Ind. Cas. 834=A. L. R. 1929 Cal. 277. Intention is co-related with natural consequence. A. I. R. 1931 All. 324; see also A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 31. Memory of witness's testimony as to actual words should not be relied on. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 371. Truth does not excuse seditious commentary. Ibid.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—That you—on or about—day of,—at—, by writing (or speaking) the words (mention them) (or by signs or visible representation, or otherwise) brought or attempted to bring into hatred or contempt (or excited or attempted to excite disaffection towards) His Majesty the King Emperor (or the Government established by law in British India) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 124A, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

Privy Council Appeal.—Question whether law was properly applied to language used by accused in a seditious case partakes so much of the nature of a question of fact that P. CHAPTER VII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO THE ARMY "NAVY AND AIR FORCE."*

Notes.—The present chapter punishes persons who, not being themselves soldiers or sailors, abet soldiers and sailors in committing gross breaches or discipline. The laws which govern the Army and Navy cannot generally reach such offenders ; and the other provisions of this Code do not reach such offenders because the act of insubordination, etc, which they abet, however grave as a breach of military discipline, may be no offence, or a very trivial one, under this Code. Hence the necessity of this Chapter which punishes, but not with the severity of military Penal law, the abettors of soldiers and sailors in certain breaches of discipline.—Morgan and Macpherson.

* Substituted by Act X of 1927.

131. Whoever abets the committing of mutiny by an officer, soldier, "sailor or airman",* in the army, 'navy or air force,' of the Queen, or attempts to seduce any such officer, soldier, "sailor or air man"* from his allegiance or his duty, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—In this section the words "officer" "soldier" "sailor"† and "air man" include any person subject to the "Army Act, the Indian Army Act, 1911, the Naval Discipline Act or that Act as modified by the Indians Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934‡ or the Indian Air Force Act, 1932‡ the Air Force Act. as the case may be."‡

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows ;—

That you on or about the day of, at abetted the commission of mutiny by an officer (or soldier, or sailor or airman) in the Army (or Navy, or Airforce) of the King Emperor from his allegiance (or his duty, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 131 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

Note.—The first part of this section relates to offence of abetting mutiny. The offence contemplated is an abetment which is not followed by actual mutiny or which, supposing actual mutiny follows, is not the cause of mutiny. The offence of mutiny consists in extreme insubordination, as if a soldier resists by force, or if a number of soldiers raise against or oppose their military superiors, such acts proceeding from alleged or pretended grievances of a military nature. Acts of a riotous nature directed against the Government of civil authorities rather than against military superior seem also to constitute mutiny. A charge brought under this section must be supported by proof of instigation or other mode of abetment (section 107), and of the object, i. e. to excite the mutiny.—Morgan and Macpherson.

132. Whoever abets the committing of mutiny by an officer, soldier, "sailor or airman"* in the army, navy "or airforce"* of the Queen, shall, if mutiny be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with death or with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The offence here punished is abetment when actual mutiny is the consequence of it. The evidence should show that mutiny has been committed and the previous abetment.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, —on or about the—day of—at—, abetted the commission of mutiny by—, an officer (or soldier, sailor or air man in the Army [(Navy or Air force) of the King Emperor] and mutiny was committed in consequence of that abetment, and thereby committed the offence under section 132 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or the High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

* Substituted by Act X of 1927.

† Added by Act 35 of 1934.

‡ Substituted by Act XIV of 1932.

133. Whoever abets an assault by an officer, soldier "sailor, or airman,"*

Abetment of assault by soldier, sailor or airman on his superior officer when in execution of his office.

in the army, navy "or airforce"* of the Queen, on any superior officer being in the execution of his office, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The very comprehensive definition of assault given in section 351 may be referred to in order to ascertain the offence; (as defined by this Code) of which the abetment is made punishable by this and the following section. The assault here meant may probably be that which the Mutiny Acts and Articles of War provide against, namely the striking a superior officer, or using or offering any violence against him when he is on duty. The words "any superior officer" of course exclude from this provision such assaults as one private soldier may commit on another. But they clearly comprehend all officers whether commissioned or non-commissioned,———for a non-commissioned officer is a superior officer in relation to a private soldier, as a Captain is to a subaltern, and the Commanding Officer of a Regiment to all the officers and men under his command. It is an inseparable part of this offence, that the officer should be assaulted while in the execution of his office. An officer is in the execution of his office not only when he is performing a prescribed duty, but also when he is discharging a duty arising out of the exigency of the moment. Thus an officer seeing a soldier out of quarters after-hours or improperly dressed or drunk in the streets of a town or transgressing any order or usage of the service, would at all times be in the execution of his duty, and therefore of his office, in ordering the soldier to his barracks or directing such other measure as might be necessary. It must, however, be remembered, that an important ingredient in the soldier's offence is that he offers violence knowingly to his officer. If he strikes a person whom he or his abettor really does not know to be an officer, the offence of abetment which is here made punishable so severely has not been committed by the person who abets the blow.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—That you—on or about the—day of—, at—, abetted an assault by—an officer (or soldier, or sailor or airman) in the Army (or Navy or Air force) of the King Emperor on—a superior officer being in the execution of his office, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 133, of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried [by the said Court (in cases tried by Magistrate omit these words)] on the said charge.

134. Whoever abets an assault by an officer, soldier, "sailor or air man"*

Abetment of such assault, if the assault is committed. in the army, "navy or air force"* of the Queen, on any superior officer being in the execution of his office, shall, if such assault be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—An enhanced punishment is given, if the assault is actually committed.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at abetted an assault by an officer (or soldier or sailor or air man) in the Army (or Navy or Air force) of the King-Emperor on a superior officer being in execution of his office, and which he committed in consequence of such abetment, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 134 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or the High Court), etc.

135. Whoever abets the desertion of any officer, soldier, "sailor or air man"* in the army "navy or air force"* of the Queen, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—The offence of desertion from the Army or Navy consists in this, that the officer, soldier or sailor is unlawfully absent from his duty, and has no intention of returning to it. Whether he departs without leave from his regiment or whether, having leave of absence, he over-stays his leave, if his intention is not to return to his duty and his regiment, he is a deserter. This intention not to return is essential to desertion, and without it, the offence becomes one which is known in military law as "absence without leave," an offence of a much lighter kind. This section, it seems, punishes the abetment of desertion only when the desertion actually takes place. Morgan and Macpherson. The word "soldier" in section 135 I. P. Code must be interpreted as in the Explanation to s. 131 of the Code. The definition of the word "soldier" given in the Indian Articles of War is expressly confined to those Articles and is a very limited one. 56 Ind. Cas. 671=21 Cr. L. J. 511. Thus a person may be guilty of the offence of abetting the desertion of a regimental sepoy, under s. 135 of the Penal Code although such sepoy may not have any intention of deserting. 10 S. L. R. 159.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of , at abetted the desertion of an officer [or soldier, or sailor or air man] in the Army (or Navy or Air force) of the King Emperor, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 135 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried of the said charge.

136. Whoever, except, as hereinafter excepted, knowing or having reason to believe, that an officer, soldier, "sailor or airman"* in the army "navy or air force"* of the Queen has deserted, harbours such officer, soldier, sailor, "or airman"* shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Exception.—This provision does not extend to the case in which the harbour is given by a wife to her husband.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First or Second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate. etc.) hereby charge you (name and accused)—as follows :—

That you—on or about the—day of, at—, knowing, or having reason to believe that—, an officer (or soldier, or sailor, or airman) in the Army (or Navy or Air force) of the King-Emperor had deserted, harboured such officer, (or soldier or sailor or airman), and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 136 of the Indian Penal Code, and within any cognizance.—

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

137. The master or person in charge of a merchant-vessel, on board of which any deserter from the army "navy or air force"* of the Queen is concealed, shall, though ignorant of such concealment, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees, if he might have known of such concealment but for some neglect of his duty as such master or person in charge, or but for some want of discipline on board of the vessel.

Notes.—This stringent provision, which was not in the Code as originally prepared, is taken from an Act directed against the mischief and loss to the Government occasioned by the engagement given to desertion by the Masters of merchant-vessels. This section enacts as a part of the definition of an offence what, at the most, is only evidence of an offence. When a deserter is found "concealed on board a vessel," it is not unreasonable to presume that the master, or person in charge knows that he is there, and that he harbours the deserter. If the master can satisfactorily rebut this presumption by proving that he really knew nothing of the matter, it seems just to allow him to do so; but, according to this provision, his ignorance, however honest, will not save him if there has been "neglect of duty" or "want of discipline" on board—vague expressions, the proof or disproof of which are equally difficult—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Non-compoundable—Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class and is triable summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you— as follows :—

That _____, a deserter from the Army (or Navy or Air force) of the King Emperor, and concealed himself on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ on board _____ a merchant vessel of which you _____ are the master (or person in charge) through your neglect of duty as such master (or person in charge) [or through want of discipline on board the said vessel] and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 137 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

138. Whoever abets what he knows to be an act of insubordination by an officer, soldier, "sailor or airman"* in the Army "Navy or Airforce"* of the Queen, shall, if Abetment of an act of insubordination by soldier, sailor or airman. such act of insubordination be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Provision is only made for those cases of abetment which are actually followed by acts of insubordination. In the present section it is expressed as part of the definition of the offence that the abettor knows the quality of the act abetted, that is he knows it to be an act of insubordination. The expression "act of insubordination" is not, as it appears, used in the Mutiny Acts or in the Articles of War, and it seems to have no definite meaning. Conduct of a like nature with that which, when carried to an actual resistance to superior military authority, amounts to mutiny, must, when not carried to such a length, be held to be "insubordinate". Any wilful breach of the discipline by a soldier or sailor will constitute an act of insubordination within the meaning of this clause. Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class and may be tried summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, _____ on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ abetted what you knew to be an act of insubordination by _____, an officer (or soldier or sailor or airman) in the Army (or Navy or Airforce) of the King Emperor and such act of insubordination was committed in consequence of the said abetment and you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 138 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Application of foregoing sections to the Indian Marine Service.

138A. [Repealed by Act XXXV of 1934]

* Substituted by Act X of 1927.

139. No person subject to "the Army Act, the Indian Army Act, 1911, the Naval Discipline Act or that Act as modified by the Indian Navy (Discipline) Act 1934"* Persons subject to articles of War. "the Air Force Act or the Indian Air Force Act 1932"† is subject to punishment under this Code for any of the offences defined in this chapter.

140. Whoever, not being a soldier, "sailor or airman"‡ in the military, wearing garb or carrying any garb, or carries any token resembling token used by soldier, sailor, or airman. "naval or air"§ service of the Queen wears any garb, or token used by such a soldier, "sailor or airman" with the intention that it may be believed that he is such a soldier "sailor or airman", shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Notes.—This section, assuming that soldiers and airmen only and not sailors wear a distinguishing dress, accoutrements, etc, provides a punishment for those who personate soldiers or airmen. No fraudulent intention is made a part of the definition. An innocent assumption of their character, if it must be deemed an offence, is one which will probably be thought deserving of lenient sentence,—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate and may be tried summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you , not being a soldier in the Military (or Naval) service of the King Emperor, on or about the day of at , wore (mention the garb [or carried a token resembling (mention it)] [or used by such soldier] with the intention that it might be believed that you were such a soldier, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 140 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance, And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE PUBLIC TRANQUILITY.

141. An assembly of five or more persons is designated an "unlawful assembly," if the common object of the persons composing that assembly is—

First.—To overawe, by criminal force, or show of criminal force, the Legislative or Executive Government of India or the Government of any Presidency, or any Lieutenant-Governor, or any public servant in the exercise of the lawful power of such public servant ; or Second.—To resist the execution of any law or of any legal process ; or,

Third.—To commit any mischief or criminal trespass, or other offence ; or,

Fourth.—By means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to any person, to take or obtain possession of any property, or to deprive any person of the enjoyment of a right of way, or of the use of water, or other incorporeal right of which he is in possession or enjoyment, or to enforce any right or supposed right ; or

Fifth.—By means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to compel any person to do what he is not legally bound to do or to omit to do what he is legally entitled to do.

Explanation.—An assembly which was not unlawful when it assembled, may subsequently become an unlawful assembly.

* Inserted by Act 35 of 1934.

† Substituted by XIV of 1932.

‡ Substituted by Act X of 1927.

Scope of Chapter III.—"These offences hold a middle place between State offences on the one hand crimes against person and property on the other. Many of the offences made punishable by other Chapters of the Code in their commission a disturbance of the public peace. But the present Chapter punishes especially unlawful assemblies of persons who, whether they assemble tumultuously or otherwise, have a common unlawful purpose in their minds, the execution of which will disturb public order and excite alarm.

"The essence of these offences is the unlawful assembly. This is more or less aggravated by other circumstances which attend or follow it,—as being armed, the making preparations to execute the common unlawful object, or the actual execution of such object. But there must be an unlawful assembly. Merely conspiring together by writing or other means of correspondence, without any meeting, is not therefore the offence hereby made punishable.

"The Chapter of General Exceptions shall be carefully borne in mind, especially the exceptions concerning acts done by the direction of public servants, or in the exercise of the right of private defence, etc. A gathering of persons for objects such as those contemplated by the above exceptions would of course not be unlawful." Morgan and Macpherson.

The common object etc.—The five or more persons met together must have in view a common unlawful object of the description specified. Whether the object is in their minds when they come together, or whether it occurs to them afterwards is not material. But it is necessary that the object should be common to the persons who compose the assembly, that is, that they should all be aware of it and concur in it. It seems also that there must be some present and immediate purpose of carrying into effect the common object; and that a meeting for deliberation only, and to arrange plans for future action, is not an "unlawful assembly."—Morgan and Macpherson. The onus is on the prosecution to prove that the common object of a crowd is such as will constitute it an unlawful assembly. 30 Cr. L. J. 38=A. I. R. 1929. Nag. 43=112 Ind. Cas. 902. Committing an offence and abetment of it can both be the common object of an unlawful assembly. 25 Cr. L. J. 594=85 Ind. Cas. 818=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 903. The mere fact that a party of 20 or 30 persons are armed with sticks and assembled together is not sufficient to prove that their common intention is to use criminal force or commit any other offence. The common intention must be established as a fact by legal evidence. (1925) M. W. N. 666=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1213. An unlawful assembly must already have a common object to carry out. A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 362=4 Bar. L. J. 169=27 Cr. L. J. 337=92 Ind. Cas. 849. The law does not declare every assemblage of men however large, illegal. What it requires is that in order to be illegal it must be inspired by an illegal object as specified in s. 141 I. P. Code. 85 Ind. Cas. 731=26 Cr. L. J. 587=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 260; see also 23 A. L. J. 68=86 Ind. Cas. 25=26 Cr. L. J. 669. Where once a party entitled to possession forcibly takes possession, his retaining possession, subsequently by force is not with the common object of taking possession by force and the opposite party has no right to eject them forcibly. 26 Cr. L. J. 946=87 Ind. Cas. 98=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1235; 24 Cr. L. J. 89=45 A. 250. The essence of the offence defined in section 141 I. P. Code is the common unlawful purpose, and an accused person cannot be convicted, if the common object proved is different from the common object in the charge or for which he has been tried. 6 M. L. T. 17=11 Cr. L. J. 30=4 Ind. Cas. 700. Where a person was killed by a member of an unlawful assembly, in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, the common object being the abduction of that person's mother, held, that all those who were members of the assembly at the time when such person was killed were guilty of the offence of killing her. 4 B. L. R. App. 47=13 W. R. Cr. 33; see also A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 209=35 Cr. L. J. 1462=1934 Cr. C. 444. Acts taking place after the accomplishment of the object of an unlawful assembly is over are not to be deemed as acts done towards the furtherance of the common object of the assembly, or as the acts which the rest knew would be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. 24 W. R. Cr. 66. It must be proved for a valid conviction for being members of an unlawful assembly that the accused were inspired by a common object and that their acts fall under s. 141 I. P. Code. 9 W. R. Cr. 19; 20 W. R. Cr. 78.

Clause 1, to overawe etc.—A person kept by superior influence in awe, so that he fears to do that which he has a mind and will to do, and which the law empowers him to do, is overawed. But the common object which makes an assembly "unlawful" is an intent to overawe, by or by show of criminal force. The Court must determine upon view of the whole facts, not whether a public servant has in fact been overawed, but whether the assembly had that end in their minds as the common object of their meeting. Morgan and Macpherson.

Second clause.—The respondent was reported to have made a speech at a public meeting in which he suggested that the imposition of capitation tax was peculiar to Burma and illegal and to have advised the people to plead poverty and evade payment. The proposal was put to the meeting and accepted by all present. Held, that the facts stated did not constitute an offence under section 143 I. P. Code as there was no suggestion whatever that the assembly should make use of its members and jointly resist any law or legal process. 4 Bur. L. J. 169=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 362. Disobedience of notification under Police Act is resistance to execution of legal process. 134 Ind. Cas. 1226=33 Cr. L. J. 64=55 B. 725=33 Bom. L. R. 1169=A. I. R. 1931 Bom. 520. When order prohibiting possession has been carefully made, resistance to police trying to execute it brings it under s. 141. 35 C. W. N. 716=32 Cr. L. J. 844=58 C. 1303=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 410. Where the immediate object of the assembly is to obstruct the police the members can be charged. A. I. R. 1924 All. 233=27 Cr. L. J. 193=92 Ind. Cas. 145.

Third clause.—Where it is established that the five accused have assembled at the water-head to take water by force and had armed themselves with deadly weapons to strike and vanquish any body who should stand in their way and prevent them from accomplishing their purpose, these five constituted an unlawful assembly and became guilty of rioting when they used their deadly weapons in pursuance of their common object. 7 Lah. L. J. 576=26 P. L. R. 820. Where the common object with which members of an unlawful assembly were charged was that of "harassing Hindus" the charge is not too general, but falls within s. 141 (3). 18 L. W. 350=74 Ind. Cas. 1044=24 Cr. L. J. 852. The immediate object of an assembly, as it reached the Police Station, was to threaten and obstruct the police in the discharge of its duty; Held, that the object in itself and apart from any other clauses of section 141 of the I. P. Code was sufficient to bring the case within the purview of the 3rd clause of s. 141. L. R. 4 A. 145 Cr.

Fourth clause—By means of criminal force etc.—Here, as in the first instance, a necessary part of the common object is that it should contemplate "force or show of force," as the means to be used to carry out the object into effect. The cases coming under these two heads are not necessarily, and apart from the use of force, of a criminal nature; for the right may actually be on the side of those, or some of those, who compose the unlawful assembly. It is the use of force or show of force in the attempt to recover what may be justly their property that brings the persons assembled within the definition.

"The greater part of the fourth clause relates to the possible dispossession of property. Movable property seems to come within the terms used, and may perhaps be within the contemplation of the clause. What shall amount to possession of property whether movable or immovable, is a matter which the civil law must determine. For the present purpose, it will not be difficult to determine what is that possession of law which it is the common object of an unlawful assembly to take or obtain. The first and usual case is where the common purpose is to take possession of property by dispossessing the present actual occupant. Where the property is in the actual possession of no person, the possession being vacant,—as in the case of a deserted or unoccupied house, or a newly formed chur upon which no acts of ownership have been exercised, and which, from its position does not become by law annexed to any particular property,—an assembly of persons whose common object is to obtain possession by force or show of force to be used against others who are prepared to resist them, is unlawful whether the property right-fully belongs to the persons or any of the persons assembled or not."—Morgan and Macpherson. A charge under clause (4) of s. 141 I. P. Code, can only be sustained if the party claiming the right has not possession. It is therefore necessary for the prosecution to show that the accused in such a case was not in actual possession at the time of the occurrence. For to maintain possession by repealing an aggression or resisting another in his attempt to take possession is not to enforce a right but to defend a right or prevent a wrong, and a party of persons who use force to defend the property in their possession, do not constitute themselves into an unlawful assembly. If a party in possession reasonably apprehends that the opposing party is going to dispossess them and for repelling such an aggression they collect upon the subject of the dispute in force they are not to enforce any right but for the maintenance of their own right. 7 Mys. O. W. N. 583=89 Ind. Cas. 269=26 Cr. L. J. 1325=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 656. Persons who are assembled together to resist a trespass over property in their possession, which has been expected for a long time do not constitute an unlawful assembly. Persons in such a position are not enforcing rights, but preventing wrongs. 1923 Oudh. 167. From the mere fact that the accused went to the land prepared to overcome any resistance, their common object could not be said to come within the purview of s. 141. 8 S. L. R. 343=16 Cr. L. J. 536=29 Ind. Cas. 664. There is no unlawful assembly when the common object is to maintain undisturbed the actual enjoyment of a right, section 141, sub-section (4), not applying to such a case. 36 C. 865=13 C. W. N. 801=4 Ind. Cas. 19=10 Cr. L. J. 471.

Or to deprive etc.—Property is frequently subject to certain rights and privileges which may be exercised over it by those who have lands adjacent to it and by others, such as rights of way, rights of common or pasturage, rights of fishing etc., Such rights are known to the English law as "incorporeal" rights. And as they consist, not in the actual possession of tangible property but in the enjoyment or use of the way or other right, the word "possession" as applied to them means only the undisturbed use and exercise of the privilege. An assembly, with the common intent forcibly to interfere with or prevent the enjoyment of the right, is unlawful. So likewise is it, where the common purpose is to enforce such a privilege on behalf of the person who has or claims it. Thus, A having enclosed certain land, B and four or more persons assemble with a common intent to enforce a right or supposed right claimed by B, that his cattle should pass over the land enclosed, to be watered. This is an unlawful assembly, although A may have unjustly deprived B of his lawful right by the enclosure of the land.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Any right or supposed right.—The words "any right or supposed right" may also extend to a right unconnected with immovable property, though they seem from the context to be meant especially to include rights connected with land. Morgan and Macpherson. "Enforce any right" relates only to an initial act in furtherance of a right. 27 O. C. 292=26 Cr. L. J. 513=85 Ind. Cas. 353=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh. 425. In order to sustain a conviction under section 147, I. P. Code, it must first be shown that the common object of the accused was to enforce any right or supposed right by the use or show of criminal force, and criminal force must be such as is defined in s. 349 and 350 I. P. Code. 3 Mys. L. J. 25. This clause is meant to prevent the resort to force in vindication of supposed rights. It makes a distinction between an admitted claim or an ascertained right and a disputed claim. 11 Bom. L. R. 849=3 Ind. Cas. 958=10 Cr. L. J. 427. Persons forcibly preventing a possession on the ground that they had a right to do so, because it was a nuisance or annoyance to them or to their community, constitute an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141 clause 4. 5 M. H. C. App. 6=1 Wier 58.

Clause (5).—The fifth clause seems comprehensive enough to apply to all the rights a man can possess, whether they concern the enjoyment of property or not,

Whatever thing a man may lawfully do or omit to do at his choice, the law will not allow that he shall be compelled to do or prevented from doing that thing by force or show of force. And an assembly of those who intend so to compel or prevent him is unlawful, whether the object concerns land (e. g. to compel a person to sow or not to sow his land with a particular crop), or is distinct from the land, (e. g. to prevent a religious procession, or to deter a person from marrying under the provision of Act XV of 1856, or to compel a person or persons to go to a new market or to keep away from an old one)—Morgan and Macpherson. Mere compulsion to omit to do act is not enough. Person prevented must be legally entitled to do the act. 85 Ind. Cas. 353=26 Cr. L. J. 513. In order to constitute an unlawful assembly under clause (5) of s. 141, it is not enough that the common object of one party is to compel the other party by means of force to omit to do a certain thing but it must be shown that the act omitted is one which the party is legally entitled to do. The true import of the expression "to enforce any right" used in this clause relates to an initial act when it is done in furtherance of any right and not to an act when it is done to maintain a position already achieved in the lawful exercise of that right. 10 O. W. N. 588; see also 11 O. L. J. 40; 9 O. L. J. 291; 25 A. 259; 25 Cr. L. J. 625=81 Ind. Cas. 113. The phrase "to enforce a right" can only apply when the party claiming the right has not possession over the subject of the right, and therein lies the distinction between "enforcing a right" and "maintaining a right" 17 C. W. N. 1132=14 Cr. L. J. 463. The mere use of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person to take possession of any property is not sufficient to bring the case within the clause, unless some criminal intent is proved against the person so using force or making a show of force. 12 C. W. N. 96=6 Cr. L. J. 393.

Cases.—Where one of five or more persons forcibly enters into possession of the property belonging to another and the rest resist the re-entry of the original owner by show of force, all the persons constitute an unlawful assembly within s. 141 I. P. Code. 6 Pat. 794=106 Ind. Cas. 691. It is impossible to look into the minds of men who assembled on a particular day, but what their object was must be judged by the surrounding circumstances. 109 Ind. Cas. 503=29 Cr. L. J. 507=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 562. An agreement was entered into between the leaders of the Hindu community and the Mahomedan community by which the Mahomedans declared that they would not publicly sacrifice cows and the Hindus declared that they would not sacrifice or kill pigs. The Hindus on a subsequent day having an apprehension in their minds that a cow sacrifice was about to be performed assembled with lathis and garanas and spears and as a result of this there was a rioting. Held, that the object of the assembly came within clause (4) of s. 141 of the I. P. C. and that therefore the members of the assembly could be convicted of the offence. 109 Ind. Cas. 503=29 Cr. L. J. 567=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 562. Where a crowd has dispersed without taking any action, the intention and common object of that crowd can only be inferred from the surrounding circumstances and among these circumstances the attitude and demeanour is one of the points which must be taken into consideration. 105 Ind. In order to sustain a conviction under section 141 it is necessary to find that the person accused of that offence was a member of an unlawful assembly, and that he used force or violence in prosecution of the common object of such assembly. Where out of 15 persons complained against only five persons were found guilty and convicted of the offence of rioting under s. 141 I. P. Code and it appeared that only three out of the five convicted persons might have had a common object. Held, that the conviction could not be upheld because it was necessary to find that all of the five persons who were convicted had one of the common objects mentioned in section 141 I. P. Code, before they could be found guilty of the offence of rioting. Before there can be an unlawful assembly and rioting, there must be five persons who have a common object. In re Vyapuri Chetti, 5 M. L. T. 285=4 Ind. Cas. 1142=11 Cr. L. J. 197. Where the acts of the accused and his party amounted to a show of criminal force, he and his party constituted an unlawful assembly. 1 P. L. R. 1870.

Ingredients.—In order to sustain a conviction under this section it is necessary to find that the person accused of that offence was a member of an unlawful assembly, and that he used force or violence in prosecution of the common object of such assembly. 1923 Lah. 692. The intention indicated by the heading of Ch. VIII in which this section is inserted, was to constitute certain acts, which endangered the public peace, into offences against public tranquility, but it does not follow from it either that a person may do what he is entitled to do or prevent another from doing what he is not entitled to do by means of criminal force or show of criminal force. In construing this section regard must be had not only to the general intention deducible from the heading of the chapter, but also to the specific mode in which the Legislature intended to carry out the intention. 14 M. 126. The mere use of criminal force or show of criminal force to any person to take possession of any property, is not sufficient, to bring the case within the clause, unless some criminal intent is proved against the person so using force or making a show of force. 12 C. To constitute an unlawful assembly within the meaning of this section it is not necessary that the persons composing the assembly should have assembled with a previously arranged common object. It is sufficient if from their actions a common object may be inferred, and such object falls within the purview of section 141. Committing an offence and an abetment thereof can both be the common object of an unlawful assembly. 85 Ind. Cas. 818=26 Cr. L. J. 594. 142. Whoever, being aware of facts which render any assembly an unlawful assembly, intentionally joins that assembly, or continues in it, is said to be a member of an unlawful assembly.

Scope.—The previous section having explained what an unlawful assembly is, this section declares who may be said to be a member of such an assembly. The persons who meet together may not at first be five in number or may not have when they first assemble any such "common object" as to make their meeting unlawful. In either case as soon as five or more are met together and entertain a common unlawful object, they constitute an unlawful assembly. And as soon as other persons, whether present from the beginning or afterwards joining the assembly, become informed of the common object and adhere to it (intentionally join, etc.) they also are members of an unlawful assembly.—Morgan and Macpherson. No one who intentionally joins or continues in an unlawful assembly can be allowed to say that he was merely a harmless spectator. He must prove that he was there owing to no fault of his own and that he could not get out of the crowd. 9 Pat. L. T. 167=6 Pat. 828=106 Ind. Cas. 591=29 Cr. L. J. 79=A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 115; see also A. I. R. 1933 All. 535=1933 Cr. C. 870. The essence of an offence defined in s. 141 is the common unlawful purpose and an accused person cannot be convicted if the common object proved is different from the common object in the charge or for which he has been tried. Persons to be tried jointly for an offence under s. 142, must have been associated from the first in the series of acts which form the same transaction. 11 Cr. L. J. 30=4 Ind. Cas. 700=6 M. L. T. 17; see also 5 C. W. N. 31; 15 C. 388. This section has no application where a person goes to a place where members of the unlawful assembly have gathered to protect their own rights. 19 W. R. Cr. 66.

143. Whoever is a member of an unlawful assembly, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months or with fine or with both.

Scope.—There are several degrees of criminality in the offences subsequently made punishable, but the point of the offence in each case is that which is here made punishable, viz, the unlawful assembly. Morgan and Macpherson.

Elements of conviction.—Where there is no evidence that any of the accused entered into or upon the property with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property he cannot be convicted of an offence under this section. Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate, and may be tried summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you _____ on or about the _____ day of _____, at _____ were a member of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which (specify the common object) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 143 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the, said charge.

144. Whoever, being armed with any deadly weapon or with anything which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, is a member of an unlawful assembly, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Scope.—The risk to the public tranquility—and therefore the offence,—is aggravated by the intention of using force evinced by carrying arms. "Weapon of offence," is a weapon which under present circumstances and at the present time (during the existence of the unlawful assembly), is an offensive weapon,—notwithstanding that it might be otherwise at a different time and place. The occasion and the persons must determine this.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Notes.—An offence under s. 144 is not one of which actual theft is a necessary ingredient. Therefore separate convictions for an offence under s. 144 and for theft could be awarded 8 C. W. N. 519=1 Cr. L. J. 449. Where a person instigates another to join an unlawful assembly armed with a deadly weapon, and afterwards joins it himself, he may be liable to be punished under s. 144 read with s. 114, even though he is not himself armed with deadly weapon. 5 C. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, _____ on or about the _____ day of _____, at _____, being armed with a deadly weapon, to wit _____, (or armed with, something which used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, to wit _____), were a member of an unlawful assembly, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 144 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

145. Whoever joins or continues in an unlawful assembly, knowing that such unlawful assembly has been commanded in the manner prescribed by law to disperse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—If the offender still resolves, in defiance of this warning, to persist in the commission of an offence, he aggravates his crime and incurs a more severe punishment.—Morgan and Macpherson. To constitute an offence under this section, it is necessary that the prosecution should establish that there was an assemblage of at least five persons that the object of the meeting was any of the five objects mentioned in section 141, I. P. C., that the accused shared that object with at least four others of the meeting; that the accused intentionally joined the meeting having knowledge of the meeting, or he continued therein after having had that knowledge, that such command to disperse was in the manner prescribed by law; that accused joined or continued in such unlawful assembly after it had been commanded to disperse, and that he did so knowing that it had been commanded to disperse. 3. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you _____ on or about the _____ day of _____, at _____, joined (or continued in) an unlawful assembly, knowing that such assembly had been commanded in the manner prescribed by law to disperse, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 145 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

146. Whenever force or violence is used by an unlawful assembly, or by any member thereof, in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, every member of such assembly is guilty of the offence of rioting.

Notes.—The unlawful assembly having moved towards the execution of its common object, and having used force, has committed the higher offence of rioting. It will be noticed that the actual use of force, and not merely a show of force, is necessary, and that the force must be in prosecution of the common object. And in this case whether only one, or more than one, of the persons assembled used the force, the penal consequences apply equally to all. It will be otherwise, however, if the force or violence is used for a distinct purpose,—as if it consists of a mere affray or assault upon each other, or upon by-standers, by some members of the assembly.

Morgan and Macpherson. Violence cannot mean violence against inanimate object 40 C. 362; see also 44 M. L. J. 407=23 Cr. L. J. 350=A. I. R. (1923) Mad. 603. The words "use force" in the present section it seems, must be construed without reference to the explanation given in s. 349.—Morgan and Macpherson. The word "violence" in this section is not restricted to force against inanimate objects. 44 M. Where the accused, not less than five in number, were all found to have assembled together in the fight which took place and it was also found that they and their opponents came armed with sticks prepared to fight and did fight, held, that the accused were properly convicted of rioting, as their common object was to assault their opponents. 5 N. Where the accused, members of an unlawful assembly, in resisting the arrest of a judgment debtor, use force both to the Civil Court peon and to another, who accompanies him, the offence of rioting is complete by the assault on either of them and the assault on the other is a further offence under s. 235 of the Criminal Pro. Code. 12 C. 595. Common intention in s. 34 is not the same as common object in ss. 146 and 149 and if some of the assembly commit a criminal act then their criminal intent must be imputed to all of them. A. I. 147. Whoever is guilty of rioting shall, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

But a trial need not be set aside merely because of some omission or error in the charge unless the accused has been misled in his defence or failure of justice has resulted. Where the Judge framed a charge under s. 147 I. P. Code but no common object was specified in the charge, the failure amounts to a mere irregularity. 30 Bom. L. R. 653=A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 286. Where it is found that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly having a common object and made an assault or preparation to use force or violence, they cannot, in the absence of proof that some members of the assembly which they joined used force or violence in prosecution of their common object, be convicted of rioting under s. 147, I. Persons may riot without actually committing an offence under s. 352 I. P. Code, and the theory that one section embraces the other is fallacious. 39 M. L. T. 499. In order to establish the common intention of an unlawful assembly it is not necessary to prove that its members actually met and conspired to commit an offence but such intention can be inferred from the circumstances of the case. In the case of a concerted attack by five or more persons, it is a perfectly valid and reasonable inference that they all had a common intention and were the before members of an unlawful assembly. 100 Ind. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you _____ on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ were member of an unlawful assembly, and, in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, to wit, _____ committed the offence of rioting, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

148. Whoever is guilty of rioting, being armed with a deadly weapon, or with anything which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine or with both.

Lathi.—Whether a deadly weapon. Vide 15 A. 19.

Scope.—If one of the members of an unlawful assembly is armed with a deadly weapon, or a weapon of offence, the other members of the assembly cannot be charged under this section. It is only the actual persons, who are so armed, who can be charged under the section. 22 C. 276; 29 Ind. Cas. 78. A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 632=35 P. L. R. 518; A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 333=1933 Cr. Sentence.—As regards amount of sentence vide, 1929 M. W. N. 888.

If from the evidence it can be clearly established what the common object in a case of rioting was the mere fact that such charge does not contain an allegation of a common object is not a defect that will necessarily invalidate the conviction. Where two common objects are alleged and one is clearly proved upon the evidence, then the fact that the other common object, which is alleged, has not been proved will not exonerate the accused from liability, and even if there be any irregularity in the form in which the evidence for the prosecution might have been presented, it cannot be relied upon in revision before the High Court, if such irregularity has not occasioned any miscarriage of justice. 2 Pat. A person found guilty under both ss. 324 and 148 I. P. Code can be sentenced only under one and the other of the two sections. 35 P. L. R. 587=1934 Cr. C. 944=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 614. In conviction for rioting it does not much matter who the aggressors are. 1922 M. W. N. 583.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Every member of unlawful assembly guilty of offence committed in prosecution of common object.

that object, every person, who, at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly, is guilty of that offence.

Scope.—Violence used by one member of an unlawful assembly, in prosecution of the common object makes all the members rioters (section 146). In like manner, every offence which he commits in prosecution of the common object becomes the offence of all. And further if he commit an offence which, although it cannot be said to be committed in prosecuting the common object, is yet such an offence as was likely to be committed, all are deemed to be participators in his guilt. The nature and object of the assembly must determine what act done and what offences committed by any one of its members become, under this section, the acts and offence of the whole body. Minor offences against person and property are the common and natural consequences of a tumultuous gathering of persons with evil intentions and grave offences of a like nature may equally be the probable result where the common object is one which implies violence. But there is a limitation to this law extending to many persons the actual guilt of one, which seems reasonable and consistent with the terms in which the section is expressed, viz. that the offence, if wholly beside the common object, is not to be imputed to the whole assembly.—Morgan and Macpherson. The object with which persons may set out may be that of causing hurt but if they know that those persons whom they accompany are carrying deadly weapons and that if such deadly weapons are used it is likely to cause grievous hurt to any one, the charge against the accused is properly framed under s. 149. 1929 M. W. N. 888. Section 149 of the Penal Code does not define any definite offence but merely provides that in certain circumstances persons may be convicted of an offence under the Indian Penal Code provided always that certain conditions are complied with. Therefore an accused has no right to have that section mentioned in the charge and it cannot be said that any prejudice is caused by the failure to mention the section in the charge. 7 Pat. 484=9 Pat. Where it cannot be held that the common intention was to cause death, but was to cause grievous hurt or that all the members of the unlawful assembly at least

Where there is considerable divergence between the case for the prosecution and the case for the accused in a case of rioting and there were several accused it is the duty of the trial Court as well as the Appellate Judge to examine the evidence carefully so as to show that he was fully convinced upon the consideration of the pros and cons of the case that the prosecution story was true. 4 Pat L. If the members of an assembly act with the common object of exceeding their right of private defence they are not only all generally guilty of rioting but also of the particular offence constituted by such excess of user. If one member exceeds that limit every other member shares with him the guilt of his act. 2 Pat. 495. If a member of an unlawful assembly is to be found constructively guilty of an offence of which the principal is guilty and not some other offence. If the rest of the accused are not constructively guilty of the same offences as the principal offender, they cannot be found guilty under section 149 at all. 1 Pat. 753=4 Pat. L. T. 213=71 Ind. Cas. 113=24 Cr. L. J. 65. In a charge for being members of an unlawful assembly and for culpable homicide, the defence set up was private defence. The Court found the prosecution story to be false. Held, that the accused need not plead and prove the right of private defence. 2 Pat. L. R. 217 Cr. Ordinarily if accused persons go armed with spears in superior force intending to carry out by force their object of bringing away a woman which they know the persons having custody of the woman will resist, each of the accused must be taken to have known at least that a death caused by one of his party was likely to be caused. 83 Ind. The offence of causing grievous hurt under s. 326 is not a minor-offence, or an offence involved in the offence under s. 304, coupled with s. 149 ; therefore a person accused of and charged with the latter offence cannot, in the event of the charge not being sustainable, be convicted of an offence under s. 326. 6 C. Where a wound inflicted on a certain person cannot be regarded as the result of a common enterprise in which the accused were engaged, a conviction under section 324, read with section 149, is wrong. 7 C. W. N. 512.

This section is not intended to subject a member of an unlawful assembly to punishment for every offence which is committed by one of its members during the time they are engaged in the prosecution of the common object. In order to bring a case under this section, the act must be done with a view to accomplish the common object of the unlawful assembly, or it must be proved that the offence was one which the accused knew would be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. 5 Bom. L. R. 1924 ; 61 P. R. 1887 Cr. The word 'knew' indicates a state of mind at the time of the commission of the offence and not knowledge acquired in the light of subsequent events. 17 Ind. Cas. 408. Procedure.—Cognizable or not cognizable according as arrest may be made without warrant for the offence or not—Warrant or summons according as a warrant or summons may issue for the offence—Bailable or not bailable according as the offence is bailable or not—Not compoundable—Triable by the Court by which the offence is triable.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you — on or about the — day of — at —, were a member of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was — (specify the object) and that while you were a member of the said unlawful assembly, another member (name the member) of the said assembly, caused (specify the offence) to —, and you are thereby under s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code, guilty of causing the said (offence) an offence punishable under s. — of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or within the cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct you to be tried by the said court on the said charge.

150. Whoever hires, or engages, or employs, or promotes, or connives at the hiring, engagement, or employment of any person to join or become a member of any unlawful assembly, shall be punishable as a member of such unlawful assembly, and for any offence which may be committed by any such person as a member of such unlawful assembly, in pursuance of such hiring, engagement, or employment, in the same manner as if he had been a member of such unlawful assembly, or himself committed such offence.

Notes.—“Affrays attended by much violence, and occasionally ending in death, are committed in some parts of India by persons either hired or employed for such work alone, or who are not or may not be ordinarily retainers or labourers in the service of the persons hiring them. The object of this section seems to be to bring within the reach of the law, those who are really the originators and instigators of the offence committed by such persons. The ordinary law of abetment might be sufficient to punish those who, by hiring or engaging others, instigate them to join an unlawful assembly. But if the prime agent keeps aloof, and the work of hiring, although known to him, is left entirely to his managers or servants, he will probably succeed in evading the ordinary law. The terms of this section therefore extend not only to acts of instigation by the master but to acts of instigation when done by others, his agents, and knowingly permitted, or connived at, by him.

“To support a charge under this section, there must be proof (1) of an unlawful assembly; (2) of an offence (if an offence was committed by the members of that assembly); (3) of the complicity, by hiring, connivance or otherwise, of the person charge. Direct evidence of hiring etc., may not often be procurable; and it will be still more difficult to obtain such evidence where the charge is one of promoting the hiring or conniving at it. The relation of the parties, their conduct, and the circumstances, generally, must furnish grounds of presumptive proof in such cases.—Morgan and Macpherson. Section 157 is not of wider application than section 150. It provides for an occurrence that may happen and makes the harbouring, or receiving or assembling of persons, who are likely to be engaged in any unlawful assembly, an offence. Here also as in s. 157, the law contemplates the imminence of an unlawful assembly and the proof of facts which would go to constitute an unlawful assembly. 29 C. 214 = 6 C. W. N. 143. Where a person was charged under s. 304, I. P. Code read along with s. 150 and the jury holds he was not guilty of culpable homicide, he cannot be convicted of constructive culpable homicide under s. 153. 85 Ind. Cas. 818 = 26 Cr. L. J. 594 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 903.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant or Summons according to the offence committed by the persons hired etc.—Bailable or not bailable as in the offence—Not-Compoundable—Triable by the Court by which the offence is triable.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you — on or about the — day of —, at —, hired (or engaged or employed or promoted) [or promoted (or connived at) the hiring (or engagement, or employment) of] one XY to join as (or become) a member of an unlawful assembly, and that the said XY as a member of such assembly in pursuance of such hiring (or engagement or employment) committed (specify offence) and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 150 and—(state the substantive offence) of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or cognizance of the Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

151. Whoever knowingly joins or continues in any assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace, after such assembly has been lawfully commanded to disperse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation—If the assembly is an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, the offender will be punishable under section 145.

Burden of proof—The prosecution should prove that the assembly was in fact likely to cause a disturbance the public peace. 22 P. R. 1887, Cr.

Scope—The offence consists not in any unlawful assembly, for there may be none, but in the disobedience to the mandate of the law, which, under the particular circumstances indicated here, has ordered the assembly to disperse. Suppose five or more persons meet together on a lawful occasion: a command to them to disperse would not be a lawful command and the offence here contemplated would not be committed. But if the time and place of assembly make it likely that a disturbance of the public peace will be caused, the disobedience to the command to disperse constitutes the offence hereby made punishable. If two persons are quarrelling in a public place, an assembly of five or more composed of these persons and of bystanders, appears one likely not only to cause obstruction, but a disturbance of the public peace; and knowingly to join or continue in such an assembly after the order to disperse, may be an offence—Morgan and Macpherson. Playing music before a mosque in defiance of an order to disperse by a Police Sub-Inspector is an offence under this section. 22 A. L. J. 1049=1925 All. 165. On a charge under this section it is not sufficient to establish merely that in the opinion of the Magistrate, who ordered the particular assembly to disperse, such assembly was likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace. It is necessary to establish by evidence to the satisfaction of the Court that the assembly was in fact likely to cause disturbance. 3 Lah. L. J. 529=69 Ind. Cas. 373=23 Cr. L. J. 5. Procedure—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

152. Whoever assaults or threatens to assault, or obstructs, or attempts to obstruct, any public servant in the discharge of this duty as such public servant in endeavouring to disperse an unlawful assembly, or to suppress a riot or affray, or uses, or threatens, or attempts to use, criminal force to such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope—This section contemplates an assault or obstruction to some particular public servant. 19 C. 105. The offence of assault is defined by section 351. Knowledge of the fact that the person obstructed is a public servant although it is not expressed in the definition, no doubt forms part of this offence.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate and Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—That you on or about the day of at assaulted [(or threatend to assault), (or obstructed) (or attempted to obstruct).].....A. B a public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant in endeavouring to disperse an unlawful assembly (or to suppress a riot or affray)] [or used (or threatend) (or attempted to use criminal force to such public servant) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 152 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or cognizance of Court of Session).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

153. Whoever malignantly, or wantonly, by doing anything which is Wantonly giving provocation, is illegal, gives provocation to any person, intending or knowing it to be likely that such with intent to cause riot— provocation will cause the offence of rioting to be committed, shall, if the offence of rioting be committed in consequence of such provocation, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which if rioting be committed ; may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both ; and if the offence of rioting be not committed, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend if not committed. to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—The provocation to riot must be given by an "illegal" act (in section 43). Not only must the provocation be by an illegal act, but it must be given wantonly and without excuse ; and moreover, there must be the intention to cause, or guilty knowledge of the probable consequences. These ingredients being present, the punishment varies according as the probable consequences actually ensure or not.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section involves some acts of origination of riot by doing illegal act. 143 Ind. Cas. 273=35 Bom. L. R. 240=1933 Cr. C. 474=57 B. 329=34 Cr. L. J. 559=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 162.

The mere chance of provocation by an illegal act is sufficient to justify the conviction under this section. This section moreover, requires that the provocation given by the commission of an illegal act must be given malignantly and wantonly. "Malignantly" implies a short of general malice. 18 B. 758. As regards the meaning of "wantonly" Vide, 29 A. 569=A. W. N. 1907. 171=6 Cr. L. J. 14. An offence under this section is not committed when the accused did not act wantonly or malignantly. 26 M. 554=1 Weir, 260=13 M. L. J. 171. The offence under this section requires that the offender should do something illegal, by doing which he malignantly or wantonly gives provocation to any person intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause the offence of rioting to be committed. A. W. N. 1885, 23. Killing a cow not in the presence of any Hindu is not an offence under this section. 17 A. L. J. 200. Provocation can be given by a writer of a pamphlet. 22 Bom. L. R. 166. The throwing of bricks at a temple is not an offence, nor is prohibited by law ; and therefore a person throwing bricks at a temple is not guilty under s. 153 of the Indian Penal Code. A. I. Where the killing of a cow was not done in the presence of any Hindu whose religious feelings could be wounded it would not amount to giving provocation if on subsequently hearing it the religious feelings of certain Hindus were very much hurt. 17 A. L. J. 200=49 Ind. Cas. 775=20 Cr. L. J. 216.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not Compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate. If rioting is not committed summons should be issued instead of warrant.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you—on or about the—day of—at—, malignantly (or wantonly) by doing an act, which was illegal, gave provocation to—, intending (or knowing is to be likely) that such provocation would cause the offence of rioting to be committed, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 153 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I do hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

I. P. Code—19

153A. Whoever by words, either spoken or written, or by signs, or by visible representations, or otherwise, promotes Promoting enmity between or attempts to promote feelings of enmity or classes. hatred between different classes of Her Majesty's subjects shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Explanation.—It does not amount to an offence within the meaning of this section to point out, without malicious intention and with an honest view to their removal, matters which are producing, or have a tendency to produce, feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of Her Majesty's subjects.

Amendment.—This section has been inserted by Act 4 of 1898.

Object.—"It appears to us, that the offence of stirring up class hatred differs in many important respects from the offence of sedition against the state. It comes more appropriately in the Chapter relating to offences against public tranquility. The offence only affects the Government or the state indirectly, and the essence of the offence is that it predisposes classes of the people to action which may disturb the public tranquility. The fact that this offence is punishable in England as seditious libel is probably due to historical causes, and has nothing to do with logical arrangement."—Statement of Objects and Reasons.

154. Whenever any unlawful assembly or riot takes place, the owner or occupier of the land upon which such unlawful assembly is held, or such riot is committed, and any person having or claiming an interest in such land, shall be punishable with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees.

If he or his agent or manager, knowing that such offence is being or has been committed, or having reason to believe it is likely to be committed, do not give the earliest notice thereof in his or their power to the principal officer at the nearest police-station, and do not in the case of his or their having reason to believe that it was about to be committed, use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent it and, in the event of its taking place, do not use all lawful means in his or their power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly.

Object.—The object of the section is to impress upon the land-owners their responsibilities and obligations in respect of riots or unlawful assemblies committed under the circumstances mentioned in the section. 7 C. W. N. 245. Very greatest caution is required before proceedings are started under this section. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 1018=39 C. L. J. 236=25 Cr. L. J. 1258.

Facts to be proved.—To sustain a conviction under this section the facts must be proved :—(1) That the riot took place on the land belonging to the accused ; (2) that he, knowing that such offence is being or has been committed or having reason to believe that it is likely to be committed, did not give the earliest notice of it to the chief officer of the nearest police station ; (3) in cases where he had reason to believe that it was about to be committed that he did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent it ; and that (4) in the event of its taking place, he did not use all lawful means in his power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly. 3 Cr. L. J. 27. The responsibility under this section must depend upon the fact of the person who caused the riot being himself the person who has an interest in the land or an agent or manager of such person. 16 C.W.N. 768=14 Ind. Cas. 317=13 Cr.L.J. 221. It is a question for the Crown to determine whether a prosecution under s. 154 or s. 155, Penal Code, should be discontinued in view of the fact that the riots which gave rise to it occurred a long while ago. 7 C. W. N. 301. In order to render the owner liable under s. 154, I. P. Code, the knowledge of the owner that a riot was about to be committed is immaterial. He is liable for the acts of commission and the acts of omission, not only of himself but of his agent or servant. That his manager, took an active part in the riot is sufficient to convict the owner. 12A. 550 ; see also 39 Cr. L. J. 236. 1 A. L. J. 747 (n) ; 8 O. C. 418 ; 28 C. 504. In order to establish an offence under s. 154, it is necessary to prove (1) that a riot took place, (2) that the accused is the owner of the land on which the riot took place, (3) that his agent or manager knew that the riot was about to be committed and (4) that knowing this the agent or manager did not use all lawful means to suppress the riot, or disperse the unlawful assembly. In such cases, the Court must act upon proof and not on mere surmises. 4 C. W. N. 691 ; see also 8 O. C. 418=3 Cr. L. J. 27.

Knowledge of owner.—Knowledge on the part of the owner or occupier of the land of the acts or intentions of the agent is not an essential element of an offence under this section and he may be convicted under the section, though he may be in entire ignorance of the acts of his agent or manager. 28 C. 504 ; see also 2 Pat. L. J. 83 ; 20 C. W. N. 862 ; 39 C. L. J. 236=25 Cr. L. J. 1258=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 1018. But a non-resident partner or co-sharer cannot be convicted in addition to the resident sharer under ss. 154, 155. 7 C. L. R. 289 ; 39 C. L. J. 236. Where there is no resident sharer, but only an agent or manager, the absentee owner might be liable under some circumstances. 7 C. L. R. 289.

Many duties of police are by law imposed on landholders. The present section apparently proceeds upon a presumption that, in addition to any such duty, the owner or occupier of land is cognizant in a peculiar way of the designs of those who assemble on his land, and is able not only to give the police notice, but also to prevent and to disperse and suppress the assembly. It seems that an absent and non-resident owner may be made liable under this section for the misconduct of his local agents. The difficulty of proving the complicity of land-holders and others in affrays and outrages connected with the occupation of land, committed by hired agents, probably rendered necessary the introduction into the code of the four following sections. It will be noticed that circumstances which are in truth only evidence (as reasonable grounds for presuming a guilty knowledge or connivance) of an offence, become in these sections part of the definition of an offence—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not Compoundable—Tribable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First-class.

Charge.—I (name and offence of Magistrate etc) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That, on or about the day of , at , an unlawful assembly was held (or a riot was committed) upon certain land, situated at , belonging to (or in the occupation of) you, and that you (or C. D. your agent or manager) well knowing that the said unlawful assembly was being held on the said land, did not give the earliest information thereof in your (or his) power to the principal officer at the nearest police station, to wit E. F. at—and did not use all the lawful means in your (or his) power to prevent it (or disperse the said unlawful assembly) and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 154 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I do hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

155. Whenever a riot is committed for the benefit or on behalf of any person who is the owner or occupier of any land respecting which such riot takes place, or who claims any interest in such land, or in the subject of any dispute which gave rise to the riot, or who has accepted or derived any benefit therefrom, such person shall punishable with fine, if he or his agent or manager, having reason to believe that such riot was likely to be committed, or that the unlawful assembly by which such riot was committed was likely to be held, shall not respectively use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent such assembly or riot from taking place, and for suppressing and dispersing the same.

Absentee co-owner.—An absentee co-sharer who takes an active part in the management of the property, is not liable to be convicted under this section when there are other co-sharers. 8 C. W. N. 908.

Person not having property in land nor claiming interest therein is not liable. 17 C. W. N. 1247=15 Cr. L. J. 191=22 Ind. Cas. 767. A landlord is not liable for sudden unpremeditated riot. 3 W. R. 54.

Procedure.—Not cognizable——Warrant——Bailable——Not-compoundable——Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class and may be tried summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That, you or about the day of , a riot was committed for your benefit (or on behalf of you) upon certain land to wit , belonging to (or in the occupation of) you (or in which you claim an interest) etc, and that you (or C. D. your agent or manager) well knowing that the riot would be committed on the said land, did not use all the lawful means in your (or his) power to prevent the said riot etc.

Principle.—The principle on which this and the following section proceed is to subject to fine, all persons in whose interest an affray is committed and the agents of such persons, unless it can be shewn that they did what they lawfully could do to prevent the offence. The subject of dispute whether land, water, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, markets, etc., or the right to use land, etc., must be one which the person charged under this section either owns, or occupies, or lays claim to, whether he has any lawful interest therein or not. To support the charge there must be proof of the riot, and of those circumstances which lead to the inference that it was committed in the interest (and therefore presumably, at the instigation) of the person charged. It is also essential to establish by direct, or presumptive proof a knowledge or reason for belief that the offence would probably be committed. Usually, where the means of knowing are shown to exist, it will not be unreasonable to presume knowledge.

As to the proof of the matters mentioned, in the latter part of the section ("the use of all lawful means of prevention," etc), it is to be observed that in general the law supposes that every person acts legally, and does what he is required by law to do. If therefore a man is charged with omitting to do what the law enjoins, he who brings the charge must prove this omission. But there is another rule, which seems to be applicable here which requires that facts so peculiarly within the knowledge of a person that he can have little or no difficulty in being put to the proof of them shall be proved by him. Probably therefore the accused will be bound to undertake the proof of the measures employed by him, in order to exempt himself from liability to fine under this section.

The amount of fine to which the offender is, under this section, liable is unlimited. It will be borne in mind that in such cases, it is provided that the sum to which a fine may extend shall not be excessive (section 63)—Morgan and Macpherson.

156. Whenever a riot is committed for the benefit or on behalf of any person who is the owner or occupier of any land respecting which such riot takes place, or who claims any interest in such land, or in the subject of any dispute which gave rise to the riot, or who has accepted or derived any benefit therefrom,

Liability of agent of owner or occupier for whose benefit a riot is committed.

the agent or manager of such person shall be punishable with fine, if such agent or manager, having reason to believe that such riot was likely to be committed, or that the unlawful assembly by which such riot was committed was likely to be held, shall not use all lawful means in his power to prevent such riot or assembly from taking place and for suppressing and dispersing the same.

Notes.—Vide, 10 C. 338.

Scope.—See the note to the preceding section. The agent or manager is here made punishable by fine under the like circumstances. The amount of fine is here also unlimited. These two sections contain the only instances throughout the Code in which fine unlimited is the sole punishment—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st and 2nd class.

Charge.—Vide, S. 155.

157. Whoever harbours, receives or assembles in any house or premises in Harbouring persons hired for an unlawful assembly.

his occupation or charge, or under his control, any persons, knowing that such person have been hired, engaged or employed, or are about to be hired, engaged or employed, to join or become members of an unlawful assembly shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The mere collection and harbouring of any number, however small, of persons of the class there referred to, subjects the persons harbouring them, to punishment, if he knows the business for which they are, or are about to be, engaged. There must be proof that the persons harboured are employed, or about to be employed, for the purpose mentioned; and that they are received in some place of reception, (whether a house, out-house or other place) in the possession or charge of the accused person, or under his control:—as if he directs, or permits, his servants etc., to receive them into his house. A knowledge of the purpose for which the persons are or are about to be employed, must also be shown either by direct proof or otherwise. The mere fact of harbouring such persons, connected with circumstances showing that some right concerning adjacent land etc., is in violent dispute, would probably be sufficient presumptive evidence—Morgan and Macpherson. To support a conviction under section 157, it must be shown that for the purpose of an unlawful assembly, the accused had hired or engaged, or employed other persons. The mere fact that the accused's servants came from a district, where men having a well-known character as lathials reside, and that they had been in his service for some time before a riot took place, is not sufficient to support a conviction. 7 C. L. R. 289. Section 157 refers to unlawful assembly in future. 134 Ind. Cas. 1278=35 C. W. N. 720=58 C. 1401=1931 Cr. C. 992=33 Cr. L. J. 62=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 62=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 712. In the absence of the proof of hiring a conviction under s. 157 cannot be sustained. 131 Ind. Cas. 159=1931 Cr. C. 488=32 Cr. L. J. 664=1931 M. W. N. 326=A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 440. Volunteers engaged in preparing salt cannot be said to have been hired, engaged and employed by their leader. Ibid. Section 157 is of wider application than section 150. It provides for an occurrence that may happen and makes the harbouring, or receiving or assembly of persons, who are likely to be engaged in any unlawful assembly, an offence. Here also, as in section 150, the law contemplates the imminence of an unlawful assembly and the proof of facts which would go to constitute an unlawful assembly. 29 C. 214=6 C. W. N. 143.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st and 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows:—

That you....., on or about the.....day of....., at....., harboured [received or assembled] in the house (or premises) situated at.....in your occupation (or charge) or control] one X-Y knowing that he has been hired (engaged or employed or is about to be hired, engaged or employed) to join (or become member of) an unlawful assembly, and that you thereby committed an offence under section 157 of the Indian Penal Code and under my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

158. Whoever is engaged or hired, or offers or attempts to be hired or engaged to do or assist in doing any of the acts specified in section 141, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both ;

and whoever, being so engaged or hired as aforesaid, goes armed, or engages or offers to go armed, with any deadly weapon, or with anything which used as a weapon of offence is likely to cause death, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable— Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class. If the offence falls under the second part warrant instead of summons will be issued.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you....., on or about the.....day of....., at....., were engaged (or hired) by or offered (or attempted to be hired, (or engaged), to do or assist in doing any of the acts specified in section 141 to wit——and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 158 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

159. When two or more persons, by fighting in a public place, disturb the public peace, they are said to “commit an affray.”

Evidence.—The Court does not expect in an affray to find specific evidence as to acts of each fighter. General evidence as to the accused taking part in it will be sufficient. 21 C. 392. A chabutra is not a public place. 17 A. 166.

Scope.—An assault may be committed in private where it cannot cause general terror or alarm ; it is therefore treated specially as an offence against the person of an individual. (see sections 350, 351). But an affray is an offence against the public peace because it is committed in a public place and is likely to cause general alarm and disturbance. If a number of persons meet together at a fair or market, or upon any other lawful or innocent occasion, and there arises a sudden quarrel or fighting, the design of the meeting being lawful, and the breach of the peace happening without any previous intention,—only the persons who actually engage in the fight are guilty of an affray ; the other persons present cannot be charged with this or any other offence under the present chapter. Mere quarrelsome words or gestures used by two or more persons, or preparations made by them for fighting, will not constitute an affray. To support a charge of affray there must be proof of the fighting and that it was in or adjacent to a public road, street, etc., or in some other public place.—Morgan and Macpherson. Attack by one person and defence by another person is affray. A. I. R. 1931 All. 8=1931 A. L. J. 891=32 Cr. L. J. 1269=53 A. 229 ; see also 31 C. 542 ; 39 M. 886 ; 13 N. L. R. 68 ; 40 M. 556. For affray there must be two or more persons. 65 M. L. J. 723=1933 M. W. N. 718=1933 M. Cr. C. 248=38 M. L. W. 760=A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 843. The gist of the offence consists in the terror it causes to the public. A. I. R. 1931 All. 8=1931 Cr. C. 8=53 A. 229=32 Cr. L. J. 1269. This section postulates commission of definite assault or breach of peace. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 813=30 Cr. L. J. 571=116 Ind. Cas. 180. Prosecution should not lodge a complaint simply for exchanging abuse in a public street. A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 412=8 L. L. J. 82=27 Cr. L. J. 696=27 P. L. R. 176=94 Ind. Cas. 888.

160. Whoever commits an affray shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month or with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees or with both.

Scope.—Conviction under this section cannot stand without proof of disturbance of public peace. A. W. N. 1883, 197.

A public place is a place where the public can go. 31 C. 549 ; 40 M. 556 ; 13 N. L. R. 68 ; 39 M. 386 ; 15 Q. B. D. 63, 67.

The maximum substantive sentence awardable under s. 160 being only one month, the maximum term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine under s. 65, should be one-fourth of the maximum awardable for the offence. U. B. R. (1872-1892), 333. This section postulates commission of definite assault or breach of peace. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 813. Where the scene of occurrence was an unfenced and open small piece of ground merely separated from public road by a small lane which was free of access to and readily moved over by the public passing it by, held, that the affray was in a public place and that the conviction under s. 163 I. P. Code was valid in law. 6 Mys. L. J. 579. Where there is no evidence of fighting, an offence under this section has not been committed. A. I. R. 1928, Lah. 813. Offences under ss. 147 and 160 of the Penal Code respectively are obviously ejusdem generis consequently there is no impropriety whatever in convicting the accused who are charged with offence under s. 147 with offence under s. 160. 99 Ind. Cas. 861=28 Cr. L. J. 189=A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 163. In a case in which the accused was charged under section 160 I. P. C. the Magistrate gave judgment in his own handwriting but forgot to sign and date it. Held, that the omission amounted to a mere irregularity and did not effect the merits of the case. 47 A. 284=23 A. L. J. 8=86 Ind. Cas. 64=26 Cr. L. J. 688. The offence of affray is not a component part of the offence of rioting. Its essence is the disturbance to the public peace, caused by two or more persons fighting in a public place. A fight need not be in a public place, it must be by five or more persons and there need not be any fighting. 1 Mys. L. J. 147. To constitute an affray under this section there must be a fighting in a public place and consequent disturbance of public peace. 1 Weir, 71. Mere exchange of words without fighting, in consequence of an obstruction in a public way, caused to some of the accused, would not amount to an affray. Ibid : 20 Cr. L. J. 571 ; 29 Bom. L. R. 1478 ; 9 Bom. Cr. C. 160 ; 31 Bom. L. R. 922 ; 1 Hale 456.

In an affray specific evidence as to the acts of each fighter cannot be expected, but only general evidence as to the accused taking part in it, and persons who, as in this case, punted the boats on which the fight took place, were held to be just as blame-worthy as men who struck blows. 21 C. 393.

An affray differs from riot in that it may be committed by two persons. Russ, Cr. 427. Public place means a street or highway, or other place where the public may pass or be as of right. R v. O' Neill, 1r. Rep. 6 C. L. 1. A Hindu temple is a public place. 40 M. 556. So also the premises of a harbour. 39 M. 486. A place far away from a public place is a private place, R. v. Hunt, 1 Cox. 177.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate also triable summarily.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you—on or about the—day of—at—, committed the offence of affray, by fighting with each other (or with—) in—which is a public place and disturbed the public peace, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 160 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Conviction when to be set aside.—Where accused is prejudiced by not having notice of facts which constitute ingredients of offence his conviction of such offence must be set aside. 65 M. L. J. 723=1133 M. W. N. 718=1933 M. Cr. C. 248=38 M. L. W. 760=A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 843.

CHAPTER IX.

OF OFFENCES BY OR RELATING TO PUBLIC SERVANTS.

161. Whoever, being or expecting to be a public servant, accepts or Public servant taking gratification other than legal remuneration in respect of an official act.

obtains, or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain, from any person, for himself or for any other person, any gratification whatever, other than legal remuneration, as a motive or reward for doing, or forbearing to do any official act, or for showing, or forbearing to show, in the exercise of his official functions favour or disfavour to any person, or for rendering, or attempting to render, any service or disservice to any person, with the Legislative or Executive Government of India, or with the Government of any Presidency, or with any Lieutenant Governor, or with any public servant, as such' shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanations :—"Expecting to be a public servant,"—If a person not expecting to be in office obtains a gratification by deceiving others into a belief that he is about to be in office, and that he will then serve them, he may be guilty of cheating, but he is not guilty of the offence defined in this section.

"Gratification".—The word "gratification" is not restricted to pecuniary gratifications, or to gratifications estimable in money.

"Legal remuneration".—The words "legal remuneration" are not restricted to remuneration which a public servant can lawfully demand, but include all remuneration which he is permitted by the Government which he serves to accept.

"A motive or reward for doing."—A person who receives a gratification as a motive for doing what he does not intend to do, or as a reward for doing what he has not done, comes within these words.

Illustrations.

(a) A, a munsiff, obtains from Z, a banker, a situation in Z's bank for A's brother, as a reward to A for deciding a cause in favour of Z. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A, holding the office of Resident at the Court of a subsidiary Power, accepts a lakh of rupees from the Minister of that Power. It does not appear that A accepted this sum as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any particular official act, or for rendering or attempting to render any particular service to that Power with the British Government. But it does appear that A accepted the sum as a motive or reward for generally showing favour in the exercise of his official functions to that Power. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(c) A, a public servant, induces Z erroneously to believe that A's influence with the Government has obtained a title for Z, and thus induces Z to give A money as a reward for the service. A has committed the offence defined in the section.

Scope.—The above section requires proof that an official has obtained as a motive or reward for official conduct, an illegal gratification for himself or another. That other may or may not be an official, and therefore, may be wholly unconnected with the official conduct. The conduct which is contemplated as the consideration for the bribe must be that of the official obtaining it. To obtain a bribe as a motive or reward for another's conduct, does not fall within the section, though it may be an abetment of that offence or cheating. The performance of the act which is consideration of the bribe is not essential. But it is essential that the bribe should be obtained "as a motive or reward." That phrase evidently means "on the understanding that the bribe is given in consideration of some official act or conduct." Such an understanding need not be proved by explicit evidence of any precise agreement. It may be inferred from circumstances. 31 B. 336; see also I. A. 530. This section is not confined to cases in which the illegal gratification is taken for doing an act but also applies to a case where a public servant accepts the illegal gratification as a motive or reward for rendering or attempting to render any service to any one with any public servant as such. 39 M. L. T. 615=105 Ind. Cas. 829=53 M. L. J. 723. The allegation that a police officer helped a candidate for election to the Legislative Council as he has got a "silver tonic" does not amount to a charge of bribery as it is not an official act. 7 Pat. L. T. 608=97 Ind. Cas. 354. The gist of the offence is a public servant taking gratification other than legal remuneration of an official act. 8 N. L. J. 138=89 Ind. Cas. 1035=26 Cr. L. J. 1467. It is necessary to show that the offence, the instigation to which is the subject of the charge, has been committed. 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 43. The plain words of s. 161 exclude the defence that the benefit bargained for was to go to some body else, and also exclude the notion that an officer is protected if he agrees to let his official acts be swayed by the motive of accepting a gratification to be used professedly for advancing some public, not private object, such as charity, science or religion. 21 B. 517. Where a person made use of his official position and claimed and obtained money as a reward for rendering services, he is guilty under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 955; see also 3 W. R. Cr. 10; A. W. N. 1883, 179. A Civil Court peon asking a party in a suit to pay him dusturi, if he wished him to serve sommons on a witness without an identifier, is guilty of an offence of attempting to obtain an illegal gratification within section 161, Penal Code. 32 C. 292=9 C. W. N. 547=2 Cr. L. J. 204. A person giving a gratification to a public servant in consideration of screening him by not proceeding against him for an offence is not guilty of an offence under sections 161, 109 I. P. On a conviction for taking illegal gratification, a simple order to refund the money taken is quite inadequate to the gravity of the offence. 16 W. R. Cr. 74. A public servant accepting a donation to a charity in which he is interested, as a motive for showing favour to the donor in his official acts, is guilty. Gratification is not restricted to pecuniary gratification. A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 44=24 Bom. L. R. 534=23 Cr. L. J. 466=67 Ind. Cas. 818. Acknowledgment of receipt of gratification is to be proved. 18 Cr. L. 317=15 A. L. J. 127=38 Ind. Cas. 429. Chaprasi receiving money for payment to clerk of Court to register name is guilty of the offence. 18 Cr. L. J. 536=9 P. R. 1917 Cr.=39 Ind. Cas. 680. Gratification need not actually be produced. It need not be for doing any particular act but may be for rendering any service as such public servant. The principle of the illustration applies as much to the other purposes set out in s. 161 as to doing or forbearing to do any official act. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 1011=51 M. 86=53 M. L. J. 723=28 Cr. L. If a public servant erroneously represents that the particular act is within his official duty and obtains gratification by inducing such an erroneous belief in another person, he would be guilty under section 161 of the Indian Penal Code even though the act is not in fact within the exercise of his duty. Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) of follows :—

That you—on or about the—day—at—accepted (obtained or agreed to accept or attempt to obtain) from , for yourself (or for XY) a gratification of , as a motive (or reward) for inducing by corrupt or illegal means, A. Notes.—Offering of bribe to an inspector in the Finger Print Bureau, in order to make him give favourable evidence in Court is an offence under this section. 69 Ind. Cas. 445=23 Cr. L. J. 717.

Procedure.—Not Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st Class.

164. Whoever, being a public servant, in respect of whom either of the offences defined in the last two preceding sections is committed, abets the offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for abetment by public servant of offences defined in section 162 or 163.

Illustration.

A is a public servant, B, A's wife, receives a present as a motive for soliciting A to give an office to a particular person. A abets her doing so. B is punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or with fine or with both. A is punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The taking of presents by a public servant with a corrupt motive is a crime which ought to be made cognizable and punishable by the criminal courts. But the mere taking of presents by public servants when such presents are not corruptly taken is not a matter of punishment. The law, however, because of the difficulty of proving what is so little palpable as a corrupt motive, seizes upon one material circumstance of evidence of an offence, and enacts it as a definition of offence itself.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you—being a public servant in the—Department of Government abetted the commission of the offence punishable under section 162 (or section 163) by—and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 164 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or the cognizance of the Court of Session or of the High Court.)

And I do hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

165. Whoever, being a public servant, accepts or obtains, or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain, for himself, or for any other person, any valuable thing without consideration, or for a consideration which he knows to be inadequate, from any person whom he knows to have been, or to be or, to be likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted by such public servant, or having any connection with the official functions of himself or of any public servant to whom he is subordinate, or from any person whom he knows to be interested in or related to, the person so concerned.

shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

It is agreed that A shall pay fifty rupees a month, the house being such that, if the bargain were made in good faith, A would be required to pay two hundred rupees a month, A has obtained a valuable thing from Z without adequate consideration.

(b) A, a Judge, buys of Z, who has a cause pending in A's Court, Government promissory notes at a discount, when they are selling in the market at a premium. A has obtained a valuable thing from Z without adequate consideration.

(c) Z's brother is apprehended and taken before A, a Magistrate, on a charge of perjury. A sells to Z shares in a bank at a premium when they are selling in the market at a discount. Z pays A for the shares accordingly. The money so obtained by A is a valuable thing obtained by him without adequate consideration.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First or Second class.

Notes.—The proceeding or business must be one for transaction by the public servant,—or if not for transaction by himself personally, it must have some connection with the official functions of himself or of a public servant to whom he is subordinate. These expressions seem wide enough to comprise every step connected with the progress of any proceeding or business through a court or public office, as well as those which are conducted mainly by subordinate hands, as those which come under the immediate direction of the official superior,

Persons who stand in such a relative position to each other as is contemplated in this section, commit no offence within its term if they have bona-fide dealing together connecting the buying or selling of any thing. Such a practice as the sale or purchase by a public servant, even at a full and fair price, to or from a person who is a suitor, or has other business for transaction before him is not to be encouraged, even if it is to be tolerated. But this section provides no penalty for any such case. Its provisions are applicable only where a valuable thing is accepted or obtained "without consideration"; or for a consideration which the public servant knows to be inadequate.—Morgan and Macpherson.

166. Whoever, being a public servant, knowingly disobeys, any direction of the law so as to the way in which he is to conduct himself as such public servant, intending to cause or knowing it to be likely that he will, by such disobedience, cause injury to any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Illustration.

A, being an officer directed by law to take property in execution, in order to satisfy a decree pronounced in Z's favour by a Court of Justice, knowingly disobeys that direction of law, with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause injury to Z. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—The conduct of many classes of public servants in the discharge of their official duties is regulated not merely by orders received directly from their superiors, but by laws, which prescribe the course of proceeding to be followed. Such laws, whether they relate to judicial or to other proceedings, necessarily give a certain latitude of discretion to those whom they are intended to guide. "Any direction of law" indicates that the direction may be given by a written law, or it may be a mandate proceeding from a competent authority which the public servant is bound by law to obey, — as a writ or order for the liberation of a person from prison.

The offence hereby made punishable consists, not in an inadvertent or even careless, but in a corrupt departure from the direction of the law. The officer "knowingly disobeys" in order to cause "injury," i. e. illegal harm to any person in body, reputation or property, (see section 44.) There must be proof of such facts as raise an inference of wilful disobedience, coupled with the guilty knowledge or intention to injure. A public servant would always be presumed to know the law by which his conduct should be guided. But it would of course be competent to him to show in mitigation or excuse, that he acted in obedience to orders of his official superiors and without any intent to injure.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Notes.—To satisfy the requirements of this section there must be a wilful disobedience of an express direction of law; a disobedience to an order is not sufficient, even though that order may be one that is given under a provision of law. Rat. Un. C. C. 764.

167. Whoever, being a public servant, and being, as such public servant, charged with the preparation or translation of any document, frames or translates that document in a manner which he knows or believes to be incorrect, intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause, injury to any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The intention of knowledge is the essence of the offence. Errors or carelessness or ignorance are not made punishable as offences, even though they may occur in important parts of document. It must be proved, that the accused person is a public servant charged with the preparation, etc., of the document (proof, that he usually has the preparation in fact will in the first instance be sufficient)—that the document is incorrect (this knowledge or belief of this will be presumed until the contrary is proved by him)—and that he had the knowledge or intention to cause injury. Morgan and Macpherson.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

168. Whoever, being public servant, and being legally bound, as such public servant, not to engage in trade, engages in trade, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Scope.—The obligation not to trade to which this section refers, is that which arises from some prohibition which has the force of law, or by, which a person is "legally bound" (see section 43). A person engages in trade who habitually buys and sells with a view to profit. The expression, however, may be intended to bear a wider meaning here, and it will be open for the Courts to decide what is included in the term. It is considered inexpedient to permit Government servants to engage in pursuits by which their time and attention would be diverted from their proper duties. Accordingly no officer so long as he remains in the actual service of the Government, is permitted to acquire and hold lands for agricultural purposes in any part of India, and there may be other similar or more extensive prohibitions binding on all public servants. But disobedience to the orders of Government in this matter is not, it seems, to be accounted an offence punishable by this section. The present provision applies to the punishment of persons who are prohibited by law from engaging in trade. The section can scarcely be deemed to apply where the prohibition is by contract or agreement between the employer and the employed. There should be proof of the particular prohibition which is applicable; and of the trading, that is the buying and selling as a course of business—Morgan and Macpherson.

Notes.—The word "trade" in this section does not include lending money at interest. *147 P. L. R. 1903=22 P. R. 1903 Cr. ; but see (1911) N. L. Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of , at being a public servant, to wit , and being as such public servant legally bound, not to engage in trade, did engage in trade, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 168 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the same charge.

169. Whoever, being a public servant, and being legally bound, as such public servant unlawfully buying or bidding for property. public servant, not to purchase or bid for certain property, purchases or bids for that property either in his own name, or in the name of another, or jointly or in shares with others, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both ; and the property, if purchased, shall be confiscated.

Scope.—Various laws prohibit officers holding sales of property and persons employed by or subordinate to them, from purchasing directly or indirectly any property at such sales. The precise terms of the law which creates the obligation not to bid should be referred, to ; for the prohibition may not be absolute, but only against purchasing at certain sales.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at being a public servant, namely in the Department and being legally bound as such public servant, not to purchase (or bid for) property, purchased (or bade) for that property, in your own name [(or in the name of)] (or jointly) (or in shares) and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 169 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

170. Whoever pretends to hold any particular office as a public servant, Personating a public servant. knowing that he does not hold such office, or falsely personates any other person holding such office, and in such assumed character does or attempts to do any act under colour of such office, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description, for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Comment.—To support a conviction under this section, it is not necessary that the act done or attempted to be done under colour of office should be such an act as might be legally done by the public servant personated. 27 A. 295. But mere personation is insufficient to justify conviction under this section. The section further requires that the offender should be shown to have attempted to do or to have done, in such assumed character, some act under colour of such office. The phrase "an act under colour of such office" points to acts, which could not have been done, without assuming official authority or responsibility, and would not connote acts of a ministerial or mechanical character, which might be done, without requiring the justification of office in the person doing them. 9 Bom. L. R. 222. See also 9 Bom. L. R. 706=6 Cr. L. J. 79. A petition writer is not a public servant. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. 1, 265. The above section does not make the act of pretending to hold a particular office as a public servant punishable unless the person to such assumed character does or attempts to do any act under colour of such office. U. B. R. (1892—1896) Vol. I. 168.

Scope.—There are two distinct offences here punished. A may falsely pretend that he has been appointed Darogah of a certain place in the room of Z, deceased ; or he may falsely pretend to be Z, who is the Darogah of that place. In either case if he does or attempts such an act as that described he commits an offence. An act is done "under colour" of the office, if it is an act having some relation to that which he pretends to hold. If it has no relation to the office, as if A, pretending to be a servant of government, to be travelling through a district obtains money, provisions, etc., the offence may amount to cheating under s. 145, but it is not punishable under the present section. The offence first described in this clause can, it seems, be committed only where there is in fact in such office in existence. If in consequence of a dispute as to the right to nominate to an office or to remove from an office, it is uncertain who legally fills the office—a person doing an official act in the assertion of what he honestly believes to be his lawful title to the office, would not be deemed within this section.—Morgan and Macpherson. Where the accused went to the platform of a railway station and obtained admission on the pretence that he was a C. I. D. officer without purchasing a ticket. Held, that his conviction under s. 107 I. P. Code, was wrong in as much as to sustain a conviction under that section there must be one which assumes official authority. The mere assumption of false character without any attempt to do an official act is not sufficient to bring the offender within the meaning of s. 170 I. P. C. 3 Pat. L. J. 389=1918 Pat. 287=4 Pat. L. Wearing garb or carrying token used by public servant, fraudulent intent. any garb or carries any token resembling any garb or token used by that class of public servants, with the intention that it may be believed, or with the knowledge that it is likely to be believed that he belongs to that class of public servants, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description, for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

Scope.—A similar offence, wearing a soldier's dress, is defined and punished by section 140. It will be noticed that the offences complete, although no act is done or attempted in the assumed official character. The mere circumstance of wearing such a garb or using such a token with the intention or knowledge supposed, is sufficient.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Notes.—Where a person was found carrying a police jacket under his arm with the intent that it should be believed that he was a police constable, he may be convicted of an offence under this section. J. 329=1930 M. W. N. 174=121 Ind. Cas. 763.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of the Magistrate etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at , not belonging to class of public servants, wore garb of such a class of public servants to wit (or carried a token to wit which is used by class of public servants) with the intention that it may be believed, (or with the knowledge that it is likely to be believed) that you belong to that class of public servants and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 121 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

CHAPTER IXA.*

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO ELECTIONS.

171A. For the purposes of this chapter—

(a) "Candidate" means a person who has been nominated as a candidate at any election and includes a person who, when an election is in contemplation, holds himself out as a prospective candidate thereat; provided that he is subsequently nominated as a candidate at such election;

(b) "Electoral right" means the right of a person to stand or not to stand as or to withdraw from being, a candidate or to vote or refrain from voting at an election.

Scope.—This chapter "firstly" seeks to make punishable under the ordinary penal law, bribery, undue influence and persuasion and certain other malpractices at election not only, to the legislative bodies, but also to membership of public authorities, where the law prescribes a method of election; and further, to debar persons guilty of such malpractices from holding positions of public responsibility for a specific period. Secondly, it proposes to empower the commissioners appointed under the rules to exercise judicial powers of investigation in respect of elections of legislative bodies in India. Statement of Objects and Reasons. "It has been suggested in some quarters that this Chapter should be confined to offences committed in connection with elections to legislative bodies constituted under the Government of India Act. After full consideration of the question, we feel there are distinct advantages at the present time when election is to play so important a part in the new public life of India, that the public conscience should be markedly drawn to the danger of corrupt practices in relation to the franchise, whether that franchise relates to legislative or other bodies. We felt it is of the greatest importance that this principle of the purity of the franchise should be insisted on in the general criminal law of the country and that it should not be left to local legislatures to deal with the broad principles enacted in this chapter. There will be sufficient scope for these bodies in elaborating and supplementing the law as proposed in the Bill for we recognise that it is by no means exhaustive." Report of the Select Committee.

171 B. (1) Whoever—

(i) gives a gratification to any person with the object of inducing him or any other person to exercise any electoral right or of rewarding any person for having exercised any such right; or

(ii) accepts either for himself or for any other person any gratification as a reward for exercising any such right or for inducing or attempting to induce any other person to exercise any such right, commits the offence of bribery.

Provided that a declaration of public policy or a promise of public action shall not be an offence under this section.

(2) A person who offers, or agrees to give, or offers or attempts to procure, a gratification shall be deemed to give a gratification.

(3) A person who obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain a gratification shall be deemed to accept a gratification and a person who accepts a gratification as a motive for doing what he does not intend to do, or as a reward for doing what he has not done, shall be deemed to have accepted the gratification as a reward.

* Inserted by Act XXXIX of 1920.

Notes.—'Bribery' is defined primarily as the giving or acceptance of a gratification either as a motive or as a reward to any person, either to induce him to stand as, or not to stand as, or to withdraw from being, a candidate or to vote or restrain from voting at an election. It also includes offers or agreements to give or offers and attempts to procure a gratification for any person. "Gratification" is already explained in section 161 of the Penal Code and is not restricted to pecuniary gratifications or gratifications estimable in money.—Statement of Objects and Reasons, Vide, Gazette of India Part. V, p. 135 of 1920.

171C. (1) Whoever voluntarily interferes or attempts to interfere with the free exercise of any electoral right Undue influence at elections. commits the offence of undue influence at an election.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of sub-section (1).
whoever—

(a) threatens any candidate or voter, or any person in whom a candidate or voter is interested, with injury of any kind, or

(b) induces or attempts to induce a candidate or voter to believe that he or any person in whom he is interested will become or will be rendered an object of Divine displeasure or of spiritual censure, shall be deemed to interfere with the free exercise of the electoral right of such candidate or voter, within the meaning of sub-section (1).

(3) A declaration of public policy or a promise of public action, or the mere exercise of a legal right without intent to interfere with an electoral right, shall not be deemed to be interference within the meaning of this section.

Notes.—Preventing an election-candidate from coming out of his house and going to his voters for canvassing votes on the day previous to the election day does not amount to an offence under this section. 93 Ind. Cas. 692=27 P. L. R. 190=27 Cr. L. J. 468. Where a candidate remarks that Ghosh woman need not vote, no offence under section 171 C has been committed. A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 276=146 Ind. Cas. 572.

171D. Whoever at an election applies for a voting paper or votes in the name of any other person, whether living or Personation at elections. dead, or in a fictitious name, or who having voted once at such election applies at the same election for a voting paper in his own name ;

and whoever abets, procures or attempts to procure the voting by any person in any such way commits the offence of personation at an election.

Notes.—A candidate at a Municipal election was not aware that a voter was falsely personating another. He attested the voting paper but did not profess to do so on his personal knowledge and the voting officer also knew that the candidate was not doing it on his personal knowledge. Held, that the candidate was not guilty of intentionally aiding the commission of an offence under this section. 24 A. L. J. 180=94 Ind. Cas. 897=27 Cr. L. J. 705=A. I. R. 1926 All. 237. "The definition of 'personation' closely follows the definition in section 24 of the Ballot Act, 1872, and covers both a person who attempts to vote in another person's name or in a fictitious name a voter who attempts to vote twice and any person who abets, procures or attempts to procure such voting"—Statement of Objects and Reasons.

In a Municipal electoral roll Mohammad Din, son of Faquir Mohammad, was recorded as a person entitled to vote. The accused Mohammad Din whose father's name was admittedly Abdulla asked for a Ballot paper in the name of Mohammad Din, son of Faquir Mohammad ; and when questioned he asserted more than once that his father's name was Faquir Mohammad. The contention that the officer who prepared the electoral roll intended to put the accused on the register and that Mohammad Din, son of Faquir Mohammad, had no existence at all, was not proved. Held, that the accused was guilty of personation. Mohammad Din, v. Emperor, 117 Ind. Cas. 883=30 Cr. L. J. 853=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 52. When the accused had not the intention to personate the offence cannot be committed. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 246=1930 Cr. C. 199=58 M. L. J. 111=31 Cr. L. J. 329=121 Ind. Cas. 763.

171E. Whoever commits the offence of bribery shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year or with fine or with both ;

Provided that bribery by treating shall be punished with fine only.

Explanation.—‘Treating’ means that form of bribery where the gratification consists in food, drink, entertainment or provision.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at , gave a gratification to wit to , with the object of inducing him (or any other person) to exercise electoral right (or of rewarding any person for having exercised any such right) and thereby committed an offence under s. 171 E of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance, etc.

171F. Whoever commits the offence of undue influence or personation at an election shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of , at , voluntarily interfered (or attempted to interfere) with the free exercise of an electoral right to wit and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 171 F of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Notes.—Where it was found that the petitioner had intentionally but recklessly abetted the offence of false representation at a municipal election, he could not be convicted under s. 465 of Indian Penal Code. Where there are two provisions one specific and the other general, the specific provision ought to be applied in preference to the general one. 22 A. L. J. 1105. An act, to amount to an attempt must be such that if not prevented, it would complete the offence. At a municipal election the petitioner went to the officer who had the custody of the signature slips. He did not give out his name but produced a piece of paper which bore a certain number. The officer looked at the number and then at the electoral roll and asked the petitioner if he was Lachoo and he said “yes” but the patwari who was there pointed out that his name was Molkhan which was the truth. Thereupon the petitioner was turned away. Held, that the petitioner was not guilty of attempting to commit the offence of fraudulently applying for voting paper and thereby personating at election. 22 A. L. 1102. Where a candidate identifies a voter without ascertaining identity of the voter, he is guilty of abetment of personation at election. A. I. R. 1928 All. 150. Mens rea is a necessary ingredient in offence under section 171F. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 246. The offence of personation at election is a most serious one. It is an act done with deliberate intent to profit at the expense of an opponent. It is difficult of detection, and when it is found that the voter, whether alive or dead, was certainly not present at the polling station and that the candidate was not the victim of a plot, the inevitable inference is that he corruptly, wrongfully and intentionally abetted the offence. Emperor v. Badan Singh, A. I. R. 1928 All. 150.

171G. Whoever with intent to affect the result of an election makes or publishes any statement purporting to be a statement of fact which is false and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, in relation to the personal character or conduct of any candidate shall be punished with fine.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not compoundable—
Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.), hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of , at , with intent to affect the result of the election, to wit , made or published a statement to wit which statement is false and which you knew (or believed) to be false (or which you did not believe to be true) and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 171G of the Indian Penal Code.

And I hereby direct you to be tried on the said charge and within my cognizance.

Notes.—General imputations of misconduct do not come under this section. 55 M. 791=A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 511=63 M. L. J. 380=33 Cr. L. J. 665=1932 M. W. N. 1086. To advise people not to vote by making false statement is not an offence. A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 337=41 M. L. J. 577=66 Ind. Cas. 566.

171H. Whoever without the general or special authority in writing of a candidate incurs or authorises expenses on account of the holding of any public meeting or upon any advertisement, circular or publication, or in any other way whatsoever for the purpose of promoting or procuring the election of such candidate, shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees :

Provided that if any person having incurred any such expenses not exceeding the amount of ten rupees without authority obtains within ten days from the date on which such expenses were incurred the approval in writing of the candidate, he shall be deemed to have incurred such expenses with the authority of the candidate.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—
Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of , at without the general (or special) authority in writing of , a candidate incurred (or authorized) expenses on account of the holding of any public meeting [or upon any advertisement, (or circular) (or publication) or in any other way to wit] for the purpose of promoting (or procuring) the election of, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 171H of the Indian Penal Code and under my cognizance, etc.

171 I. Whoever being required by any law for the time being in force or any rule having the force of law to keep accounts for expenses incurred at or in connection with an election fails to keep such accounts shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

Notes.—"It is also made illegal for any one, unless authorized by a candidate to incur any expenses in connection with the promotion of the candidate's election and if by any law accounts have to be kept, failure to keep such accounts is made penal.—
Statement of Objects and Reasons.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—
Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, being required by law for the time being in force to wit (or by any rule having the force of law, to wit (to keep accounts of expenses incurred at (or in connection with) an election to wit , failed to keep such accounts and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 171 I. of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

CHAPTER X.

OF CONTEMPTS OF THE LAWFUL AUTHORITY OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.

172. Whoever absconds in order to avoid being served with a summons, Absconding to avoid service of summons or other proceeding.

notice or order proceeding from any public servant legally competent, as such public servant, to issue such summons, notice or order, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both ;

or, if the summons, notice or order is to attend in person or by agent, or to produce a document in a Court of Justice, with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

Object.—The object of the section is to punish an offender for the contempt his conduct indicate of the authority whose processes he disregards. In order to prove the commission of an offence under this section the existence of a summons, notice or order is necessary. It is not sufficient to show that a person apprehended that a process will be issued, and has therefore absconded. It must also be shown that the accused knew or had reason to believe that the process had issued. 4 M. 393 ; see also A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 231 = 1 Rang. 218 = 24 Cr. L. J. 848 = 74 Ind. Cas. 960. The provisions of this section do not cover the absconding from a warrant of arrest. A. I. R. 1928 A. 232.

Scope.—A refusal to sign a receipt of a summons is not offence under this section. A. W. N. 1883, 222. This section has no application in the case of a warrant, which is not "a summons, notice or order." 2 C. L. J. 625 = 3 Cr. L. J. 117 ; 5 W. R. 71 Cr. ; 4 N. W. P. 97 ; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 152 ; 1 Weir, 75 ; 28 P. R. 1890 Cr. ; but see 9 W. R. 70 Cr.

The term "abscond" is not to be understood as implying necessarily that a person leaves the place in which he is. It matters not whether a person departs from a place or remains in it, if he conceals himself ; nor does the term apply to the commencement of the concealment. 4 M. 393 = 1 Weir, 76 ; 1 Weir, 75.

Absconding by a person against whom a warrant has been issued must be dealt with in the manner provided for by the Code of Criminal Procedure, and not under section 172, Penal Code. Queen v. Amirjan, 7 N. W. P. 302. Where the accused refused to accept the notice, abuses the process server and went inside his house, the conduct of the accused did not disclose an offence under section 172, I. P. Code. 11 O. L. J. 332 = 1 O. W. N. 159.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by any Magistrate.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at , absconded in order to avoid being served with a summons (or notice) (or order) proceeding from a public servant, and thereby committed an offence under s. 172 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I thereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

173. Whoever in any manner intentionally prevents the serving on him-

Preventing service of summons or other proceeding, or preventing publication thereof.

self, or on any other person, of any summons, notice, or order proceeding from any public servant legally competent, as such public servant, to issue such summons, notice, or order, or intentionally prevents the lawful affixing to any place of any such summons, notice, or order, or intentionally removes any such summons, notice, or order from any place to which it is lawfully affixed, or intentionally prevents the lawful making of any proclamation, under the authority of any public servant legally competent, as such public servant to direct such proclamation to be made,

shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both ;

or, if the summons, notice order, or proclamation, is to attend in person or by agent, or to produce a document in a Court of Justice, with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Refusal to sign a summons.—A refusal to receive and sign a summons does not constitute a prevention of service within the meaning of this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 17 ; 5 B. H. C. Cr. 34 ; 3 C. 612 ; 20 C. 356 ; 24 A. L. J. 216=27 Cr. L. J. 142=91 Ind. Cas. 814 ; 24 A. L. J. 215=92 Ind. Cas. 460=27 Cr. L. J. 284 ; 23 A. L. J. 148=86 Ind. Cas. 973=26 Cr. L. L. J. 801=21 O. C. 150=46 Ind. Cas. 817. A refusal to sign an acknowledgment of summons issued by a Magistrate and the throwing down the summons do not amount to a prevention of service within the meaning of section 173. 1 Weir, 80. Where a person refuses to receive a summons and throws it down, he cannot be said to have prevented the service of the summons. 5 M. 200 Note—1 Weir 79. A refusal to receive a summons is not an offence under section 173, Penal Code. The words "any manner prevents the service" cannot apply when the summons is tendered and refused as it is good service. 5 M. 199=1 Weir, 80=6 Ind. Jur. 410. Refusal to accept or to sign the duplicate of a citation issued under section 147 of the Land Registration Act is not an offence under section 173 of the Indian Penal Code. 6 A. L. J. 777=31A. 608=3 Ind. Cas. 965. A refusal to serve as a special constable, when ordered to do so, is no offence under section 173 of the Penal Code and proceedings taken under that section for such refusal are bad in law and should be quashed. 2 C. L. J. 555=10 C. W. N. 82=3 Cr. L. J. 169. Refusal to sign order requiring accused's attendance under s. 160 Criminal Procedure Code is not an offence under this section. A. W. N. 1886, 93. A Tahsildar is not competent to issue a summons for a purpose not contemplated by Act III of 1869. Disobedience to such a summons is not an offence under this section. In re Timma Royan, 1 Weir, 96. Under the Cr. P. Code the mere tender to person of a summons is sufficient and a refusal by him to receive it does not constitute the offence of intentionally preventing service thereof on himself under section 173 of the Penal Code. 40A. 577=16 A. L. J. 453. For a conviction under section 173 I. P. Code it is necessary to prove that the accused prevents the process server from tendering the summons. Mere refusal to accept a summons when tendered does not amount to intentionally preventing service of summons. 57 Ind. Cas. 928=21 Cr. L. J. 688 ; 74 Ind. Cas. 65=2 Bur. L. J. 22. A man who gets away from a service officer with the obvious intention of not allowing him to hold any communication with him at all and shuts himself in his house is intentionally preventing service either by tender or by delivery and is liable to be convicted under s. 173 I. P. Code. 107 Ind. Cas. 563=29 Cr. L. J. 263=26 A. L. J. 107.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd Class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at , intentionally prevented the serving on yourself (or on any other person), of a summons (or notice) (or order) to wit—proceeding from (name the public servant) as such—, to issue such summons, notice or order, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 173 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

174. Whoever, being legally bound to attend in person or by an agent at a certain place and time in obedience to a summons, notice, order, or proclamation proceeding from any public servant legally competent, as such public servant, to issue the same, intentionally omits to attend at that place or time, or departs from the place where he is bound to attend before the time at which it is lawful for him to depart, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both ; or, if the summons, notice, order, or proclamation is to attend in person or by agent in a Court of Justice, with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Non-attendance in obedience to an order from public servant.

Illustrations.

(a) A being legally bound to appear before the Supreme Court at Calcutta, in obedience to a subpoena issuing from that Court, intentionally omits to appear. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A, being legally bound to appear before a Zillah Judge, as a witness, in obedience to a summons issued by that Zillah Judge, intentionally omits to appear. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—In order to sustain a conviction under this section, it has to be shown that the summons issued was issued by a public servant legally competent, as such public servant to issue the same, and that the accused intentionally omitted to attend in pursuance of the summons. 12 A. L. J. 680. Section 147 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act when it gives a revenue official exercising fiscal functions authority to issue a citation to a defaulter to appear gives him authority to order that person to appear before him and the person is obliged to appear before him, if so ordered, under the penalties laid down by s. 174. 4 O. The mere fact of inaccuracy in naming a person who is personally summoned may not be a sufficient ground for acquitting a person so served for an offence under section 174 Penal Code. 1 Weir. 892. Before a person can be convicted of an offence under section 174 it must be shown that he intentionally omitted to attend in obedience to the summons. It is not sufficient to prove that the summons was affixed to the house of those called on to attend and that they did not attend. It must also be proved that the summons was brought to their knowledge, that they were required to attend, and that they intentionally omitted to do so. 1 Weir 84. A summons which is tendered to the accused, but which the accused refuses to receive, is a legal summons, as the service amounts to personal service. A Magistrate cannot try a person for an offence under s. 174 for disobedience of his summons. 35 P. L. R. 454=A. I. R. 1934 Lah. 545=1934 Cr. C. 365.

Person appearing in obedience to summons, but departing without permission is not punishable unless the summons contained a direction that he should not leave the office without express permission. 1 Weir 99. Where a summons has not fixed any time for attendance an omission to attend in pursuance of such a summons is not an offence. Colm. Dig. Cr. 88 of 1877. Where, in a summons, no place is specified at which a person summoned is to appear, a person disobeying the summons does not omit to attend a certain place as is required by the section. 1 Weir 81; 14 P. R. 1887 Cr.; 1 Weir 100; A. W. N. 1883, 109. An accused cannot be convicted under this section when the summons in question is a process not provided by the law. 2 P. R. 1871 Cr. An order to the police directing the police to inform the parties of the date is neither a summons nor a notice under this section. A W. N. 1890, 1. Where the accused failed to attend Court in obedience to a direction by the Court, but the case was not taken up owing to other demands on the Magistrate's times no conviction can be made under s. 174, Penal Code. 3 S. L. R. 155=4 Ind. Cas. 410=10 Cr. L. J. 576. Before convicting a witness under section 174, the court is bound to decide whether there was an intentional disobedience to the summons, after giving him an opportunity of explaining his absence. 27 P. W. R. 1907 Cr.=7 Cr. L. J. 226; 2 Bur. L. J. 146=1 Rang. 549. Section 160, Cr. Pro Code does not authorise a police officer to require the attendance of an accused person with a view to his answering the complaint made against him. The disobedience of such an order, therefore, cannot fall within s. 174 I. P. Code. 4 Bom. L. R. 644. An officer should not try himself an offence under section 174, I. P. Code, in his capacity as a Magistrate, when the offence has been committed before him in his capacity as a settlement officer. 2 A 405; S. C. 99 Oudh. Actual service of the summons, notice or order, must be strictly proved, or be admitted before a conviction can be had under s. 174, Penal Code, for non-attendance in obedience to such summons, notice or order. S. C. 99 Oudh; A. W. N. 1882, 52; 6 M. H. C. App. 29. A summons directing a person to appear within a certain number of days, without specifying a particular day for the appearance, does not comply with the requirements of the section. 1 Weir 82.

A complainant can hardly be held a witness punishable for refusal to answer question either under section 485, Cr. Pro. Code, or under section 174 I. P. Code. 13 B. 600. A verbal order given to a witness by a court, to attend court on a particular day at a particular hour, is an order, the disobedience of which is punishable under section 174 of the Penal Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 75; 5 M. H. C. App. 15; but see 1 Weir 86=2 Weir 123. A service of notice on the pleader of the accused is not a sufficient notice to make the party liable under this section. 6 C. W. N. 927. The mere production of the summons to the accused, with an endorsement of service and the alleged mark of the accused, is not sufficient proof of service in the face of his denial that he received the summons. 1 Weir 85. The absconding of an accused after having seen warrant for his arrest, is not an offence under this section. 1 Weir 89=7 M. H. C. App. 43. Where there is no order for personal appearance, a person cannot be convicted under this section for non-attendance. 2 Lah. L. J. 539. Where summons has not been issued according to law, there cannot be conviction under section 174 I. P. C. 59 Ind. Cas. 335=22 Cr. L. J. 79. The mere fact that a person is so incapacitated by illness as to be obliged to give up his ordinary advocations would be sufficient excuse for him not to attend a Court in obedience to a summons. It is not necessary that he should have been so dangerously ill that he could not move. 20 A. L. J. 192=65 Ind. Cas. 854=23 Cr. L. J. 208. Disobedience to a verbal order of a cantonment magistrate to attend does not constitute an offence under section 174 I. P. Code in the absence of proof that the order issued by the Magistrate was issued in his capacity as magistrate or that he was legally empowered to issue such order. 23 Cr. L. J. 230=66 Ind. Cas. 70. What is made punishable by law under section 174 is an intentional disobedience to the summons of a Court. The word, 'intention' does not appear to have been defined in the I. P. Code, but it has been interpreted to mean non-attendance which amounts to wilful disobedience. 72 Ind. Cas. 593=24 Cr. L. J. 433=1923 Lah. 163. When a summons has been served just a day before the date fixed for appearance and the place is somewhat distant from the place of appearance, the accused cannot be convicted under this section. 26 A. Illustrations.

(a) A, a landholder, knowing of the commission of a murder within the limits of his estate, wilfully misinforms the Magistrate of the district that the death has occurred by accident in consequence of the bite of a snake. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

(b) A, a village watchman, knowing that a considerable body of strangers has passed through his village in order to commit a dacoity in the house of Z a wealthy merchant residing in a neighbouring place, and being bound, under cl. 5, s. VII Reg 111, 1821, of the Bengal Code, to give early and punctual information of the above fact to the officer of the nearest police-station, wilfully misinforms the police officer that a body of suspicious characters passed through the village with a view to commit dacoity in a certain distant place in different direction. Here A is guilty of the offence defined in the latter part of this section.

Explanation.—In section 176 and in this section the word “offence” includes any act committed at any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459 and 460; and the word “offender” includes any person who is alleged to have been guilty of any such act.

Scope.—To come within the provisions of this section, the accused must be shown to be legally bound to furnish information, and to have furnished false information. 1 Weir. 106; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 210; in order to justify a conviction under this section, it is not necessary to prove an intention to defraud. It is enough to show that the information furnished as true was either known to be false or not believed to be true. 1 Weir. 107. This section embraces every case in which a subordinate seeks to impose false information upon his superior. 6 M. H. C. App. 48. The first part of the section deals with a simple case of a person who being bound to furnish true information to a public servant furnishes a false information to him. Under the second clause of the section the information which a person is legally bound to give for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence refers not to the commission of offences generally but to the commission of some particular offence. 15 C. 386; 20 A. 151; S. Charge. I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:

That you on or about the day of , at , being legally bound by an oath (or affirmation) to state the truth, on a certain subject, to wit ; to a public servant [or person authorised by law to administer such oath (or affirmation)] did make to such touching the aforesaid subject, a statement to wit which was false, [or which you knew (or believed) to be false] [or which you did not believe to be true] and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 181 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

False information with intent to cause public servant to use his lawful power to the injury of another person.

182. Whoever gives to any public servant any information which he knows or believes to be false, intending thereby to cause, knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, such public servant—

- (a) to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known by him, or
- (b) to use the lawful powers of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Illustrations.

(a) A informs a Magistrate that Z, a police-officer, subordinate to such Magistrate, has been guilty of neglect of duty or misconduct, knowing such information to be false, and knowingly it to be likely that the information will cause the Magistrate to dismiss Z. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b) A falsely informs a public servant that Z has contraband salt in a secret place, knowing such information to be false, and knowing that it is likely that the consequence of the information will be a search of Z's premises attended with annoyance to Z. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(c) A falsely informs a policeman that he has been assaulted and robbed in the neighbourhood of a particular village. He does not mention the name of any person as one of his assailants, but knows it to be likely that, in consequence of this information, the police will make enquiries and institute searches in the village to the annoyance of the villagers or some of them. A has committed an offence under this section.

Legislative changes.—This section has been substituted by Act 3 of 1895.

Scope of the section.—This section makes the giving of false information to a public servant punishable in two cases, first, when the intention or knowledge, with which the false information is given is to cause the public servant to use his lawful power to the injury or annoyance of any person, and secondly, when the intention is to cause the public servant to do or omit to do anything which he ought not to do or omit to do. It is not necessary that the public servant shall have been actually induced to do or omit to do anything. It is sufficient if the person giving the false information intended to cause or knew it to be likely that such information would cause, the public servant to do or omit to do something which he would not have done if the true state of facts had been known to him. The offence consists in the giving of false information with intent to mislead a public servant and is complete whether the public servant was or was not misled. The imputability consists in the consciousness that a deception is practised upon a public servant in contempt of his authority as such, and that he might thereby be induced to do what he ought not to do in the discharge of his duty as a public servant so as to prejudice the public interest. 1 Weir 118; 26 M. 640; 25 Ind. Cas. 1000; 11 Mys. L. J. 483. Statements made by prisoners for the purposes of their defence cannot bring them under the provisions of s. 182, as information given to a public servant. 2 N. W. P. 128. A conviction under s. 182 of the Penal Code, could not be sustained against a person who gave false answers to questions put by a police officer in the course of investigation of a cognizable offence. The ordinary meaning of the expression "give information" is to volunteer information, not to make statements in answer to questions put by a public servant. 2 Cr. L. J. 474 = U. B. R. 1905, Penal Code 18. "Information" is not restricted to first information recorded under Criminal Procedure Code s. 154. A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 555 = 1933 Cr. C. 1268 = 14 P. L. T. 541 = 146 Ind. An officer in charge of a police station is not competent to make a complaint under section 182, I. P. Code, or to give the sanction required under section 168 Criminal Procedure Code, for such a prosecution. 116 P. R. 1866 Cr. An accused may be convicted of an offence under s. 182 of the Penal Code, even if the petition containing the information given by him is not actually signed by him. 11 Cr. L. J. 3 = 4 Ind. A person who was accused of an offence before a Court could not with impunity make a false charge against the presiding officer of the Court, such charge being ordinarily punishable under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, and could not escape because his object was to get the case transferred to another Court. 12 O. C. 308 = 4 Ind. Cas. 160 = 10 Cr. L. J. 509; but see 7 A. L. J. 1143 = 1 Ind. Cas. 914 = 11 Cr. L. J. 537. In order to support a conviction under this section, the information given should have been information which the informer knew or believed to be false, and it should have been proved that he gave it with such knowledge. 9 W. R. Cr. 31. Where a charge against another person is made by a witness not in the course of his evidence or in answer to a question but quite voluntarily and irrelevantly sanction can be properly granted to prosecute a witness under s. 182 of the Penal Code. 13 Cr. L. J. 56 = 13 Ind. Cas. 392 = 4 Bur. L. T. 262. Section 182, and not merely s. 211 of the Code, applies to cases in which false statement charged is made to a Police officer. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a prosecution for making a false complaint, till that complaint has been finally determined. 4 C. L. J. 88 = 4 Cr. L. J. 68. Section 182 of the Indian Penal Code relates only to cases of information given to officials, with the intention of causing or with knowledge that it is likely to cause, that official to do or omit to do something, which he ought not to do or omit to do, or to use his lawful power to the injury or annoyance of any person. 9 Bom. L. R. 33=31 B. 204. Section 182, Penal Code, is to be interpreted not in isolation but in association with section 211 of the Code. Where the information conveyed to the police amounts to the institution of criminal proceedings against a defined person it amounts to the falsely charging of a defined person with an offence as defined in the Penal Code, then the person giving such information has committed an offence punishable under section 211. In such a case, section 211 is and section 182 is not, the appropriate section under which to frame a charge. Section 182 when read with s. 211, must be understood as referring to cases when the information given to the public servant falls short of amounting to the institution of criminal proceedings against a defined person and falls short of amounting to the false charging of a defined person with an offence as defined in the Penal Code. 15 Bom. L. R. 574=2 Bom. Cr. C. 86=14 Cr. L. J. 491=20 Ind. Cas. 747; see also A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 69. Where a person in whose house a theft took place informed the police that he suspected two persons as perpetrators of the crime, held, that this did not amount to giving false information within the meaning of s. 182 of the Penal Code. 22 C. Code applies to a case in which it is intended that a public servant should not do or omit to do something which he would be legally justified in doing or omitting to do if he knew the true facts. 16 A. L. J. 814=47 Ind. Cas. 91. Information must be proved to have been false to the knowledge of the accused or that he believed it to be false. 52 Ind. Cas. 282. To constitute an offence under section 182 I. P. Code of giving false information of a threatened breach of the peace, it is necessary for the prosecution to prove not merely an absence of a reasonable and probable cause of giving the information but a positive knowledge or belief of the falsity of the information given. 53 Ind. Cas. 695; see also 62 Ind. Cas. 327=2 P. L. R. 1922. 22 Cr. L. J. 503; 22 Cr. L. J. 347=61 Ind. Cas. 171; 69 Ind. Cas. 81=A. I. R. 1923 Oudh. 4=9 O. L. J. 342=23 Cr. L. J. 641=26 O. C. 44. On a prosecution for an offence under section 182 I. P. Code, the mere fact that the information was shown to be false does not throw the burden of proof on the accused that when he gave the information he believed it to be true. It is incumbent on the prosecution to show that the only reasonable inference was that he must have known or believed it to be false. 69 Ind. Cas. 81=23 Cr. L. J. 641=2 U. P. L. R. (O. C.) 81=9 O. L. Where in support of an application to transfer a criminal case, a person swore to an affidavit containing allegations which were subsequently found to be false and handed it over to the pleader of the complainant, who filed it in Court, the deponent cannot be prosecuted under section 182, I. P. Code, as there is no information given to a public servant within the meaning of this

The distinction between a charge under section 211 and a mere report under section 182, I. P. Code, may be put thus. If the complainant confines himself to reporting what he knows of the facts, stating his suspicions, and leaving the matter to be further investigated by the police or leaving the police to take such course as they might think right in the performance of their duty; he may be making a report, but he is not making a charge. But if he takes the further step, without waiting for any official investigation, of definitely alleging his belief in the guilt of a specified person, and his desire that the specified person be proceeded against in Court, that act of his, whether verbal or written, if made to an officer of the law authorized to initiate proceedings based upon the complainant's statement, whether amounting to an expression of the complainant's belief in the guilt of the specified person or his desire that Court proceedings be taken against him amounts to making a charge. 22 A. L. J. 137 Cr.; 22 A. L. J. 829; see also 82 Ind. Cas. 718=25 Cr. L. J. 1358.

A prosecution under section 182 I. P. Code will lie quite irrespective of whether the action which a public servant is asked to take on information given to him is a legal one or not. 75 Ind. Cas. 289=24 Cr. L. J. 913. To bring a case within s. 182 I. P. Code, it is necessary for the prosecution to establish not merely that the information as given was such that the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that they knew or believed it to be false. 110 Ind. Cas. 785=29 Cr. L. J. 753.

Even where accused persons do not desire to take action under section 211 I. P. Code, a Court of law has authority to complain against a false complaint under s. 182 of the Code which is contained in Chapter X relating to contempt of the lawful authority of public servants. A. I. R. 1928 All. 333. The false information to the police was followed by a complaint to the Magistrate on the same facts and the same charge. The Magistrate tried the complaint and classified it to be false. The police is to lay a complaint under section 182 for false information given to them. Held, the offence alleged falls under section 211 and a complaint by the Magistrate before whom the charge was made is necessary. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 243. Where offence falls under both sections 182 and 211, prosecution under section 182 is quite improper. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 254; 23 S. L. R. 225=115 Ind. Cas. 313. When a complaint is made by a public servant for an offence punishable under s. 182, I. P. Code, a Magistrate is governed only by the rules in Chapter XVI of the Cr. Pro. Code. 30 Cr. L. J. 710. To constitute an offence punishable under section 182, I. P. Code, it is necessary that the information given should be information which the accused person knows or believes to be false. 30 P. L. R. 655. Even if a Magistrate is disentitled by a statutory bar to take cognizance of any offence under section 182 I. P. Code, cognizance by him of an offence under s. 211 is not also barred without any statutory provision to that effect. 117 Ind. Cas. 37=30 Cr. L. J. 710. To constitute the offence accused should know that there was no just or lawful ground for proceeding. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 54.

This section makes the giving of false information to a public servant penal, when either of the two consequences is intended to be caused or is known to be likely to be caused by the false information, the first being the causing "the public servant to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person" and the second being the causing the "public servant to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit, if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given, were known to him." The second part of the section can, therefore, be read without importing into it the words "to the injury or annoyance of any person." It is sufficient if the public servant does or omit anything which he ought not to do or omit, if the true state of facts were known to him. As a public servant is bound to act in the discharge of his duty properly it may often be interference with his duty, and thus dangerous to the public welfare, if through false information he is prevented from acting, or induced to act wrongly. 13B. 506. In order to support a conviction under this section, the information should have been information which the informer knew or believed to be false, and it should have been proved that he gave it with such knowledge. 9 W. R. Cr. 31. See also 31B. 204; 15 Bom. L. R. 574; 15 Cr. L. J. 672. The expression "give information" in this section should not be interpreted as meaning volunteering information, but is intended to apply to a statement made in answer to a question put by a public servant. 104 Ind. Cas. 712=28 Cr. L. J. 872. This section deals with giving information to a public servant, as opposed to lodging a complaint in Court and requires that the information given by the accused should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or belief of the informant. 19 S. L. R. 91. For a conviction under this section it is not necessary that the false report must be taken down from dictation. 3 O. W. N. 96 (Sup)=95 Ind. Cas. 598=27 Cr. L. J. 822. The word "give" in this section does not bear the restricted meaning of "volunteer". 26 Cr. L. J. 1532=90 Ind. Cas. 316=A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 364. "Gives information" in this section does not necessarily mean "volunteers" information. A. I. R. 1929 4; see also A. I. R. 1928 P. 56. Inability to substantiate a claim is not an offence under this section. A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 574. The penalties of s. 182, I. P. Code, could not be applied to the case of a person, giving to the Collector of a District incorrect information that in the informant's opinion the Collector had a claim on behalf of the state, of which the local Zemindars had, according to the informant, usurped possession. 4A. 498=A. W. N. 1882, 128. For an offence under section 182, it is only necessary that the information given by the accused to a public servant should be false to his knowledge, whereas to constitute an offence under section 211, it is necessary that the accused should institute or cause to be instituted some criminal proceedings against another person or should falsely charge him with having committed an offence. (1917) M. W. N. 875.

The offence under this section is complete when false information is given to a public servant to institute proceedings against a third person. The offence is complete, although the public servant takes no step towards the institution of criminal proceedings. 15A. 336=A. W. N. 1893, 111. The words "to use his lawful power" in this section refer to some power to be exercised by the officer misinformed, which shall tend to some direct and immediate prejudice of the person against whom the information is levelled. 4 M. 241=2 Weir, 256. It is not essential for the public servant mentioned in s. 182 to have been induced to do anything or omit to do anything. 13A. 351=A. W. N. 1891, 109. It is against the public servant to whom the false information is given that the offence under s. 182 is committed, and it is complete if the false information is given irrespectively of the results which may actually follow the action that may be taken upon it. 3 N. W. P. 194. Under section 182 accused must have known or believed information to be false while under section 211 if he had reasons to believe it to be false it is enough. A. I. R. 1925 Sindh. 184. The expression "gives information" in section 182 I. P. Code not only includes information given voluntarily but also a statement made within the course of investigation by the police. 7 Pat. 715. Where false reports were submitted both to the police and to a magistrate the police cannot start proceeding under section 182, where the magistrate has not started proceeding under section 211. 26 A. L. J. 533=A. I. R. 1928 All. 342; see also A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 12=8 Rang. 499=1931 Cr. C. 28=32 Cr. L. J. 202. When the charge under either s. 182 or 211 is in respect of the same offence there cannot be separate trials under the two sections. 17 Cr. L. J. 177=33 Ind. Cas. 817; see also 23 Cr. L. J. 55=14 L. B. R. 43=64 Ind. Cas. 839.

Scope.—Resistance to the taking is punishable when the taking is by lawful authority. Morgan and Macpherson. Resistance to a distraint which is not issued

184. Whoever intentionally obstructs any sale of property offered for sale by the lawful authority of any public servant, as such shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Notes.—Notices, etc., such as are sometimes given at public sales by persons having or claiming in good faith to have a right or interest in the property to be sold, would not be deemed obstructions. But such notices if clearly not bona fide, and merely for the purpose of injuring the sale, might be so. Morgan and Macpherson. 186. Whoever voluntarily obstructs any public servant in the discharge of his public functions, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Comment.—To constitute an offence under this section, the obstruction must be intentional and it must be direct. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. 1. 266. To support a conviction under this section it is requisite to prove that the public servant was obstructed in the discharge of his public functions. 15 Bom. L. R. 315. There must be actual obstruction and not a mere withholding of assistance or inciting of others to withhold assistance. 6 C. P. L. R. Cr. 5. Where the action of a public servant is not justifiable in law, obstruction to him is not an offence. 4 Bom. L. R. 437. But where a person not only refuses to give up property but threatens to do harm to the police-officer if he ventures to carry out the warrant, he commits an offence under s. 186 I. P. A person between whom and the Municipality there is a bona fide dispute as to the ownership of the road commits no offence, under section 186 I. P. Wife in chaining out-door of house to prevent execution of warrant against her husband’s property commits no offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 407=Cr. Reg. 79 of 1888.

The use of the word "voluntarily" in this section indicates the commission of some overt act of obstruction and does not render mere passive conduct penal. Refusing to open a closed door does not amount to voluntary obstruction. The public functions contemplated by this section are not intended to cover any act that a public functionary may take upon himself to perform even he believes he is acting in the discharge of his duties. 25 Cr. Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

187. Whoever, being bound by law to render or furnish assistance to any public servant in the execution of his public duty, intentionally omits to give such assistance, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both, and, if such assistance be demanded of him by a public servant legally competent to make such demand for the purposes of executing any process lawfully issued by a Court of Justice, or of preventing the commission of an offence, or of suppressing a riot, or affray, or of apprehending a person charged with or guilty of an offence, or of having escaped from lawful custody, shall be punished with the simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Scope.—This section and s. 188, apply to direct refusal or omission of a person bound by law to render or furnish assistance to a public servant in the execution of his public duty. 7 C. L. R. 575. The word "assistance" referred to in the first part of this section is ejusdem generis with the various forms of assistance specified in the latter half of the section. The assistance must have some direct personal relation to the execution of the duty by the public officer. 26 M. 419 (F. B.); see also 38 M. L. J. 27=1920 M. W. N. 110; 139 Ind. Cas. 106=1932 Cr. 188. Whoever, knowing that, by an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, he is directed to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management, disobeys such direction, shall, if such disobedience causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance, or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance, or injury, to any person lawfully employed, be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both;

and, if such disobedience causes or tends to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or causes or tends to cause a riot or affray, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Explanation.—It is not necessary that the offender should intend to produce harm or contemplate his disobedience as likely to produce harm. It is sufficient that he knows of the order which he disobeys, and that his disobedience produces, or is likely to produce, harm.

Illustration.

An order is promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, directing that a religious procession shall not pass down a certain street. A knowingly disobeys the order and thereby causes danger of riot, A has committed the offence defined in this section.

Scope.—Order by competent authority must be obeyed. 141 Ind. Cas. 720=34 Bom. L. R. 1523=34 Cr. L. J. 199=A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 1. To justify a conviction under this section, it is necessary to establish that the disobedience "causes or tends to cause, obstruction, annoyance, or injury to any person lawfully employed, and to make the offence graver, it must be established that such disobedience causes or tends to cause danger to human life, health or safety; or causes or tends to cause a riot or affray." A. W. N. 1186, 251. In order to constitute an offence under this section it is necessary to show, first, a lawful order promulgated by a public servant; secondly, a knowledge of the order and disobedience of it; and thirdly, the result that is likely to follow such disobedience. 4 C. W. N. 226; see also A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 122=35 C. W. N. 257. To sustain a conviction under this section, it is essential that there should be evidence to show that the disobedience would produce one of the consequences specified in the section. Rat. Un. Cr. By an order under section 114 of the Criminal Procedure Code the petitioners were directed not to make any disturbance over a certain person's right of a ferry and thereafter the petitioners being found plying another ferry at the site in question but not causing any disturbance were ordered to be prosecuted under section. 188 I. P. Code. 22 C. W. N. 599=46 Ind. Cas. 515=19 Cr. L. J. 739. Cognizance of a case under section 188, I. P. Code cannot be taken except, in accordance with the provisions of s. 195 Cr. P. Code and under section 487 Cr. Pro. Code, the Magistrate whose order is disobeyed is not competent to try the case. 23 C. W. N. 520=29 C. L. J. 282. It is essential for a prosecution under s. 188, Penal Code that the disobedience of the order "causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed." 3 Pat. L. T. 268=23 Cr. L. J. 381=67 Ind. Cas. 205.

Section 188 is obviously intended to apply to orders passed by public functionaries in the public interest or to prove a breach of the peace or other lawful disturbance and not to orders made in civil suits between party and party for the breach of which a remedy has been provided by the Code of Civil Procedure. 24 O. C. 18=61 Ind. Cas. 237=22 Cr. L. J. 381. It is the duty of the prosecution in every case under section 188 to prove by positive evidence that the accused had knowledge of the order with the disobedience of which he is charged. The proof of general notification promulgating the order does not satisfy the requirements of the section. 63 Ind. Cas. 865=22 Cr. L. J. 705. Sanction to prosecute under s. 188 should not be granted unless all the elements necessary for conviction are proved. 21 Cr. L. J. 675=57 Ind. Cas. 915; see also A. I. R. 1923 Pat. 131=4 P. L. T. 13=24 Cr. L. J. 583=73 Ind. Cas. 327. The validity of a final order under s. 133 of the Cr. Pro. Conviction for disobeying such order is unsustainable. 146 Ind. Cas. 169=1933 Cr. C. 1274=A. I. R. 1933 Cal. 724. Breach of order of Commissioner of Police under s. 62A (4) Calcutta Police Act and s. 93A Suburban Police Act is an offence under s. 188. 132 Ind. Cas. 174=35 C. W. N. 716=32 Cr. L. J. 844=58 C. 1303=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 410. Accused need not prove that disobedience of order by some one else than himself was without his consent. A. I. R. 1933 Sind. 93=142 Ind. Cas. 591=1933 Cr. C. 228=34 Cr. L. J. 362.

Legality of the order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure could not be questioned in proceedings under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code. 34 C. L. J. 578. The question whether the order disobeyed is a legal order is an entirely distinct question from whether an offence has been committed in disobeying it. If the order is legal, the Court has only to see whether the accused disobeyed it and if so, whether such disobedience caused or tendered to cause the effects specified in the second or third paragraphs of the section. 45A. 526=73 Ind. Cas. 801; see also 111 Ind. Cas. 461=29 Cr. L. J. 877. The offence of disobedience of an order duly promulgated, by a public servant under certain prescribed conditions is an offence under s. 188 I. P. Code. 31 Bom. L. R. 1151=A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 433.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you, on or about the day of at knowing that by an order, to wit promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, you are directed to abstain from (state the name of the act) or to take certain order to wit with certain property, to wit, in your possession (or under your management) disobeyed such direction, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

189. Whoever holds out any threat of injury to any public servant, or to any person in whom he believes that public servant to be interested, for the purpose of inducing that public servant to do any act, or to forbear or delay to do any act, connected with the exercise of the public functions of such public servants, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both.

Gist of the offence.—In order to sustain a conviction under this section there must be a threat of injury to either the public servant or to any one in whom the accused believes that public servant to be interested. What the section deals with are menaces which would have a tendency to induce the public servant to alter his actions because of some possible injury to himself or to some one in whom the accused believes he has an interest. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 273; see also 28 M. L. J. 505=39 M. 561. It is most material in a prosecution under this section, that the actual words used by the accused towards the public servant, should be mentioned before the Court to enable it to ascertain whether, in fact, a threat of injury to the public servant was really made by the accused. 8 A. 380. Where the accused was arrested under civil warrant and refused to follow the court peon and threatened him with violence and offence under this section has been committed. A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 183=25 Cr. L. J. 1237=82 Ind. Cas. 165. Mere threat of legal complaint is not an "injury". A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 136=6 Lah. 558=27 Cr. L. J. 400=27 P. L. R. 87=93 Ind. Cas. 48.

Injury under this section implies an illegal harm. Ibid; see also 934 Ind. Cas. 536=32 Cr. L. J. 1181=58 C. 392=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 448.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First or Second Class.

190. Whoever holds out any threat of injury to any person for the purpose of inducing that person to refrain or desist from making a legal application for protection against any injury to any public servant legally empowered, as such, to give such protection, or so cause such protection to be given, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or or with both.

Notes.—A notice of intention to file civil suit for a declaration of right against a person does not amount to holding out threat or injury. 92 Ind. Cas. 863=24 A. L. J. 314=27 Cr. L. J. 357. But excommunication for instituting a civil suit falls under this section 8 M. 140.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not—compoundable—Triable by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate first or second Class.

CHAPTER XI.

OF FALSE EVIDENCE AND OFFENCE AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE.

Scope.—Many things which interfere with the administration of justice are made punishable in the preceding chapter. The chapter is intended to provide, for certain offences of that description which either do not properly fall within other chapters or which calls for more severe punishment because committed in order to obstruct public justice. It includes false evidence, and certain other offences against justice.—Morgan and Macpherson.

191. Whoever, being legally bound by an oath, or by any express provision of law, to state the truth, or being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject, makes any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, is said to give false evidence.

Explanation 1.—A statement is within the meaning of this section, whether it is made verbally or otherwise.

Explanation 2.—A false statement as to the belief of the person attesting is within the meaning of this section, and a person may be guilty of giving false evidence by stating that he believes a thing which he does not believe, as well as by stating that he knows a thing which he does not know.

Illustrations.

(a) A, in support of a just claim which B has against Z for one thousand rupees, falsely swears on a trial that he heard Z admit the justice of B's claim. A has given false evidence.

(b) A, being bound by an oath to state the truth, states that he believes a certain signature to be the handwriting of Z when he does not believe it to be the handwriting of Z. Here A states that which he knows to be false and, therefore, gives false evidence.

(c) A, knowing the general character of Z's handwriting states that he believes a certain signature to be the handwriting of Z; A, in good faith, believes it to be so. Here A's statement is merely as to his belief, and is true as to his belief, and therefore, although the signature may not be the handwriting of Z, A has not given false evidence.

(d) A, being bound by an oath to state the truth, states that he knows that Z was at a particular place on a particular day, not knowing anything upon the subject. A gives false evidence, whether Z was at that place on the day named or not.

(e) A, an interpreter or translator, gives or certifies, as a true interpretation or translation of a statement or document, which he is bound by oath to interpret translate truly, that which is not, and which he does not believe to be, a true interpretation or translation. A has given false evidence.

Scope.—The words in section 191 are very general and do not contain any limitation that the statement made shall have any bearing upon the matter in issue.

It is sufficient to bring a case under this section, if the false evidence is intentionally given, that is to say, if the person making the statement makes it advisedly, knowing it to be false, and with the intention of deceiving the Court and of leading it to suppose that what he states is true. 26 A 509. A person can be convicted if he has made a false statement in an affidavit. 99 Ind. Cas. 341=28 Cr. L. J. 133. No offence under this section is committed by false statement in an application for substitution. 102 Ind. Cas. 214=28 Cr. L. J. 518=6 Pat. 184. The authors of the Code thought it inexpedient to use the technical terms of the English law where they did not adopt its definitions and materially departed from it in substance. The offence of attempting to impose on a Court of Justice by false evidence, is therefore not designated in the Code by the word "perjury" which is used in the English law and in the Regulations. For in the Code the definition of this offence is wider in its scope than that which is to be found in the English law, or the Regulations—Morgan and Macpherson. Where a witness misreads a document for the information of the Magistrate an offence under this section is not committed. 9 C. P. L. R. Cr. 5. A false answer to a police enquiry is an offence under this section. 8 C. L. R. 236. But the making of a false balance sheet is not an offence. 16 A. 88=A. W. N. 1894, 23. A false statement recorded under s. 161, Cr. Pro. Code, 1882, is an offence under this section. 7 P. R. 1896 Cr. The practice of charging a man with making two mutually contradictory statements may be convenient, but it can only be successfully used where the two statements are necessarily and irreconcilably contradictory. 1915 M. W. N. 34=16 Cr. L. J. 14=26 Ind. Cas. 318. To justify a conviction of perjury, it is not necessary to prove that the statement of the party accused is impossible, and it is certainly sufficient to prove it incredible. 22 O. C. 230=54 Ind. Cas. 60. It is open to a witness to correct himself on second thought or on being reminded of any fact which might have escaped his memory. 25 O. C. 130=23 Cr. L. J. 653=69 Ind. Cas. 92. In order to sustain an indictment for perjury the prosecution must establish inter alia two things; (1) that the statement was false; (2) that it was known or believed to be false or not believed to be true. In other words, the statement must be intentionally false. 29 Bom. L. R. 14=1 L. T. 40 Lah. 36=107 Ind. Cas. 100=29 Cr. L. J. 212=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 125. The mere fact that an accused on a previous occasion, made an inconsistent statement does not necessarily prove that the previous statement was true and that the latter is false. 29 P. L. A person filing a written statement is bound by law to state the truth, and if he makes a statement which is false to his knowledge or belief, or which he believes not to be true, he is guilty of giving false evidence within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code. 6 A. 626=A. W. N. 1884, 253. A defendant, being bound to verify his written statement, is bound to make a true statement, and, therefore, if he makes a statement which he knows to be false, he is punishable for giving false evidence within the meaning of s. 191 Penal Code. 1 Weir 174; see also 43 C. 1301=20 C. W. N. 1192=34 Ind. Cas. 235. In order to support a charge of giving false evidence, it is not necessary that there should be proof of corrupt intention. It is sufficient that there is proof of intention, and, if the statement was false and known to the accused to be false, it may be presumed that in making it the accused intentionally gave false evidence. 3 N. W. P. 133. It is essential to consider, not the form of the statement which is to be gathered not merely from the words selected for the purpose of framing the charge, but also from any other statements which are to be found in the deposition of the accused which may reasonably be construed to affect the meaning of the selected words. 2 J. G. 38. A person making a false statement upon oath before a police patrol, acting under s. 13 of Bombay Act, VIII of 1867, gives false evidence within the definition in s. 191 I. P. It is essential to the well-being of society that persons who commit offences which are of a public nature and which are punishable as crimes should be brought to justice. Therefore a Court cannot take cognizance of a bargain to abstain from the prosecution of a person for such an offence as that of wilfully giving false evidence. 3 N. W. P. 166. Sections 191 and 193 of the Penal Code require that the evidence should be intentionally false to the knowledge of the person giving it. Materiality may not be essential to the offence of giving false evidence, but it must be taken into consideration in arriving at the intention of the accused. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 2.

192. Whoever causes any circumstance to exit, or makes any false entry

Fabricating false evidence. in any book or record, or makes any document containing a false statement, intending that such circumstance, false entry, or false statement may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant as such, or before an arbitrator, and that such circumstance, false or entry or false statement so appearing in evidence, may cause any person who, in such proceeding, is to form an opinion upon the evidence, to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result of such proceeding, is said to "fabricate false evidence."

Illustrations.

(a) A, puts jewels into a box belonging to Z, with the intention that they may be found in that box, and that this circumstance may cause Z to be convicted of theft. A has fabricated false evidence.

(b) A, makes a false entry in his shop-book for the purpose of using it as corroborative evidence in a Court of Justice. A has fabricated false evidence.

(c) A, with the intention of causing Z to be convicted of a criminal conspiracy writes a letter in imitation of Z's handwriting, purporting to be addressed to an accomplice in such criminal conspiracy and puts the letter in a place which he knows that the officers of the police are likely to search. A has fabricated false evidence.

Comment.—To constitute an offence under this section, it is necessary to prove that it was intended that false circumstance should appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, that is, should appear as part of the evidence on which the judicial officer has to form his judgment, and that the circumstance should be of such a nature as might have caused the judicial officer to entertain an erroneous opinion touching some material point in the case. 1 Weir. 175. It is the intention that creates the criminal offence and not the fact as to whether, under the terms of the law, the document is admissible in evidence. 16 Cr. L. J. 620. But in a recent Punjab case a contrary view was taken. Vide 1 P. R. 1914 Cr. It is not essential for the purpose of this section that there should be any judicial proceeding pending at the time of the fabrication. It is enough that there is a reasonable prospect of such a proceeding having regard to the circumstances of the case and that the document in question is intended to be used in such a proceeding. 22 Bom. R. 1239=45 B. 668. There is no fabricating of false evidence if document produced does not lead to an erroneous opinion but rather to a correct opinion. 40 A. 39=19 Cr. L. J. 2=15 A. L. J. 822=42 Ind. Cas. 914. To tutor a man to give false evidence is an offence under this section. 105 Ind. Cas. 662=28 Cr. L. J. 950=A. I. R. 1927 All. 721.

Object.—The framers of the Code thus explained the provisions on the subject of fabricating false evidence: "It appears to us that the offence which we have designated as the fabricating of false evidence is not punished with adequate severity under the English and other systems of law. This may perhaps be because the offence, in its aggravated forms, is not one of very frequent occurrence in western countries. It is notorious, however, that in this country the practice is exceedingly common, and for obvious reasons. The mere assertion of a witness commands far less respect in India than in Europe, or in the United States of America. In countries which the standard of morality is high, direct evidence is generally considered as the best evidence. In England assuredly it is so considered, and its value as compared with the value of circumstantial evidence is perhaps overrated by the great majority of the population. But in India we have reason to believe that the case is different. A Judge, after he has heard a transaction related in the same manner by several persons who declare themselves to be eye-witnesses of it, and of whom he knows no harm, often feels a considerable doubt whether the whole from beginning to end be not a fiction and is glad to meet with some circumstance, however slight, which supports the story, and which is not likely to have been devised for the purpose of supporting the story. Hence, in England a person who wishes to impose on a Court of Justice knows that he is likely to succeed best by perjury, or subordination of perjury. But in India, where a Judge is generally on his guard against direct evidence, a more artful mode of imposition is frequently employed. A lie is often conveyed to a Court, not by means of witnesses, but by means of circumstances, precisely because circumstances are less likely to lie than witnesses. These two modes of imposing on the tribunals appear to us to be equally wicked, and equally mischievous. It will indeed be harder to bring home to an offender the fabricating of false evidence than the giving of false evidence. But wherever the former offence is brought home, we would punish it as severely as the latter. If A puts a purse in Z's bag with the intention of causing Z to be convicted as a thief, we would deal with A as if he had sworn that he saw Z take a purse. If A conceals in Z's house a paper written in imitation of Z's hand, and purporting to be a plan of a treasonable conspiracy, we would deal with A as if he had sworn that he was present at a meeting of conspirators at which Z presided."—Morgan and Macpherson. To constitute an offence under this section, it is necessary to prove that it was intended that the false circumstances should appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, that is, should appear as part of the evidence on which the judicial officer has to form his judgment, and that the circumstances should be of such a nature as might have caused the judicial officer to entertain an erroneous opinion touching some material point in the case. 1 Weir. 175=5 M. H. C. 373. Execution proceedings are judicial proceedings for the purpose of s. 192 and s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code. 22 Bom. L. R. 1239. It is not essential for the purpose of this section that there should be any judicial proceeding pending at the time of the fabrication. It is enough that there is a reasonable prospect of such a proceeding having regard to the circumstances of the case and that the document in question is intended to be used in such a proceeding. 22 Bom. L. R. 1229. Where a document was produced by the accused which did not lead to the forming of an erroneous opinion touching a particular point but led rather to the forming of a correct opinion one of the ingredients constituting the offence of fabricating false evidence was wanting and the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 192. 15 A. L. J. 819. A person commits the offence of fabricating false evidence, if he makes a document, which, though it may not contain any false statement in express terms, yet contains false recitals, which implies such a false statement. 10 C. W. N. 220=3 Cr. L. J. 196. False dying declaration by a man who does nothing to communicate with authorities does not come under either section 192 or section 194. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 550. Under section 192, a false document is not fabricated evidence unless there was, at the time of making it, an intention that it should appear in evidence. 7 M. 289=8 Ind. Jur. 138.

193. Whoever intentionally gives false evidence in any stage of a judicial proceeding, or fabricates false evidence for the purpose of being used in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine; and whoever intentionally gives or fabricates false evidence in any other case, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation 1.—A trial before a Court-Martial is a judicial proceeding.

Explanation 2.—An investigation directed by law preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice, is a stage of a judicial proceeding, though that investigation may not take place before a Court of Justice.

Illustrations.

A, in an inquiry before a Magistrate for the purpose of ascertaining whether Z ought to be committed for trial, makes on oath a statement which he knows to be false. As this inquiry is a stage of a judicial proceeding, A has given false evidence.

Explanation 3.—An investigation directed by a Court of Justice according to law, and conducted under the authority of a Court of Justice, is a stage of a judicial proceeding, though that investigation may not take place before a Court of Justice.

Illustration.

A, in a inquiry before an officer deputed by a Court of Justice to ascertain on the spot the boundaries of land, makes on oath a statement which he knows to be false. As this enquiry is a stage of a judicial proceeding, A has given false evidence.

Legislative changes.—The words "or before a Military Court of Inquest" after the words "Court Martial" in Explanation I have been omitted by Act XIII of 1889.

Gist of the offence.—The gist of the offence does not consist in actual causing a failure of justice, but in the intention to cause a failure of justice by misleading the Court, and with such intent causing the existence of any circumstances which might appear in evidence. 29 A. 351. Where a witness makes a statement which is false and at once admits this and states what is real truth he should not be prosecuted for giving false evidence. 230 P. L. R. 1911; 16 Cr. L. J. 280. The rule of law is perfectly clear that in order to establish a charge of perjury, it is necessary to prove not only that the prisoner made a statement which was false, but also that he knew or believed it to be false or did not believe it to be true. In other words, the statement must be proved to be intentionally false. 15 Lah. 407; see also A. I. R. 1934 Oudh. 65=35 Cr. L. J. 390=147 Ind. Cas. 395=11 O. W. N. 87=A. L. R. 1934 Oudh. 77; see also A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 304.

Verification.—It is a false statement made under a verification that constitutes an offence under s. 193, not a verification on oath by solemn affirmation. 27 C. 820; 6 Bom. L. R. 886.

Notes.—When the deposition of a witness was not read over to him he cannot be convicted under this section. 103 Ind. Cas. 107=28 Cr. L. J. 651. The essence at the offence of perjury consists in an attempt to mislead and deceive the Court. 27 Cr. L. J. 953=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 517. If a witness makes a false statement and immediately afterwards corrects it, he should not be convicted under this section. 89 Ind. Cas. 1028=26 Cr. L. J. 1460. See also 14 Cr. L. J. 280. In view of the definition of complaint in Cr. P. Code, the particulars of the offence under this section, must appear in a complaint preferred by a Court under s. 476 Cr. Pro. Code. 52 Cal. 478=89 Ind. Cas. 251=26 Cr. L. J. 1307=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 721. It is the duty of the prosecution to prove conclusively that the statement made by the accused was necessarily a false statement, before a conviction can be sustained under this section. 21 Cr. L. J. 500. In a case of perjury it is desirable that the due administration of the oath to the accused person on the occasion in question should be proved like any other fact. 20 Cr. L. J. 370. A claimant for land registration is bound to make a true declaration upon the subject of his application, and if he makes a false statement in the course of a declaration, he is liable to punishment under ss. 191 and 193 I. Proof that the statements which form the subject matter of charge are false must consist of reliable evidence, and the court is not justified in treating obviously unreliable evidence as good, merely because the accused himself was responsible for it. 5.

Under the definition of "fabricating false evidence" it is not necessary that the evidence should be intended to be used in a judicial proceeding. Where a witness, having made a false statement, is cautioned by the trying Judge and is informed of various circumstances which seem to establish the falsehood of that statement, and the witness after such caution acknowledges that his earlier statement, was false and corrects it, it is not desirable to subject such a witness to a prosecution for perjury. 19 Bom. L. R. 61=4 Bom. Cr. Cas. 8. In a case under s. 193 it is essential to show that the accused gave a false evidence or made a false statement intentionally and the falsity must not be merely a matter of vagueness and doubt. 18 Cr. If the statement made is designedly false the accused is liable irrespective of the fact whether the statement had a material bearing or not upon the matter under enquiry before the Court. Where a statement on the basis of which a person is accused of perjury is proved to be false, it can safely be presumed that in making that statement the accused "intentionally" made false statement. 116 Ind. The intention to commit perjury must be clearly present before a person charged with the offence can properly be convicted of it and a statement capable of being construed in any reasonable way that does not show a clear intention of committing perjury or a deliberate attempt to make a false statement does not per se contain the elements of the offence and where a prosecution for perjury is sought to be based on an affidavit filed in Court, the Court should take a broad view of the facts and where the language may convey a meaning indicative of falsity as well as one which may amount to an inaccurate description of events which have happened a prosecution for perjury is unsustainable. 1 Pat. L. R. Cr. 17=72 Ind. Cas. 887=24 Cr. L. J. 471. J. 141. Prosecution for perjury under this section should not be ordered where the statements complained of are slightly discrepant owing to inaccuracies of mind and are not deliberately false. 43 Ind. Cas. 822=19 Cr. L. J. 230. An accused person may be convicted of the offence of having given false evidence before a Civil Court, notwithstanding that the Court has made no note in writing to the effect that the evidence has been read out to the deponent. 28 P. R. Cr. 1918=39 P. W. R. Cr. 1918=47 Ind. Cas. 872=19 Cr. L. J. 972. In a case under this section for perjury where the prosecution, is based upon a certain statement being false made by the accused, it is essential to set out the exact statement in detail upon which the prosecution wants to proceed, (1918) Pat. 13=4 Pat. L. W. 44=43 Ind. Cas. 585=19 Cr. L. J. 169.

Attestation of false report without knowledge of contents is not an offence under this section. 17 A. L. J. 574=50 Ind. Cas. 28=20 Cr. L. J. 268. Mere witnessing service of summons on a wrong person also does not constitute an offence. 52 Ind. Cas. 417=20 Cr. L. J. 648. In a case under this section, it must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt that the particular portion of the statement alleged to have been made by the accused is false. 51 Ind. Cas. 629=20 Cr. L. J. 519. Where the deposition of a witness is read by him it need not be read over to him. 23 C. W. N. 661=29 C. L. J. 513=50 Ind. Cas. 660; see also 42 M. 561=36 M. L. J. 296=50 Ind. Cas. 987. In case of perjury it is desirable that the due administration of the oath to the accused person on the occasion in question should be proved like any other fact. 50 Ind. Cas. 978=20 Cr. L. J. 379. Secondary evidence cannot be admitted in the trial of the petitioner for perjury to prove the making of the statement in the Munsiff's Court. 1 Lah. 361=58 Ind. Cas. 830. It is the duty of the prosecution to prove conclusively that the statement made by the accused was necessarily a false statement, before a conviction can be sustained under this section. 56 Ind. Cas. 660=21 Cr. L. J. 550. In a prosecution for perjury under this section, where the accused is charged with having falsely denied the receipt of consideration it is for the prosecution to prove that consideration did pass, and not for the accused to prove the contrary. 18 A. L. J. 1151=59 Ind. Cas. 198=22 Cr. L. J. 59.

A statement recorded by a Magistrate in the course of a police investigation under s. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not evidence within s. 193 Expl. 2, I. P. Code. 23 Bom. L. R. 1933 Mad. 413.

In order to convict a person for fabricating false evidence, it must be established that the accused made a document containing a false statement, that he intended that false statement should appear in evidence in a proceeding taken before a public servant and that the false evidence might cause any person, who in such proceeding was to form an opinion on the evidence, to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point mentioned in the result of the proceeding. 2 A. L. J. 203=A. W. N. 1905, 52=2 Cr. L. J. 100; see also A. W. N. 1903, 68; A. W. N. 1890, 86. The essential ingredient in the constitution of an offence under section 193 is the intention of the person. Where a person is charged with having made contradictory statements in a cross-examination, the Magistrate will be exercising a proper discretion, if he takes into consideration the fact that the statement has been made in the course of cross examination, when possibly he may have been either confused, or under some mistake regarding the question put to him. 2 C. W. N. 81. Making false verification to written statement with knowledge of its falsehood is offence within the meaning of section 193.—A. I. R. 1930 All. 490.

The mere fact that the accused, by falsely representing to the Marriage Registrar that a marriage had been solemnised, induced the Registrar to make a false entry of the registration of the marriage, will not make the accused liable to be convicted under section 193 in the absence of proof of the intention mentioned above. 11 G. W. N. 911=6 Cr. L. J. 162. In order to convict a person under section 190, the prosecution should prove that the statements made by the accused were false, and were made by him knowing them to be false. 2 C. L. J. 101=2 Cr. L. J. 455; 16 W. R. Cr. 47. Where after the setting aside of a mokurari tenure by a Civil Court, the accused deposited money in Court and put in a petition stating that the deposit was in respect of the Mokurari tenure held that he could not be convicted of fabricating false evidence. 10 C. L. R. 433. Where a person made a false statement in the recital of title to a property in a document, and the statement was not admissible in evidence against the person or persons against whose interest such statement was made held, that he could not be convicted under s. 193 for fabricating false evidence. 2 C. L. J. 46=2 Cr. L. J. 388. It is wrong to lie, but to tell a foolish and irrelevant falsehood would not always or necessarily amount to giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding. A. W. N. 1889 218. A charge under section 8 I. P. Code can be framed as regards a statement under s. 164 Cr. I. P. Code. 1882, made on oath before a Magistrate. 16 M. 421=1 Weir 175.

An enquiry under section 476, Cr. Pro. Code, is a judicial proceeding and a witness giving false evidence in the course of such an enquiry is guilty of an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code. 37 C. 52=14 C. W. N. 132=5 Ind. Cas. 62=11 Cr. L. J. 45. But a proceeding under s. 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) is not a judicial proceeding. A. W. N. 1890, 100; see also A. W. N. 1899, 39. In order to constitute the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, it must be proved that the prisoner at the time he made the false statement, was under a legal obligation as a witness to state truth. 4 M. H. C. 185=1 Weir. 159. The making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of giving false evidence and charges of false evidence cannot be multiplied according to the number of false statements contained in the deposition. 6 M. H. C. App. 27. In order to establish the offence of having intentionally given false evidence by reason of two contradictory statements, it is necessary to prove that both the statements are such that a charge of giving intentionally false evidence might be made in regard to either of them or in regard to both of them in the alternative. 27 C. 455=4 C. W. N. 249; 7 A. 44=A. W. N. 1884, 258; 22 A. 115=A. W. N. 1889, 207; 5 B. H. C. R. 49. Where the perjury is assigned upon a distinct allegation, the evidence of its falsity must be regularly taken, in the case in which it is tried. If the whole proof consists of two conflicting statements an alternative charge and finding are the regular course. 1 Weir 165, see also Rat. Cr. Cr. C. 26; 23 M. 544. According to the English Law, since the decision in King v. Haris, 5 Barn. & Ald. 296, mere proof of contradictory statements on oath, without proving which of those statements is false, is sufficient to support a conviction on a charge of perjury. But in India, satisfactory proof of contradictory statements on oath or solemn affirmation is sufficient to justify an alternative finding of an offence under sec. 193. 1 Weir 155=4 M. H. C. 51. A good conviction may take place on proof of two contradictory statements, without confirmatory evidence as to the falsity of either when both are on oath and made the subject of separate charges. 1 Weir. 161; 23 Bom. L. R. 884=46 B. 161; but see 1 Cr. L. J. 517. A person cannot be charged in the alternative, with intentionally giving false evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding before a Magistrate or with intentionally giving false evidence before a police-officer making an investigation under Ch. XIV Cr. Pro. Code. 18 B. 377 F. B.

A conviction in the alternative under s. 193 or s. 182, Penal Code is not sustainable on the ground that, where one statement has been on oath, and a contradictory statement has been made before the police, the accused must be either guilty under section 193, Penal Code, of giving false evidence in court, or under section 182 Penal Code, of giving false information. 1 L. B. R. 101; see also Rat. Un. Cr. C. 401. In order to sustain any conviction for giving false evidence upon an alternative charge, when no evidence is offered to prove the falsity of either statement in particular, it must be clear that the two statements are contradictory. 10 C. 405. A conviction upon an alternative charge of having given false evidence consisting of contradictory statements in a single deposition is good though there may be no finding as to which of the statements was false. 10 C. 937; see also 13 B. L. R. 324 (F. B.)=21 W. R. 72; 13 B. L. R. 325 note=12 W. R. Cr. 11; 11 W. R. Cr. 37; 20 P. R. 1883 Cr. If a person is accused of making two contradictory statements, direct evidence is necessary to prove that both the statements were made, and an enquiry must be held as to which statement is untrue and whether the accused wilfully made the statement alleged to be false, knowing it to be such. 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 36; 22 W. R. Cr. 2. In cases where it is doubtful which of two contradictory statements is false, the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt and the punishment should be awarded to that statement which involves the least guilt. 3 P. R. 1899 Cr.; see also 27 P. R. 1890 Cr. An alternative charge under section 193 of the Penal Code cannot be permitted in respect of contradictory statements, one of which is made to the police and another to a Magistrate. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 518. Where an incriminating question is put to a witness, the Magistrate should explain to him his position, and should advise him of his right, as otherwise, he may be induced, through ignorance of the state of the law, to deny the truth for fear of penal consequences. If without such warning, he speaks untruth, the offence he has committed, namely of intentionally giving false evidence, does not deserve punishment. 2 C. L. R. 181. A person making an incriminating statement which at the same time is false, is not protected from prosecution under s. 193 Penal Code, though he cannot be made subject to any other kind of prosecution. 1 Weir. 153.

Where several persons are charged with giving false evidence in the same proceeding, each of them should be separately tried. 4 A 293=A. W. N. 1882, 37;

A. W. N. 1881, 83 ; 1 Weir 161=2 Weir 271. It is essential, in order to sustain a charge under section 193 of the Penal Code, that it should be proved that there was a judicial proceeding and that the false statement alleged to have been made in the course of that proceeding was actually made. 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 13. The true rule is that no man can be convicted of giving false evidence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, show not merely that it is incredible but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. 11 W. P. Cr. 25. By the penal law of the country a statement untrue to the prisoner's knowledge, made upon oath in the course of a judicial proceeding, amounts to perjury, notwithstanding the fact that the statement itself is immaterial to the matter before the Court. 19 W. R. Cr. 69. In a case of giving false evidence the strictest and most accurate proof is necessary, and the testimony of a single witness unsupported by corroborative evidence is insufficient to convict a person charged with giving false evidence. 5 W. R. Cr. 27 ; 5 W. R. Cr. 25 ; but see 14 W. R. Cr. 53, 5 W. R. Cr. 98. A charge under section 191 should specify the proceedings in which the alleged false evidence was given, and should contain the exact words alleged to be false as definitely and specifically as possible. 36 P. R. 1869 Cr. Sanction to prosecute under s. 193 I. P. Code is not required when the offence is not committed in relation to a particular proceeding in any particular Court. U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I. 191. Every attempt to pervert the proceedings of a Court to an improper end is a contempt of its authority, and giving false evidence is such an attempt. The offence, therefore, if committed before a Magistrate, cannot be tried by him. 10 B. H. C. R. 73. Where a committing Magistrate had ordered the prosecution of a witness under s. 193, Penal Code, while the case in which he had deposed was pending before the Court of Session, the High Court set aside order, commenting on the impropriety of taking proceedings against a witness while the case is still pending. 18 C. Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you , on or about the day of at , being summoned as a witness in being a judicial proceeding then pending before them and being bound on oath (or a solemn affirmation) to state the truth intentionally stated in evidence that which statement you either knew (or believed to be false or did not believe to be true), and thereby committed an offence under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

194. Whoever gives or fabricates false evidence, intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, any person to be convicted of an offence which is capital "by the law of British India or England" shall be punished with transportation for life, or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and, if an innocent person be convicted and executed in consequence of such false evidence, the person who gives such false evidence, shall be punished either with death or, the punishment hereinbefore described.

Legislative changes.—In this section for the words "by the Code or law of England" the words quoted have been substituted by Act 9 of 1890.

Notes.—This offence ranks with murder and attempt to murder, according to the result. Morgan and Macpherson. No intention or knowledge can be presumed in statements made as dying declaration by a person who did not seek aid from the authorities. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 550=129 Ind. Cas. 87. Person charged with murder may be convicted under s. 201. His conviction under s. 194 is not illegal, but he should be asked to plead to charge under s. 194. A. I. R. 1934 All 30=1932 A. L. J. 1079=34 Cr. L. J. 445=142 Ind. Cas. 803.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

195. Whoever gives or fabricates false evidence intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, any person to be convicted of an offence which, "by the law of British India or England," is not capital, but punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of seven years or upwards, shall be punished as a person convicted of that offence would be liable to be punished.

Illustration.

A gives false evidence before a Court of Justice, intending thereby to cause Z to be convicted of dacoity. The punishment of dacoity is transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years with or without fine. A, therefore, is liable to such transportation or imprisonment, with or without fine.

Legislative changes.—In this section for the words "by the Code of Law of England" the words quoted have been substituted by Act 9 of 1890.

Scope.—This section applies to those who make use of such evidence as is made punishable by the preceding sections. It relates not only to fabricated evidence but also to such evidence as is given or offered by the mouth of a false witness. It may include also the case of suborning false witnesses or attempting to use their evidence. But a mere inciting others by offers of reward to bear false witness or to fabricate evidence, appears not to fall within these words, there must be a use of or an attempt or offer to use evidence in a judicial proceeding or on some other occasion. The word "corruptly," which does not occur in the preceding sections, probably used here to denote that those whose duty it is, not to judge of the credibility of evidence, but to submit it for the consideration of judicial and other functionaries on behalf of their clients do not incur the penalties of using false evidence.—Morgan and Macpherson. Using fabricated evidence even in defence constitutes an offence under s. 145. A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 99=46 B. 317=23 Cr. L. J. 23=23 Bom. L. R. 987=64 Ind. Cas. 503. Taking photo of undertrials cannot be inferred to be for fabrication of false evidence without proof of intention to use them so. 17 Cr. L. J. 431=14 A. L. J. 688=35 Ind. Cas. 991.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

196. Whoever corruptly uses, or attempts to use as true or genuine evidence, any evidence which he knows to be false or fabricated, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave or fabricated false evidence.

Notes.—Under this section, the mere user of false evidence is not sufficient, the user must be corrupt. 'Corruptly' is not defined in the Code. The Court must give the word "corruptly" its ordinary dictionary meaning. The desire to screen an offender from the legal consequence of his act will be designated a corrupt motive, and it would not require evidence to satisfy the Court that the witness in giving false evidence had that desire. But it is doubtful whether the user cannot be corrupt unless it involves the corruption of a third person. 23 Bom. L. R. 987. It is an essential element of the offence under this section that the documents should have been corruptly used or attempted to be used as true or genuine evidence. 85 Ind. Cas. 253=3 Bur. L. J. 349=26 Cr. L. J. 509. Knowledge of the falsity of statement is necessary to support conviction. A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 609=48 M. 395=26 Cr. L. J. 801=8 M. L. J. 290=86 Ind. Cas. 449; see also A. I. Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable or not as in the offence of giving such evidence—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class.

197. Whoever issues or signs any certificate required by law to be given or signed, or relating to any fact of which such certificate is by law admissible in evidence, knowing or believing that such certificate is false in any material point, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

Scope.—Numerous laws require a certificate of some matter to be given, and many make a certificate admissible as evidence of some fact. The offence of certifying in any of these and the like cases, knowing or believing that the certificate is false, is put on the same footing as the offence of giving false evidence. But it will be observed that the certificate must be false in a material point. An error in a name or date, accidental and not intended for any evil purpose, or a false statement of some irrelevant matter, is not within this section. The offence of forging a certificate is not here contemplated, but that of making or issuing a certificate which, being valid and sufficient in other respects, is yet false in a material point. The issuing or signing must therefore be by the person or officer authorised or believed to be authorised to certify. The word "issue" means something different from using. It is the putting forth for the purpose of being used, and is preliminary to it.—Morgan and Macpherson. The word "certificate" in this section is a certificate which is required by law to be given or signed for the purpose of being used in evidence in the course of administration of justice. 30 C. W. N. 120=42 C. L. J. 557. The word "certificate" may be used as synonymous with certificatum but that is clearly not its meaning in ss. 197 and 198 I. P. Code. 20 C. W. N. 520=23 C. L. J. 423=17 Cr. L. J. 140=33 Ind. Cas. 316. Where the law does not prohibit the administration of an oath or solemn affirmation and where in fact the practice of the Court directs that an oath or solemn affirmation must be administered before the affidavit is accepted, there cannot be any protection for an accused person who commits perjury in such a document. The fact that the affidavit was made for supporting an accused is immaterial. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 61. Where an application is made under the Land Registration Act containing false statement, no offence is committed as the act does not require any certificate to be signed or given. 18 Cr. L. J. 978=3 Pat. L. W. 201=42 Ind. Cas. 594.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class.

198. Whoever corruptly uses, or attempts to use any such certificate, as a true certificate, knowing the same to be false in any material point, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class.

199. Whoever, in any declaration made or subscribed by him, which, declaration any Court of Justice, or any public servant or other person, is bound or authorized by law to receive as evidence of any fact, makes any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, touching any point material to the object for which the declaration is made or used, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

Scope.—A declaration before it can be made the foundation of a prosecution under this section, must be one which is admissible in evidence and which the Court before whom it is filed, is bound or authorised by law to receive in evidence. 35 A. 58. A false declaration made before a Mamlatdar for obtaining a certificate is not an offence under this section, in as much as he is not bound or authorised by law to receive the declaration. 17 Bom. L. 200. Whoever corruptly uses, or attempts to use, as true, any such declaration, knowing the same to be false in any material point, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

Explanation.—A declaration which is inadmissible merely upon the ground of some informality is a declaration within the meaning of sections 199 and 200.

Scope.—The three following sections provide for the punishment of certain offences against Public Justice by which the detection of crime and apprehension of offenders is frustrated. It is the duty of every good subject of the State to aid in the due administration of the laws. The discharge of this duty must, in the absence of any direct legal obligation, rest in a great degree upon each man's sense of the duty which lies on him. But by various laws, special duties in regard to the detection of crime are imposed on landholders and certain other persons. All persons, however, if not bound by express provision of law to aid in the detection of offenders are at least under this legal obligation, that they shall not obstruct or mislead others in the pursuit, if they remain themselves inactive. Where the offence against public justice proceeds beyond such obstructions and omissions as are made punishable by these sections, and amounts to a harbouring or assisting an offender, it is punishable by subsequent sections of this chapter.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

201. Whoever, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed causes any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, or with that intention gives any information respecting the offence which he knows or believes to be false, shall, if the offence which he knows or believes to have been committed is punishable with death, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

and, if the offence is punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine , and if the offence is punishable with imprisonment for any term not extending ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of the description provided for the offence, if punishable with less than ten years' imprisonment. for a term which may extend to one fourth part of the longest term of the imprisonment provided for offence, or with fine, or with both.

Illustration.

A, knowing that B has murdered Z, assists B to hide the body with the intention of screening B from punishment. A is liable to imprisonment of either description for seven years, and also to fine.

Scope and application.—This section applies to the person who screens the principal or actual offender, and not to a person causing disappearance of his own crime. 22 C. 538 ; 1 L. B. R., 316 ; 7 W. The essential ingredient under this section is to cause disappearance of evidence of the commission of an offence with a view to screen the offender from legal punishment. 40 L. W. 770=152 Ind. Cas. 696. In order to sustain a conviction under this section, it must be proved that an offence has been actually committed. It is not sufficient to establish that the accused had reason to believe an offence to have been committed. 19 P. R. 1895 Cr. ; 7 P. R. 1867 Cr. ; 25 P. R. 1881 Cr. ; 8 Bom. L. R. 1926 All 737=97 Ind. Cas. 44. The mere removal of a dead body from one place to another so as to remove traces of the place where the murder took place, or indications which might implicate a particular individual, even though such removal does not remove undoubted evidence that a murder has taken place is within the section. A. I. R. 1926. All 737. In order to justify a conviction under s. 20, I. P. Code it is necessary that an offence for which some person has been convicted or is criminally responsible should have been committed. There must be an intention to screen a specified offender. 26 Cr. L.

J. 897=86 Ind. Cas. 961=A. I. R. 1925 Sind. 257 ; but see 47A. 306=23 A. L. J. 25=86 Ind. Cas. 52=26 Cr. L. J. 676=A. I. R. 1925 All. 35. Section 201 of the I. P. Code does not apply to criminal causing evidence of his own crime to disappear but to a person who screens the actual offender as in such a case no question of abetment can arise. A conviction under section 201 I. P. Code, as accessories to an offence known or believed to have been committed by themselves is illegal. 21 N. L. R. 16=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 407. Where the act was done not voluntarily intention to screen cannot be inferred. Essence of the section is causing evidence to disappear with intention to screen offender. A. I. R. 1930 All. 45=31 Cr. L. J. 37=120 Ind. Cas. 268=1930 Cr. C. 61 ; see also A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 241=21 S. L. R. 206=28 Cr. L. J. 674=103 Ind. Cas. 402. An intention to screen an unknown offender is sufficient 21 S. L. Cas. 145. Gist of the offence is causing disappearance of evidence. A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 36.

A murder cannot be charged under section 201 I. P. Code with causing evidence to disappear by concealing the corpse, because a principal cannot be convicted as an accessory. 86 Ind. Cas. 973=26 Cr. L. J. 909=A. I. R. 1925 Sind. 306. Removing corpse of murdered man is causing disappearance of evidence of offence. A. I. R. 1930 Oudh. 113 ; see also A. I. R. 1926 All. 737=49A. 57=24 A. L. J. 958=27 Cr. L. J. 1068=97 Ind. Cas. 44. Accused must cause evidence to disappear in order to screen offender. A. I. R. 1930 A. 45. For the purpose of calculating the punishment to be awarded under section 231, it is necessary for the Court to decide, not so much what offence, the evidence of which has been concealed has been committed, as what offence the accused knew or had reason to believe had been committed. Where therefore, a person himself charged but acquitted of the actual crime, is convicted under section 201 the Court must treat him as a stranger to the crime, as one who had merely witnessed it, while calculating the sentences to be passed. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 870.

Offences of three grades are specified with regard to each of which the offence punishable under this section has its appropriate punishment provided. The substantial fact that some offence has been committed, and the knowledge or reason for belief that an offence has been committed must of course be proved to the satisfaction of the Court,—since these are both essential parts of the offence here defined. Frequently the apprehension and conviction of the principal offender will remove all doubts concerning the particular offence committed. In such a case only the circumstances remain to be shown from which knowledge or belief is to be proved or inferred against the person who is charged under the present section. Where the principal offender, by flight or otherwise, has escaped from justice, it will be necessary to satisfy the Court by reasonable proof that some person, whether the person who has fled or another, has committed the offence which the accused is charged with endeavour to conceal. The criminal intention to screen the offender from punishment is a necessary part of this offence. Therefore an accidental or even mischievous effacing of marks, or anything else done thoughtlessly or in jest, is not sufficient. Foot marks may be effaced, stains of blood washed out, etc., without necessarily incurring the guilt of screening an offender. Suppose a culpable homicide has been committed and there is merely evidence to show that the accused a Hindu assisted in burning the dead body. This act, being lawful and usual among the Hindoos, does not of itself without the aid of other circumstances in any degree tend to criminate him. Whether the individual offender is known or unknown to the person charged under this section, he is guilty, if he obstructs the course of Justice in the manner indicated.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Causes any evidence of.—The illustration appended puts the case where a circumstance exists showing that a crime has been committed ; the dead body, bearing it may be supposed, traces of violence, and therefore of itself testifying that an offence has been committed, is hid. As the causing a circumstance to exist which is intended to mislead the Judge in the formation of an opinion is a fabrication of false evidence, and punishable,—so the causing any thing to disappear which tends to the apprehension and conviction of the offender is an offence, when the object is to defeat justice. It is not clear whether these words include (though they appear to do so) all testimony, of whatsoever description, such as oral and written testimony, as well as the evidence afforded by the existence of things.—Morgan and Macpherson. Where a person secretly buries murdered person he is guilty. Knowledge of conviction of

Cases.—A separate sentence under this section, along with a conviction of the accused of murder is illegal. 16 Cr. L. J. 583. The mere fact that the accused had been suspected or even tried and acquitted of the principal crime would not in itself present his conviction under section 201, if there is clear proof that he has caused the evidence to disappear in order to screen some unknown offender from legal punishment. 110 Ind. Cas. 682=89 Cr. L. J. 746=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 906. Section 201 is an attempt to define the position known in England as that of an accessory after the fact. It is settled law that a principal cannot be convicted as an accessory and it may be presumed that the Legislature never intended to depart from that rule. Therefore the "offender" in section 201 must needs refer to a person other than the person charged. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=29 Cr. L. J. 674=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 241.

Under section 201 mere knowledge on the part of the accused that his act is likely to screen the principal offender is not sufficient and actual intention must be established. Whether the requisite intention is proved or not is a question to be decided on the facts of each case. Ordinarily when the crown has proved satisfactorily that (a) an offence has been committed for which some person is criminally responsible, and (b) that the accused caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of the offence or gave false information concerning it, as the case may be, a presumption arises in favour of the crown that the accused did act with the requisite intent. This presumption may, however be rebutted by circumstances or direct evidence. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=28 Cr. L. J. 674=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 241. A conviction of the accessory offence under s. 201 is not illegal merely because it is suspected but not proved or admitted that the accused committed or was one of the several persons who committed the principal offence. 103 Ind. Cas. 402=28 Cr. L. J. 674=A. I. R. 1927 Sind. 241. Section 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a person who is proved or admitted to be the principal offender. 1 L. B. R. 316. False information to police implicating innocent person and screening real offender, constitutes an offence under the section. 19 Cr. L. J. 903=46 C. 427=47 Ind. Cas. 275. There can be no conviction under this section where body is found unconcealed in a place where the deceased was killed. 131 Ind. Cas. 93=32 P. L. R. 347=32 Cr. L. J. 650=A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 278. A person cannot be convicted for doing anything to cause disappearance of the evidence of suicide. A. I. R. 1934 Sind. 139.

Where a person causes the disappearance of evidence of a murder but without intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, he is not guilty of an offence under section 201. 5 N. W. (1) the substantial fact of an offence having been committed, and (2) the knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the accused that such was the case—is not absolutely necessary. 2 W. R. Cr. Letters, 1; see also A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 858=29 P. L. R. 486=29 Cr. L. J. 865=111 Ind. Cas. 449.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. If the offence is punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment for 10 years, in that case triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class; if punishable with transportation with less than 10 years' imprisonment then triable by Presidency Magistrate, Magistrate of the 1st class, or Court by which the offence is triable.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows—

That you , on or about the day of , at , knowing (or having reason to believe) that certain offence to wit punishable with has been committed, did cause certain evidence of the said offence to disappear to wit (or knowingly gave false information to wit) with the intention of screening the said (state the name of offender) from legal punishment, and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 201 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance, or the cognizance of the Court of Session.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

202. Whoever knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed, intentionally omits to give any information respecting that offence which he is legally bound to give, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The offence under this section cannot be treated as a minor offence under the previous section for an essential ingredient of the offence under this section is the legal duty of the accused to give information and that is no part of the offence under s. 201. 13 Cr. L. J. 18. In order to constitute an offence under this section two things are absolutely necessary:—viz. (1) the substantial fact of an offence having been committed and (2) the knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the accused that such was the case. 2 W. R. Cr. Letters, 1. This section punishes the illegal omissions of those who are by some law bound to give information, when such omissions are intentional. The knowledge or belief that some offence has been committed is part of the definition.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section is applicable only where the accused “knowingly or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed” intentionally omits to give information of the crime. 1 Weir 181. Failure to give information under Cr. Pro. Code s. 44 is an offence. 21 Cr. L. J. 700=16 N. L. R. 30=56 Ind. Cas. 582. This section is not punitive. When facilities for investigations have been otherwise obtained, no conviction is possible. A. I. R. 1921 Oudh. 227=8 O. L. J. 590=65 Ind. Cas. 626.

A request by a villager to the wayguard to whom an offence has been reported, not to report the offence is not such an intentional omission to give information as deserved punishment under s. 202 I. P. Code. U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 276. Omission of police patel to report arrival of dacoit is not punishable under this section, where there is nothing to show that an offence has been committed by the persons who visited the village. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 150. Failure to report suspicious death by a police patel is not punishable where his good faith is apparent. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 783. But omission to give information of theft by Iambardar is punishable under this section A. W. N. 1883, 9. A person is not bound to give information of a murder of which he is aware, if he has a reasonable excuse for not making a report. L. B. R. (1894—1900), 382.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

203. Whoever, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed, gives any information respecting that offence which he knows or believes to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both,

Explanation.—In sections 201 and 202, and in this section, the word ‘offence’ includes any act committed at any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely, 302, 304, 382, 383, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459 and 460.

Application.—This section does not apply to the case of a person who gives false evidence as a witness to the police in the course of their investigation, and that only in reply to questions put to him. It contemplates information volunteered by some person, Surju v. Emperor, 7 A. L. J. 1130. A person who under such circumstances volunteers information which he knows or believes to be false, obstructs justice, and is punished, whether, any intention to screen the offender can be proved against him or not, and whatever be the offence which the latter has committed.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section applies to information volunteered by the informant and not to a false statement made in the course of an examination by a police-officer. 57 Ind. Cas. 940=21 Cr. L. J. 700. A person who gives false information to the police accusing another of an offence of murder in order to screen the real offender, commits offences not only under ss. 201 and 203 I. P. Code but also under s. 211. 47 Ind. Cas. 275=19 Cr. L. J. 903. As regards the meaning of the words "gives information," vide 14 Cr. L. J. 252=19 Ind. Cas. 508. Person accompanying informant is not guilty. 142 Ind. Cas. 803=34 Cr. L. J. 445=1032 A. L. J. 1079=A. I. R. 1933 All. 30.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused person) as follows :—

That you knowing (or having reason to believe), that the offence of was committed by , on or about the day at , gave information respecting the said offence, to wit which you knew or believed to be false, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 203 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

204. Whoever secretes or destroys any document which he may be lawfully compelled to produce as evidence in a Court of Justice, or in any proceeding lawfully held before a public servant as such, or obliterates or renders illegible the whole or any part of such document with the intention of preventing the same from being produced or used as evidence before such Court of public servant as aforesaid, or after he shall have been lawfully summoned or required to produce the same for that purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Gist of the offence.—In order to convict a person under this section it must be proved, that he destroyed the document with the intention of preventing it from being used or produced as evidence. 24 P. R. 1889 Cr.

Scope.—Whether the proceeding is of a civil or criminal nature, this section applies. There is no question here of the materiality of evidence. Whether material or not, it must not be secreted or destroyed to evade production in a judicial or other proceeding, if the production may lawfully be compelled.—Morgan and Macpherson. Where rough copy of a panchnama was destroyed owing to obliteration and a new copy made and duly signed the destruction of the rough copy is no offence. 14 Bom. L. R. 1163=13 Cr. L. J. 913=17 Ind. Cas. 1008. This section is applicable even where the document is not valuable security. 38 C. L. J. 158=25 Cr. L. J. 167=76 Ind. Cas. 391.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

205. Whoever falsely personates another, and, in such assumed character, makes any admission or statement, or confesses judgment, or causes any process to be issued, or becomes bail or security, or does any other act in any suit or criminal prosecution, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—The offence punished, is not merely cheating by using a fictitious name but by falsely assuming to be some other real person and in that character making an admission, etc.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Causes any process to be issued.—These words are applicable to the case of genuine process being issued by the offender in an assumed character ; as if he personates A, a creditor of B and causes a summons in A's name to issue against B for the recovery of the debt due to A. Suppose a person procures blank forms of summons or other process, and signs them with the signature of the officer of the Court, and afterwards causes them to be issued; this seems to be an offence within this section. The offence here defined must it appears, concern some act done "in a civil suit or criminal prosecution." An intention to injure or defraud is not made part of the definition and therefore need not be proved.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class.

206. Whoever fraudulently removes, conceals, transfers, or delivers to any person any property, or any interest therein, intending thereby to prevent that property or interest therein from being taken as a forfeiture, or in satisfaction of a fine, under a sentence which has been pronounced, or which he knows to be likely to be pronounced, by a Court of Justice or other competent authority, or from being taken in execution of a decree or order which has been made or which he knows to be likely to be made by a Court of Justice in a civil suit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Comment.—To bring an offence within this section there must be fraudulent removal, sale, or transfer of property, or of some interest therein intending thereby to prevent that property from being taken as a forfeiture or in satisfaction of a fine. 18 W. R. Cr. 65. "Civil suit" in ss. 206 and 207 is suit actually pending. A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 128=8 Rang. 268=126 Ind. Cas. 533. The owner of property is, ordinarily speaking, by virtue of his ownership, free to sell it or to give it away as he sees fit. And all other persons have equally the right to receive it from him by way of purchase or gift. But the law has provided for many offences and contraventions of the law, punishment by fine, or forfeiture of property. Thus by some sections of this code it is enacted that upon conviction of certain offences the offender shall forfeit all or a portion of his property; by others it is enacted that such forfeiture may be awarded by the Court as part of the punishment. Laws relating to customs duties usually make confiscation of goods the punishment of any contravention of their provisions. And the ordinary sanction of a law is the imposition of a fine for the breach of it recoverable usually by distress and sale of the offender's property. In all such cases, and also in the case of civil suits, the general law of the country must determine the legal effect of an ordinary transfer of property while suits or other proceedings are pending, the result of which may establish a claim against or otherwise affect such property. The penal provision in this section, which does not interfere with those of civil law concerning the recovery of the property, applies where there is an intention to defraud. A fraudulent removal, concealment, etc., with intent to withdraw property from an impending seizure under process of a Court of law or of some competent authority, is the offence made punishable. This is not only a grave offence against public justice, but a serious injury to the suitor, the object of whose suit is defeated or retarded thereby. The offence may, it seems, be committed by persons other than the owners of the property.—Morgan and Macpherson. A person who to protect his own property not legally liable for the decree from confusion with property which is not liable, makes it over to another person, does not commit an offence punishable under section 206 of the I. P. Code. 19 Bom. L. R. 535=4 Bom. Cr. Cas. 119. The assignment, by the decree holder, of a decree obtained upon the basis of a debt, which is under attachment, does not per se amount to the commission of the offence defined in section 206. In as much as such assignment cannot affect the rights of the attaching creditors. 3 A. L. J. 1=3 C. L. J. 92. A removal of crops under attachment, in execution of certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act amounts to an offence punishable under section 206. 28 C. 217=5 C. W. N. 291. In an offence under s. 206, the accused is not entitled to be acquitted on the assertion of the vendees that the transactions were for valuable consideration and not fraudulent. 16 B. 414. Where the accused who were entrusted with articles distrained for arrears of land revenue, produced inferior article of the same description on the date of the sale, held that a conviction under section 206 of the Penal Code was wrong (1) since the distraint of property by a Collector was neither a forfeiture, the rights of the owner being only held in abeyance by such distraint, nor affected under a sentence pronounced by a Court of Justice or other competent authority. A.

W. N. 1883, 237. An offence under s. 206 is one which cannot be entertained without sanction of court and only such complaint without sanction is invalid and vitiates the trial and the accused can be convicted only under s. 424. 1933 M. W. N. 722.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not Compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st and 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.), hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:—

That you on or about the _____ day of _____ at _____ fraudulently removed (or concealed or transferred or delivered to _____) your property to wit _____ intending thereby to prevent the said property from being taken _____, forfeiture (or in satisfaction of a fine) under a sentence of _____ which has been pronounced on _____ by (or which you knew to be likely to be pronounced) by _____ and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under section 206 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

207. Whoever fraudulently accepts, receives, or claims any property or any interest therein, knowing that he has no right or rightful claim to such property or interest, or practises any deception touching any right to any property or any interest therein, intending thereby to prevent that property or interest therein from being taken as a forfeiture or in satisfaction of a fine, under a sentence which has been pronounced, or which he knows to be likely to be pronounced by a Court of Justice or other competent authority, or from being taken in execution of a decree or order which has been made, or which he knows to be likely to be made, by a Court of Justice in a civil suit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years or with fine or with both.

Fraudulent claim to property to prevent its seizure as forfeited or in execution.

Notes.—The receiver of property if he receives it with intent to defraud, is here made punishable.—Morgan and Macpherson. In order to convict a person under this section, the civil suit must be actually pending. A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 128.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st. and 2nd class.

208. Whoever fraudulently causes or suffers a decree or order to be passed against him at the suit of any person for a sum not due, or for a larger sum than is due to such person, or for any property or interest in property to which such person is not entitled, or fraudulently causes or suffers a decree or order to be executed against him after it has been satisfied, or for anything in respect of which it has been satisfied, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Fraudulent suffering decree for sum not due.

Illustration.

A institutes a suit against Z. Z., knowing that A is likely to obtain a decree against him, fraudulently suffers a judgment to pass against him for a larger amount at the suit of B, who has no just claim against him, in order that B, either on his own account or for the benefit of Z, may share in the proceeds of any sale of Z's property which may be made under A's decree. Z has committed an offence under this section.

Procedure—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Notes.—Vide 84 Ind. Cas. 351=26 Cr. L. J. 287=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 289.

209. Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly, or with intent to injure or Dishonestly making false claim in Court.

annoy any person, makes in a Court of Justice any claim which he knows to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Comment.—In order to establish an offence under this section it is essential to prove that the claim made is one which the person making it knows to be false, and it is not sufficient to show that the claim is one which he believes or has reason to believe to be false or does not believe to be true claim. 38 P. R. 1888 Cr. Not only must the claim be false within the knowledge of the person making it, but the object of it must be to defraud, to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain, to injure or to annoy. See sections 24, 25 and 44. A claim by filing a plaint, or claim made to property attached before judgment or taken in execution of a decree are instances of the claims to which this section appears to refer. It is not an innovation in India to punish a person who has brought a suit for the purpose of annoyance. By the Regulations, a Judge was authorised when a suit appeared frivolous, vexatious, or groundless, to fine the plaintiff and to convict him to close custody till he pays the fine—Morgan and Macpherson. This section is not limited to cases where a part of the claim made by the accused is false. It applies even where a part of the claim is false. A. W. N. 1890. 1. In order to bring a case under this section, it is immaterial whether the Court on which the false claim was instituted had jurisdiction to try the suit. 52 Ind. Cas. 666=20 Cr. L. J. 698. To justify a sanction for the prosecution of a plaintiff, under this section the dismissal of his claim is not enough, it must be shown that the claim he was making was to his knowledge false. 61 Ind. Cas. 995=22 Cr. L. J. 467.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

210. Whoever fraudulently obtains a decree or order against any person for a sum not due, or for a larger sum than is due, or for any property or interest in property to which he is not entitled, or fraudulently causes a decree or order to be executed against any person after it has been satisfied, or for anything in respect of which it has been satisfied, or fraudulently suffers or permits any such act to be done in his name, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Fraudulent decree.—An offence is committed when a decree is fraudulently obtained; it does not make any difference whether the decree alleged to be fraudulent has, or has not been subsequently set aside by the parties against whom it was made. 33 C. 193; see also 12 W. R. Cr. 37; 9 M. 101.

Satisfied.—In construing this section, it is necessary to attach to the word "satisfied" its ordinary meaning, and not to understand it as referring only to decree, the satisfaction of which has been certified. 10 B. 228; 16 C. 126; see also 4 M. 325; U. B. R. (1897—1901) Vol. I, 278; 7 P. R. 1885 Cr.; 59 P. L. R. 1911=12 Cr. L. J. 189. A decree holder who realises more than what is due to him, is not guilty under this section if he has done so under a mistake. 11 P. W. R. 1914 Cr.=23 Ind. Cas. 471=15 Cr. L. J. 263. Where the accused fraudulently obtains decree for sums which had been disallowed in the former suit, the Court in which the second suit is filed can take action under this section. 90 Ind. Cas. 660=26 Cr. L. J. 1588=26 P. L. R. 717. A person applying for the execution of a decree which has already been executed, is guilty not under section 209, but under section 210 of the Indian Penal Code. 12 W. R. Cr. 37; see also 88 P. L. R. 1902=13 P. R. 1902 Cr.; A. I. R. 1931 All. 305=53 A. 416=32 Cr. L. J. 367=1931 A. L. J. 117=129 Ind. Cas. 264. But where execution was taken out for full decree when it has been partially satisfied, and judgment debtor did not object, it is not a fit case for sanctioning prosecution because there was no fraudulent act. In application for criminal proceedings, inquiry as to adjustment or satisfaction is permitted. A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 148=9 Rang. 104.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

211. Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person institutes, or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both ;

and, if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—To constitute an offence under this section it is not necessary that any criminal proceedings should be taken on a complaint. 26 A. (F. B.) 244. A person should not be proceeded against under this section, unless he is given an opportunity of proving his case. 29 A. 587 ; 6 C. W. N. 295 ; A. W. N. 1907, 268. In order to constitute an offence of false charge under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, the false charge must be made to an officer or to a Court who has power to investigate and send it for trial, and in order to be a "charge" the accusation must be made with the intention to set the law in motion. 15 A. L. J. 767=39 A. 715 ; see also A. I. R. 1924 All. 779=22 A. L. J. 829=25 Cr. L. J. 1239=46 A. 906=82 Ind. Cas. 167. Difference between s. 182 and s. 211 is that the former does not involve any definite charge against a specified person while s. 211 does involve. A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 17=23 N. L. R. 136=28 Cr. L. J. 934=105 Ind. Cas. 454. False information to Superintendent of Police of a wrongful confinement of informant by police officer constitutes institution of criminal proceedings. A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 711. Where proceedings were erroneously taken and in good faith by Magistrate not empowered so to do, the complainant is not liable for false complaint under this section. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 550. Accusation in dying declaration made to Magistrate stands on no better footing than one made to another Ibid. Where a complaint to the police was followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge and such complaint was investigated by the Court the sanction or complaint of the Court is necessary for the prosecution of the complainant in respect of a false charge made to the police. 23 S. L. R. 225=115 Ind. Cas. 313=30 Cr. L. J. 399=A. I. R. 1929 Sind. 115. The mere communication of suspicion to the police on which an enquiry may be initiated does not amount to the institution of a criminal proceeding within the meaning of this section. 1912 M. W. N. 1125.

The intention to cause injury, that is, to cause harm illegally to some person in body, mind, reputation or property (Vide section 44) is part of this offence. Where no proceedings are actually instituted, and no false charge is made, a person is punishable under section 182, who injures or annoys another by giving false information to a public servant, with the intention of causing him to use his lawful powers to cause injury or annoyance. This code contains no provisions for the punishment (under these names) of the offence of "subsequent abetment" or of "accessories after the fact." The offences of persons falling within such descriptions at present are included among offences against public justice and are punishable under the next following and subsequent sections of this chapter—Morgan and Macpherson. The offence of laying false information to the police falls under the first paragraph of s. 211. 10 A. L. J. 429=13 Cr. L. J. 855=17 Ind. Cas. 791. That the accused believed the statement to be false must be proved. 22 Cr. L. J. 393=61 Ind. Cas. 521. Application by complainant asking for judicial inquiry of the charge is a complaint. 20 Cr. L. Failure to prove is not the same thing as to institute maliciously a false case. 11 Mys. L. J. 438. The gist of the offence under this section is to falsely charge a person with having committed an offence. 17 N. L. J. 189. Where two persons are falsely charged in one complaint, only one offence is committed. 1934 Cr. C. 182=151 Ind. Cas. 185=35 Cr. L. J. 1259=A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 21. Before charging a person under this section an opportunity should be given to him to prove his allegation but want of opportunity does not vitiating the trial. A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 21=35 Cr. L. J. 1259=151 Ind. Cas. 185=7 R. R. 43. A false charge and institution of criminal proceedings are not exclusive though they are not co-extensive. A criminal proceeding is instituted by a report to the police of a cognizable offence. But where the police is falsely informed of a non-cognizable offence it is a false charge and does not amount to institution of criminal proceedings. 151 Ind. Cas. 816=7 R. Pesh. 37=A. I. R. 1934 Pesh. 112=7 R. Pesh. 37=1934 Cr. C. 1317; see also A. I. R. 1934 Rang. 21=35 Cr. L. J. 1259=151 Ind. Cas. 185=1934 Cr. C. 182. The onus lies upon the prosecution to show that the complaint or charge is false and that there is no just or lawful ground for it. 11 Mys. L. J. 438.

This section contemplates a charge which is indivisible in its nature. 5 C. W. N. 727. To constitute an offence under the second portion of this section, it is necessary that the complaint which is alleged to constitute the false charge should have been made to a Police officer with a view to further proceedings or to a Magistrate competent to enquire into and investigate the matter of complaint. A. W. N. 1898, 144. Where a person makes a false report of an offence without naming any one as the perpetrator thereof, he commits no offence. 4 A. L. J. 361=A. W. N. 1907, 146=5 Cr. L. J. 396. In a case under this section, it is the duty of prosecution to prove by satisfactory evidence that the charge is wilfully false to the knowledge of the maker of the charge. 18 C. W. N. 391=15 Cr. L. J. 355=23 Ind. Cas. 723. Before granting any sanction under s. 211, the Magistrate ought to observe all the formalities prescribed under ss. 201-203 Cr. Pro. Code. 12 Bom. L. R. 229=5 Ind. Cas. 971=11 Cr. L. J. 338. The answering of questions put to a person by a Magistrate in the enquiry which he has no option but to answer cannot be held to constitute a charge within the meaning of this section. 8 A. L. To sustain a conviction under this section there must be a charge of a specific offence made with the intention of setting the criminal law in motion. 10 Bur. L. T. 259. For a conviction under this section it is necessary to establish that the accused knew there was no just or lawful ground for the charge. 61 Ind. Cas. 61=22 Cr. L. J. 333. To fall under s. 211 I. P. Code, the false charge must be made to some person in authority i. e. to a person who is in a position to get the offender punished. 26 O. C. 44=1923 Oudh. 4. The term "institution" in this section means the institution either by the accused himself, or by the police or others in consequence of the accused's actions in some Criminal Court. 65 Ind. An application to the Police not being enquired into, the applicant addressed a petition to the Deputy Commissioner for enquiry into the matter. Held, the petition was not a complaint and action cannot be taken under s. 211. 24 Cr. Code, the person to be proceeded against must be given a chance of showing causes. When the police report an information given by an informant to be false in a cognizable case and lays a complaint against that informant under section 211; the Court is not bound before issuing summons under section 211, to call upon the informant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. 7 Pat. 408; but see 31 C. Where the person at whose instance proceedings under section 211, Penal Code, are initiated against a false complaint, is never charged in any Court, nor is he ever put upon his trial before any Magistrate, nor were any proceedings taken against him before the Court in which another person who was alleged by the false complainant to be his accomplice was involved, it cannot be said that the offence under s. 211, Penal Code, was an offence which was committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court though another person against whom also false complaint was made in the same transaction is tried in Court. 9 Lah. 408=10 Lah. It is not a correct proposition of law to state that in every case in which a man files a complaint and that complaint is dismissed summarily by a magistrate, it is for the complainant to justify that the complaint is a good and correct complaint. 98 Ind. P. Code can be instituted against the informant. 105 Ind. Cas. 454=28 Cr. L. J. 934. Where X made a report to the police against Y and subsequently lodged a complaint against the latter, and the accused launched a counter case against the informant under section 211, I. P. L. T. 365=83 Ind. Cas. 701. Where a person informs the police that he suspects, without deliberately charging him with the offence it may not amount to giving false information within section 211 I. The offence under section 211 I. P. Code is a non-cognizable one. 90 Ind. Cas. 398=26 Cr. L. J. 1550=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 672. A person who lays an information containing a false charge against a number of persons commits a distinct offence against each of the persons against whom he makes a charge and may be separately prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code for each of such offences. 11 Bur. L. T. 136=48 Ind. Cas. 342=19 Cr. L. J. 1002. Section 211 requires great deal more than a mere suggestion of an inference. There must be a charge of some specific offence made with the intention and object of setting the criminal law in motion against the man who is said to have committed the offence. Further the circumstances in which the statement was made and the form of words used should also be considered. 36 Ind. Cas. 834. Practice that complainant should not be tried under section 211 till disposal of his case is merely rule of safety and not based on any statute. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 622. Where on the complaint of a person no prosecution can be started, the accused cannot be convicted under s. 211 where the complaint is found false. 7 A. L. J. 618=11 Cr. L. J. 351=6 Ind. Cas. 390. A statement made under section 162, Cr. Pro. Code, cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for an offence under section 211, I. P. Code. When the accused made his statement, the law had already been set in motion, and the proceedings cannot be said to have been instituted by the statement made by the accused under section 162 of the Cr. Procedure Code. 20 M. L. J. 132=5 Ind. Cas. 908=18 Cr. L. J. 286. Where a person is convicted under the second clause of section 211, I. P. Code he should be sentenced to undergo a term of imprisonment and not merely to payment of fine. 1 B. H. C. 34. The test to determine whether accusation amounts to charge is to see whether complaint is intended to set criminal law in motion. A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 246=1932 Cr. C. 258=33 P. L. R. 174=33 Cr. L. J. 409=137 Ind. Cas. 157.

In a prosecution under section 211, Penal Code two principles are to be kept in view; namely first, that failure on the part of the complainant to establish the truth of his allegation does not by any means justify the inference that the complaint was false, and, secondly, that to secure a conviction in this class of cases it must be established beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused but entirely inconsistent with this contention. 16 C. L. J. 453=17 Ind. Cas. 993=13 Cr. L. J. 894=17 C. W. N. 379. A Magistrate cannot give himself jurisdiction to try an offence under section 211 by treating it as one under section 500 I. P. Code. According to s. 195 Cr. Procedure Code, cognizance of it should not be taken without sanction. U. B. R. (1897-1991) Vol. I, 279. Where the police were told that they should search certain houses because there was reason to suspect the conduct of the owners of those houses, it does not amount to a charge within the meaning of s. 211 I. P. Code. Prosecution under s. 182, I. P. Code must be instituted on the sanction or the complaint of the public servant to whom the false information was given. 1915 M. W. N. 272. The actual institution of criminal proceedings on a false charge is essential to the application of the latter part of section 211; if the offence of the accused stops at making a false charge, his case falls under the first part of the section, irrespective of the fact that the false charge relates to "an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards." 5 A. 215=A. W. N. 1882, 225. Where no criminal proceeding is instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years and upwards,⁹ the accused making such charge is punishable only under the first part of section 211, Penal Code. 5 A. 598=A. W. N. 1883, 149. Section 211 of the Penal Code is not limited to attempts at substantiating false charges in Courts of Justice; so that a false charge before the Police and never intended to be prosecuted in Court is quite within the contemplation of the section, 5 C. 281. The offence referred to in section 211, I. P. Code, consists not in the prosecution of a false complaint, but in the making of it. 1 A. 497. Section 182 applies to information given to a public servant. Section 211 applies to false charge of an offence involving criminal proceedings. Where a charge is found to be false by the Police, Magistrate except in certain cases, is not competent to order, merely on a perusal of the Police report the prosecution of the person preferring the charge, summarily under section 182. He should be tried under s. 211. 7 C. L. R. 382.

To constitute the offence of preferring a false charge contemplated in section 211, Penal Code, it is not necessary that the charge should be made before a Magistrate. It is enough, if it appear that the charge was deliberately made before an officer of Police, with a view to its being brought before a Magistrate. 1 Weir, 184=1 M. H. C. 30; see also A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 69. To convict a person under s. 211, Penal Code, it must be shown, not merely that he made the charge without reasonable or probable grounds but that he knew there was no just or lawful ground for the charge. 1 Weir, 185. If a false charge had been made and if it is not pending at the time of the trial of the accused, an offence under section 211 has been committed. 1 A. 527. A person may in good faith institute a charge which is subsequently found to be false, or he may, with intent to cause injury to an enemy, institute criminal proceedings, believing there are just and lawful grounds for them but in neither case does he commit an offence under section, 211 I. P. Code. 3 N. W. P. 327. Where a person charges another with voluntarily causing hurt, and the charge is wilfully false, and is made with intent to injure, he is chargeable with the offence described in s. 211. 4 N. W. P. 6. The word "falsely charging" used in s. 211, must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are used in a technical and exclusive sense, and by a parity of reasoning, the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge. 19 B. 51. The word "charges" as used in the section, means something different from "gives information." The words "falsely charges" must be construed with reference to the words which speak of the institution of proceedings, 26 M. 640. A false information laid before a Magistrate complaining of the infraction of a right of a civil nature, is not an offence under section 211 of the Penal Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 3. A man ought not to be tried for making a false complaint under section 211 of the Penal Code, until he has had an opportunity of proving the truth of the complaint by him, if he desires to take advantage of it, not before the Police, but before the Magistrate, 7 C. 87; 8 C. 435; 6 C. 496=7 C. L. R. 466; Cr. Rg. 65 of 1896; 8 C. L. R. 289; but see 4 C. L. R. 134; 7 M. 292; 6 C. W. N. 295. It is not in every case that a Magistrate considers to be false that he should direct a prosecution under section 211 of the Code. 34 C. 42=4 Cr. L. J. 460=11 C. W. N. 125.

Where the accused sent a petition to a Magistrate praying for inquiry as to whether a police officer was fit for his office and alleging that he (the accused) and others believed the officer to have connived at offences of various sorts, held that the accused had not instituted any charge of criminal proceeding within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code. A. W. N. 1882, 242. Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint upon a report by the police and without examining even the complainant, and the police thereupon prosecuted the complainant without any sanction, held, that the accused had not committed an offence under section 211, in as much as there was no legal evidence before the Magistrate, nor was there a legal sanction for the charge. 1 Weir 188=2 Weir 162. If a young girl, forcibly abducted, exaggerates the force used and resistance offered, such exaggeration is not a sufficient ground for prosecuting her for intentionally giving false evidence and for making a false charge. L. B. R. (1892-1900), 443. To bring a vexatious charge is not an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code. 1 Bom. L. R. 11. An offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code includes an offence under s. 182. A Magistrate can proceed under either section, though, in cases of serious nature, proper course may be to proceed under section 211. 5 C. 184; see also A. W. N. 1886, 259; 22 B. 596. Until a complaint is dismissed under s. 203, Criminal Procedure Code, or otherwise disposed of, no proceedings can be taken under s. 211 I. P. Code, against the complainant. 3 C. W. N. 758; 3 S. L. R. 119 Cr.=4 Ind. Cas. 1160. To sustain a conviction under s. 211 of the Penal Code, it is necessary that the false charge should be made to a Court or to an officer, who has powers to investigate and send up for trial. A station staff officer having neither Magisterial nor police powers, section 211 will not apply to a false charge made to him. 6 C. 620=8 C. L. R. 215. Where a Police officer made a coloured or false report that a certain offence investigated by him was proved, held that a sanction for his prosecution under section 211, I. P. Code could not be granted, as it could not be said that the accused instituted or caused to be instituted any criminal proceeding against any person. 4 C. W. N. 347. A District Magistrate, who, after examining the complainant's witness, dismisses the case, disbelieving the story of the prosecution, is competent to grant sanction for the prosecution of the complaint under section 211 I. P. Code. 10 C. L. R. 4.

Where a person falsely informs the police, not only that he had been robbed, but also that a specified individual committed that offence, held, that he was liable to be charged with an offence under s. 211 I. P. Code, and under s. 182 I. P. Code, 7 B. 184; see also A. W. N. 1885, 95. Where a person made a complaint of criminal trespass alleging an intention to the accused, and the police, although finding that the intention alleged was not true, stated that they believed the charge of trespass, and the complainant did not desire to take further proceedings against the accused, held, that the Magistrate was not competent to order, under section 476 Cr. Pro. Code, the prosecution of the complainant under section 211 I. P. Code for making a false complaint, on taking evidence as there was no judicial proceedings. 4 C. W. N. 351. Petition to a Deputy Commissioner making certain complaint against a Manager of the Court of Wards, is not a complaint under s. 4 cl. (h) of the Cr. Procedure Code. 109 P. L. R. 1904=1 Cr. L. J. 957. A false charge of murder made to the police comes under the first paragraph of s. 211, if no criminal proceedings have been instituted thereupon. 16A. 124=A. W. N. 1894; 10; 14 C. 633; 26 P. R. 1908 Cr.; 6 A. L. J. 982. The latter part of s. 211 is confined to cases in which criminal proceedings have been instituted, and it does not apply to false charges only. 14 C. 633. There is nothing to limit the words "the institution of criminal proceedings" to the bringing of a charge before a Magistrate or to action by the Magistrate or police against the person charged. When a charge of a cognizable offence is made to the police against a specified person, criminal proceedings within the meaning of the section have been instituted just as much as if the charge had been made before the Magistrate. 20 M. 79=7 M. L. J. 16. A person who makes a false complaint to the police may be proceeded against under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and it is not competent to a Magistrate to refuse to entertain the case on the ground that the accused had not been afforded an opportunity of proving his original complaint. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 524. When a false charge is made to the police of a cognizable offence the offence committed by a person making the false charge falls within the meaning of section 211. 5 C. W. N. 727; 2 N. L. R. 119=4 Cr. L. J. 240; 27 M. 127. A person, who answers questions put to him by a police officer making an investigation under section 161, Cr. Pro. Code, does not institute or cause to be instituted criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211, Penal Code, nor does he thereby charge any person within the meaning of this section. 1 Weir 193; 31 M. 506.

Where a statement is made to a police of a suspicion that a particular person had committed an offence, held, that the information to the police would not, if the statement was false, amount to a false charge, and it would amount only to providing the police with a possible clue for investigating the matter which they might or might not follow up as they consider fit. 8 C. L. R. 233. "A false charge" in section 211, must not be understood in any restricted or technical sense, but in its ordinary meaning of false accusation made to any authority bound by law to investigate it or to take steps in regard to it with a view to investigate or other proceeding; and the institution of criminal proceedings includes the setting of the criminal law in motion. 5 M. L. T. 269 (F. B.)=9 Cr. L. J. 170=32 M. 258. A false charge of theft of a tree made to a village Magistrate is an offence under section 182, though it does not amount to an offence under section 211, Penal Code, in as much as the Magisterial powers of a village Magistrate are confined to cases of petty thefts only. 1 Weir, 122=1 Weir 194. Where a state of facts is brought to the notice of a Magistrate by a police report, which affords ground for supposing that an offence has been committed under s. 211 of the Penal Code, he has jurisdiction to enquire into or try the charge himself, or send it for enquiry or trial to one of his subordinates. 14 C. 707 (F. B.). A man is presumed in law to intend the ordinary and natural consequences of his acts, and when he falsely charges another before the police with the commission of an offence, knowing the charge to be false, there can be no doubt but that he is guilty of an offence, punishable both under s. 182 and s. 211 Penal Code, even though his primary object may have been to protect himself, rather than to injure the persons falsely charged. 1 Weir 120. The police after the investigation of a charge, under section, 436, I. P. Code, laid before them by petitioner, reported the same to be false. Petitioner then presented a petition to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, impugning the Police report and praying for trial of persons charged. Without examining the petitioner and disposing of his complaint the Magistrate directed him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under s. 211 I. P. Code, and, in result, ordered his prosecution. Held, that the petition presented to the Magistrate was a complaint and must have been dealt with as such, before a prosecution, under section 211 I. P. Code, could be instituted against the petitioner and that the order for his prosecution under the section, was therefore, bad and should be set aside. 33 C. L. J. 228=10 C. W. N. 158; 2 C. L. R. 315; 5 A. 387. But a prosecution under this section can be ordered where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint as false, after examining the complainant and after directing an enquiry by the Police. 4 A. 182.

A commitment for trial for false charge (s. 211 of the Penal Code) is sustainable, though based on a Police report, the complaint by the accused not having been judicially enquired into. 8 C. L. R. 255. The fact that the accused had no opportunity given to him to substantiate the complaint he made, is not a bar to his commitment for trial under section 211. A. W. N. 1882, 1. Sanction under section 195 should not be given, until the complainant has been afforded an opportunity of proving his case, which has been thrown out merely on the report of the Police. 8 A. 38=A. W. N. 1885, 323. Where the accused charged another with assault and an offence of abetment of assault was established, he cannot be convicted under s. 211. A. W. N. 1883, 39. A conviction for false charge under section 211, Penal Code, based on the statement at the trial by the prisoner that he made the false complaint unthinkingly, there being no record on the prisoner's plea as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Pro. Code, nor a compliance with other requirements, is bad. 7 C. 96=8 C. L. R. 471. Admission of false charge without admission of malicious intent is not a plea of guilty, and conviction under section 211 is not justified. A. W. N. 1886, 66. To establish an offence under section 211. I. P. Code it must be affirmatively proved that the accused had falsely charged and that there was no just or lawful ground for such charge. 26 P. R. 1900 Cr. 29 P. R. 1894 Cr. An order for the prosecution of the complainant before the examination of all the witnesses cited by him, is bad in law. 2 Cr. L. R. 389. A prosecution for a false charge may be made under s. 182 or s. 211. If the false charge is of a serious offence, the proper course is to proceed under s. 211; otherwise it is enough if the sanction be for the prosecution for an offence under s. 182, 32 C. 180. Where the accused informed the police that he had been informed by certain residents of the village, that there was a suspicion that the complainant had committed an offence, and there was no proof that the accused was on inimical terms with the complainant, held, that the accused was not guilty under section 211. 12 P. R. 1905 Cr.=74 P. L. R. 1905=2 Cr. L. J. 66. A criminal proceeding was instituted by a person before the police who reported the case to be false, and the matter coming on before a Magistrate empowered to dispose of police reports, he made an order making over the case to another Magistrate, for judicial enquiry. This Magistrate after holding a judicial inquiry as directed, submitted a report, upon which the other Magistrate made another to the following effect, viz:—"The complaint's charge has been established to be false and hence no process shall be issued against the accused and the complainant shall be proceeded against under s. 211, Indian Penal Code," and upon prosecution, the complainant was convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held, that the offence of instituting a false complaint, not having been committed before a Magistrate who ordered the prosecution of the petitioner, or brought to his notice in the course of judicial proceedings, the prosecution of the petitioner was bad and contrary to law and the proceeding must be quashed. 7 C. L. J. 371=7 Cr. L. J. 338. Where an accused person was charged with having given a false information to a public servant in which he mentioned the names of two persons, in whose house he informed that stolen property would be found, held, the statement being one, he could be charged only with having made one false statement and could not be tried for and convicted of two distinct offences under s. 182 of the Penal Code. 13 C. W. N. 270. Whether the provisions of s. 211 I. P. Code, as to the institution of criminal proceedings are restricted to criminal proceedings in a Court, see 26 P. R. 1888 Cr. A Deputy Magistrate, prosecuting a complainant and his witnesses for having preferred a false charge of theft before him, ought to prove the falsity of the complaint of theft in the presence of the accused, without simply relying on the decision in the case of theft. 11 W. R. Cr. 35. Where a false charge before a Magistrate is merely sent for police enquiry, without the taking of any further proceedings in any Court, the false charge, does not come within the second clause of s. 211. 3 P. R. 1888 Cr. The procedure before framing a charge, under section 211 of the offence of making a false charge with intent to injure considered. 8 B. L. R. App. 11=16 W. R. Cr. 44. Rape is an offence punishable with transportation for life or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years. The offence, therefore, of making a false charge of rape is triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 953. A Magistrate, in convicting a person under s. 211 P. Code, for preferring a false charge, should state the nature of the false charge in finding and enter it in the calender. 1 B. H. C. 87.

To establish a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an offence had been committed. 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 123. To constitute an offence under the section, it is necessary to show not merely that the criminal proceedings against the complainant have failed, but that the charge was in fact false and that the accused brought it with the knowledge that there was no just or lawful ground for the charge, and with the intention to injure these complainants. 1 P. R. 1886 Cr.; see also 14 P. R. 1879 Cr. Preferring a complaint to the police in respect of an offence which they are competent to deal with and thereby setting the police in motion is instituting a criminal proceeding within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code. 5 W. R. Cr. 32; see also 14 P. R. 1872 Cr.; 17 P. R. 1881. Section 211 of the Penal Code is not limited in its application to private individuals alone. A police officer, who maliciously commences criminal proceedings against any person or charges such person with an offence or causes him to be charged falsely not only commit the offence under s. 211 but commits it in a very aggravated manner. 11 W. R. Cr. 2. Section 182 clearly refers to informations of which that given in illustration (b) is an instance. Section 211 on the other hand applies to the case of a person, who, with intent to cause injury to another person, institutes a criminal proceeding against that person on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, namely, of having caused the death of a child by poisoning it, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such a proceeding. 8 W. R. Cr. 57. In a case under section 211 for preferring a false charge with knowledge of its falsity, the Judge should be satisfied not only that the facts, on being informed of which the accused preferred the charge, were false, but also that he did not believe the information or knew it to be false. 3 B. H. C. Cr. 16. Where a person preferred a false charge against another of refusing to give him a stamped receipt for money paid by him, held, that the act of the accused did not fall under s. 211 I. P. Code, as there was no charge of any offence. 1. B. H. C. 92. Separate convictions under section 195 and under section 211, Penal Code are illegal, where the first offence is committed only in furtherance of the second for being used as evidence in the false complaint which the accused brought against the complainant. 8 W. R. Cr. 65.

Under section 211, Penal Code, instituting a criminal proceeding may be treated as an offence in itself, apart from "falsely charging" a person with having committed an offence. 8 W. R. Cr. 87. In order to constitute an offence of false charge under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, there must be made to an officer or to a Court who has power to investigate and send it for trial, and in order to be a charge the accusation must be made with the intention to set the law in motion. 15 A. L. J. 767=39 A. 715. Where an information to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge, the sanction of complaint of the Court itself under s. 195 (1) (b) of the Code is necessary before the Court could take cognizance of an offence punishable under s. 211 of the Penal Code, in respect of the false charge made to the Police, on the ground that it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court. The fact that the complaint was not investigated by the Court, does not make any difference. 43 C. 1152; 44 C. 650; 4 Pat. 323=6 Pat. L. 457.

Procedure—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class. If offence charged be punishable with imprisonment for 7 years or upwards, then triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class. If offence charged be capital or punishable with transportation for life, in that case the offence is triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at with intent to cause injury to one C. D. appeared before the Magistrate and instituted criminal proceedings against him charging the said C. D. with having committed the offence of knowing at that time that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding (or charge) against the said C. D., and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

212. Whenever an offence has been committed, whoever harbours or conceals a person whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the offender, with the intention of screening him from legal punishment.

shall, if the offence is punishable with death, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

and, if the offence is punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

If punishable with transportation for life or with imprisonment, and, if the offence is punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year, and not to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of the description provided for the offence for a term which may extend to one fourth part of the longest term of imprisonment provided for the offence, or with fine, or with both.

'Offence' in this section includes any act committed at any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459 and 460 ; and every such act shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be punishable as if the accused person had been guilty of it in British India.

Exception—This provision shall not extend to any case in which the harbour or concealment is by the husband or wife of the offender.

Illustration.

A, knowing that B has committed dacoity, knowingly conceals B in order to screen him from legal punishment. Here, as B is liable to transportation for life A is liable to imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding three years, and is also liable to fine.

Legislative changes.—The last paragraph has been inserted by Act III of 1894.

Scope.—This section does not apply to the harbouring of persons, not being criminals, who merely abscond to avoid or delay a judicial investigation, nor, necessarily, to acts of assistance given to known criminals in the shape of money, food or means of escape, etc. It supposes that some offence has actually been committed, and that the harbourer gives refuge with the intention of screening him from legal punishment in his house or in some hiding place, to one whom he knows or has reason to believe to be the offender. The precise offence may be unknown to him. Thus he may not know whether the person harboured has committed theft, or extortion, or robbery : but if he has reason to know that an offence against property : has been committed by such person, this section will apply. To support the charge the following proof is required :—

1. That an offence has been committed. The trial will not usually take place until after the guilt of the principal offender has been ascertained by his conviction ; if it takes place before, there must be sufficient proof of some offence committed.

2. The harbouring or concealment of the person of the offender must be proved. A mere receipt of the property plundered, or of the proceeds of it, will not constitute this offence.

3. Knowledge or cause for believing that the person harboured is the offender must also be proved.

The intention to screen from justice would be reasonably inferred from proof of the above circumstances. But of course if the accused can show satisfactorily that he had no intention of screening the offender this will be a good defence.

The section extends to all cases, save the two excepted ones. Thus a master receiving his servant, or a servant his master,—a brother—his brother,—or father his son,—will all be subject to punishment. In some of these instances, however, the offence may be deemed to be deserving of a very light punishment—Morgan and Macpherson.

In order to constitute an offence under this section it must be established (1) that an offence has been committed (2) that the person known or reasonably believed to be the offender has been harboured or concealed, and (3) that such harbouring or concealing has been done with the intention of screening that person from legal punishment, 12 A. 434=A. W. N. 1890, 73 ; 21 P. R. 1867 Cr.

Where the accused does not know that the person staying with him is an offender a conviction under this section cannot be sustained. A. I. R. 1930 All. 33.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class. If punishable with imprisonment for 1 year and not for 10 years, in that case triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st class, or Court by which the offence is triable.

213. Whoever accepts, or attempts to obtain, or agrees to accept, any gratification for himself or any other person, or any restitution of property to himself or any other person, in consideration of his concealing an offence, or of his screening any person from legal punishment for any offence, or of his not proceeding against any person for the purpose of bringing him to legal punishment, shall, if the offence is punishable with death, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

and, if the offence is punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

and, if the offence is punishable with imprisonment not extending to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of the description provided for the offence for a term which may extend to one fourth part of the longest term of imprisonment provided for the offence, or with fine, or with both.

Application.—This section is applicable only when it is proved that the person screened or attempted to be screened from legal punishment has been guilty of an offence and not when there is merely a suspicion of his having committed some offence. 23 C. 420.

Scope.—The compounding of a crime by some agreement not to bring the criminal to justice if the property is restored or a pecuniary or other gratification (see section 161) is given is the offence punished by this and the following section. Those offences which approach in this nature to civil wrongs admitting of compensation are excepted from those provisions—Morgan and Macpherson. There cannot be screening of an offence when no offence has been committed. 15 Bom. L. R. 694=20 Ind. Cas. 453=14 Cr. L. J. 453=37 B.=658. To establish the commission of offences under ss. 213 and 214 it is essential to prove commission of the offences screened. 46 Ind. Cas. 424. The offence constituted by s. 213 and s. 214, I. P. Code consists in the corrupt motive which is brought into play as much as in the delay to criminal justice. 40 C. L. J. 278=1925 Cal. 85. Actual concealment or screening or abstention must be proved. 52 C. 151=26 Cr. L. J. 345=84 Ind. Cas. 649 ; 46 Ind. Cas. 424.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrent—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of session. If the offence be punishable with transportation for life or with imprisonment for 10 years then triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class : if with imprisonment for less than 10 years, in that case triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class, or Court by which the offence is triable,

214. Whoever gives or causes, or offers or agrees to give or cause any gratification to any person or to restore or cause the restoration of any property to any person in consideration, of that person's concealing an offence or of his screening any person from legal punishment for any offence, or of his not proceeding against any person for the purpose of bringing him to legal punishment, shall, if the offence is punishable with death, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine ;

and, if the offence is punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and, if the offence is punishable with imprisonment not extending to ten years, shall be punished with imprisonment of the description provided for the offence for a term which may extend to one fourth part of the longest term of imprisonment provided for the offence, or with fine or with both.

Exception.—The provisions of sections 213 and 214 do not extend to any case in which the offence may lawfully be compounded.

Illustrations.—[Repealed by the old Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882)].

Legislative changes.—The exception to s. 214 has been substituted by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (8 of 1882) s. 6, for the one originally enacted.

Notes.—It is not competent for a Magistrate to permit the offences of cheating and fraudulent personation to be compounded. 3 A. 283. This section includes the offer of a bribe by a person who has committed the offence that it is desired to screen. 1 Weir, 194 ; see also 1 Weir, 196. It was not the intention of the Legislature to punish the giving of gratifications, under a delusion that an offence has been committed or that the person was guilty of such offence. 14 M. 400=1 Weir 195=1 M. L. J. 463 ; see also U. B. R. (1892-1896) Vol. I, 196. This section is not applicable to offences where they are compoundable. 6 L. B. R. 48=15 Ind. Cas. 990=13 Cr. L. J. 574.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session ; if punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for 10 years—triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the First class ; if with imprisonment for less than 10 years—Triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st class or by the Court by which the offence is triable.

215. Whoever takes, or agrees or consents to take, any gratification under pretence or on account of helping any person to recover any movable property of which he shall have been deprived by any offence punishable under this Code shall unless he uses all means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope of section.—This section is applicable to the case of the offender himself taking gratification. 1 Weir 196 ; 23 A. 81 ; 26 M. L. J. 598. An attempt to take gratification within the meaning of this section necessarily includes the idea of concurrence of wills between the giver and the taker ; with this much super-added thereto, that some act has been done preliminary to the act of taking. 20 A. 389. This section is intended for the punishment of persons who, being usually in league with thieves, or well aware of their proceeding, obtain money, etc., for the recovery of stolen property, without making any effort to bring the offender to justice. In many places, cattle etc., are stolen by persons whose object it is to restore the stolen property to the owner on payment of a reward. The "go between," who is usually in case of cattle-stealing a professional tracker, is the person contemplated by this section. If he aids or instigates the thieves, he is an abettor of theft. But in default of evidence of abetment, if he receives a reward for procuring the restoration of stolen property without using "all means in his powers" to procure the apprehension and conviction of the offender, he is punishable under this section—Morgan and Macpherson. Where the thing is not stolen this section has no application merely because the accused took money from the complainant and failed to carry out his promise to find the thing. 9 P. R. 1915 Cr. This section is not intended to apply to the thief himself. U. B. R. 1914, 4th Qr. 43; see also 26 M. L. J. 598=15 Cr. L. J. 471. There can be no conviction for an offence under s. 215 until it is proved that a person has been deprived of movable property by an offence punishable under this code. 6 Ind. Cas. 250=11 Cr. L. J. 295. Where a cattle dealer takes a ransom for the restoration of stolen cattle and fails to restore that property to the owner in spite of the promise he is guilty of an offence under s. 420 I. P. Code and not of the minor offence under s. 215 I. P. Code.—73 Ind. Cas. 145=24 Cr. L. J. 529=1923 Rang. 37. Where sometime after the commission of a theft the accused proposed to find out the stolen articles on their being paid some money but took no steps after receiving the money to find out the thieves they are guilty of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 215. 46 A. 159=1923 All. 83. Where the accused assisted the owner in recovering certain horses that had been stolen, but there was no evidence connecting the accused with the thief excepting mere suspicion. Held, that under these circumstances the accused could not be convicted under this section. 25 A. L. J. 866. It cannot be a defence to a charge of accepting money for returning stolen property that the person who takes the money was himself the thief. When it was found that certain bullocks had been missing from the grazing field and the accused promised to recover the animals if he was paid a certain sum and on receiving the money the accused produced the animals in a short time, it is open to the Court to infer that the accused was thief or one among many thieves and that he was guilty of an offence under s. 215 I. P. Code. 22 A. L. J. 838=L. R. 5 A. 145 Cr.=1924 All. 783. This section is not intended to apply to the actual thief but to some one who takes any gratification on account of helping the owner to recover stolen property without at the same time using all the means in his power to cause the offender to be apprehended and convicted of the offence. 26 P. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st class.

216. Whenever any person convicted of, Harboured an offender who has escaped from custody, or whose apprehension has been ordered— or charged with an offence, being in lawful custody for that offence, escapes from such custody, or whenever a public servant, in the exercise of the lawful powers of such public servant, orders a certain person to be apprehended for an offence, who, knowing of such escape or order for apprehension, harbours or conceals that person, with the intention of preventing him from being apprehended, shall be punished in the manner following, that is to say, if the offence for which the person was in custody or is ordered to be apprehended, is punishable with death, he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine ;

I. P. Code—28

if the offence is punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment for ten years, he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, with or without fine ;

if punishable with transportation for life, or with imprisonment, and, if the offence is punishable with imprisonment which may extend to one year and not to ten years, he shall be punished with imprisonment of the description provided for the offence for a term which may extend to one fourth part of the longest term of the imprisonment provided for such offence or with fine, or with both.

"Offence" in this section includes also any act or omission of which a person is alleged to have been guilty out of British India, which, if he had been guilty of it in British India, would have been punishable as an offence, and for which he is, under any law relating to extradition, or under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, or otherwise, liable to be apprehended or detained in custody in British India ; and every such act or omission shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to be punishable as if the accused person had been guilty of it in British India.

Exception.—This provision does not extend to the case in which the harbour or concealment is by the husband or wife of the person to be apprehended.

Scope.—The offence in the present section is aggravated, because the person harboured has escaped, after being actually convicted or charged with the offence, or because a warrant or order for his apprehension has issued—Morgan and Macpherson. It is an offence under this section to harbour or conceal a person for whose apprehension an order has been passed by a public servant, even when such apprehension is sought to be made not for the purpose of trying him for an offence that he may have committed, but for enforcing a punishment already inflicted on him for having committed the offence. 11 C. L. J. 109=5 Ind. Cas. 311=11 Cr. L. J. 95. In order to constitute an offence under this section, harbouring must be done with the intention of preventing the apprehension of such person. L. B. R. (1872—1892) 174. See also 15 Cr. L. J. 399=28 Ind. Cas. 701. The word "harbour" in this section must be construed liberally. It includes a person who harbours the offender in house belonging to a third person and who visits him there. 14 Bom. L. R. 483=16 Ind. Cas. 509=13 Cr. L. J. 701=1 Bom. Cr. C. 151. The word "harbour" does not only mean to provide shelter, food and clothing but includes "the assisting of a person in any way to evade apprehension." 5 Lah. L. J. 329=73 Ind. Cas. 691=24 Cr. L. J. 659=1923 Lah. 228 ; see also 72 Ind. Cas. 949=24 Cr. L. J. 485. The mere giving of a meal to two proclaimed offenders is not an offence under this section. 6 Lah. L. J. 481. For a conviction under this section it must be proved that the accused knew the person harboured to be a person for whose apprehension an order had been made by competent authority. 6 Lah. L. J. 478=1925 Lah. 103=26 Cr. L. J. 415=84 Ind. Cas. 1055.

In order that an offence under section 216, I. P. Code, should be committed it is necessary that the person harbouring the offender must be harbouring him with the intention of preventing him from being apprehended. 52 B. 151=30 Bom. L. R. 70=108 Ind. Cas. 27=29 Cr. L. J. 317=A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 184. In order to sustain a conviction under s. 216 I. P. Code it is enough to show that orders of apprehension were issued against the person harboured for an alleged offence. It is not necessary to show that the said offence was actually committed. But the fact that the person harboured was acquitted may be taken into account in awarding sentence. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1147=55 M. L. J. 503=28 L. W. 403. The accused was not found to have known that the person he harboured was a proclaimed offender before the arrival of the police to search his house. It appeared, however, that after the Sub-Inspector had informed him that the person was a proclaimed offender he denied the fact that he harboured him and gave prevaricating answers evidently with the object of enabling the offender to evade apprehension. Held that the false replies given by the accused were sufficient to bring him within the purview of s. 216 I. P. Code. 11 Lah. L. J. 377. Where false information was given to police to assist evading apprehension, an offence under s. 216 was committed. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 99=11 L. L. J. 377=1930 Cr. C. 73=125 Ind. Cas. 178.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class. If punishable with imprisonment for 1 year and not for 10 years, triable by Presidency Magistrate, Magistrate of the first class, or Court by which the offence is triable.

216A. Whoever, knowing or having reason to believe that any persons are about to commit, or have recently committed, robbery or dacoity, harbours them or any of them, with the intention of facilitating the commission of such robbery or dacoity, or of screening them or any of them from punishment, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section it is immaterial whether the robbery or dacoity is intended to be committed, or has been committed, within or without British India.

Exception.—This provision does not extend to the case in which the harbour is by the husband or wife of the offender.

Gist of Offence.—In order to justify a conviction under this section, there must be evidence, both of knowledge and of intention. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 775. Lending a pony to certain dacoits to enable them to carry their loot away is not "harbouring" under this section. 22 A. L. J. 496=80 Ind. Cas. 711=1924 All. 675. This section requires that no one should harbour any persons who are about to commit a dacoity with the intention of facilitating the commission of such dacoity. 26 Cr. L. J. 1028=87 Ind. Cas. 916=A. I. R. 19 S. L. R. 111. The provisions of s. 110 Cr. Pro. Code, do not apply to a person suspected of harbouring dacoits. Such a man should be dealt with under s. 216 A. A. I. R. 1928 All. 682=1929 A. L. J. 93=51 A. 459=30 Cr. L. J. 694=116 Ind. Cas. 804.

Procedure—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Legislative Changes.—This section has been inserted by Act, III of 1894 s. 8.

216B. In section 212, 216 and 216A, the word 'harbour' includes the supplying a person with shelter, food, drink, money, clothes, arms, ammunition, or means of conveyance, or the assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension.

Legislative changes.—This section has been added by Act VII of 1894.

Scope.—The words at the end of this section, "or assisting a person in any way to evade apprehension" must be meant to point to some method ejus dem generis with these that have been specified in the earlier portion of the section. A bare lie in order to induce the police to desist from their pursuit does not fall within that category. 25 A. 261. Where a person gives false information to the police with respect to a proclaimed offender or warns him of the approach of the police in order that he may make good the escape, he is guilty of the offence of harbouring him. 27 Punj. The ways in which assistance may be rendered need not for the purpose, of s. 216 be restricted to methods which may properly be regarded as ejus dem generis or of a like nature with supplies of food or of other necessary articles. 21 C. 217. Whoever, being a public servant, knowingly disobeys any direction of the law as to the way in which he is to conduct himself as such public servant, intending thereby to save, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby save any person from legal punishment, or subject him to a less punishment than that to which he is liable, or with intent to save or knowing that he is likely thereby to save any property from forfeiture, or any charge to which it is liable by law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend or two years, or with fine or with both.

Application.—For the purpose of a conviction under the section it is sufficient that the accused has knowingly disobeyed any direction of the law as to the way in which he is to conduct himself as a public servant and that he has done this with the intention of saving a person from legal punishment. It is not further necessary to show that in point of fact, the person so intended to be saved had committed an offence or was justly liable to legal punishment. 3. C. 412 ; W. R. 1864, Cr. 5 ; 1 J. G. 45. Before a person can be convicted under this section it must be shown that there is a direction of the law as to the way in which he is to conduct himself, as such public servant, and this direction must be a direction to be found in some positive Statute or some rules or regulations which are declared by Statute to have the force of law. A. W. N. 1902, 16 ; see also 1 M. 206=1 Weir 196. It is not necessary for a conviction under ss. 217 and 218 to establish that an offence had been actually committed. 139 Ind. Cas. 84=33 Cr. L. A police officer, who apprehends several persons at night on suspicion that they have committed culpable homicide, and who keeps them in the village where they have been arrested after tying them together by the hands, is not guilty of an offence under s. 217, if the prisoners escape in the course of night. 18 P. R. 1871, Cr. A. A police constable who retained for himself a piece of gold found in a search for stolen property but not proved to be part of the stolen property and failed to report his possession to the superior officer under s. 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is guilty of an offence under s. 217. 16 Cr. A Police constable who retained for himself a piece of gold found in a search for stolen property and failed to report his possession to his superior officers under s. 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is guilty of an offence under this section. 29 Ind. Cas. 95.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

218. Whoever being public servant and being, as such public servant

Public servant framing incorrect record or writing with intent to save person from punishment or property from forfeiture.

charged with the preparation of any record or other writing, frames, that record or writing in manner which he knows to be incorrect, with intent to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, loss or injury to the public or any person or with intent thereby to save, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby save, any person from legal punishment or with intent to save, or knowing that he is likely thereby to save, any property from forfeiture or other charge to which it is liable by law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine or with both.

Gist of offence.—To support a conviction under this section, it is necessary to prove that the accused believed, or had reason to believe, that the person concerned had committed an offence, though it is not necessary to prove that such an offence had as a matter of fact, been committed. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 405. It is not necessary for a conviction under s. 218 to establish that an offence had been actually committed A. I. R. 1932 Cal. 850=139 Ind. Cas. 89=1932 Cr. C. 881=33 Cr. L. J. 657. This section contemplates the wilful falsification of a public document with the intent thereby to cause loss and injury, and "this" means by the document itself or by some transaction with which it is essentially connected. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 201.

To constitute an offence under this section it is not necessary that the incorrect document should be submitted to another person or be otherwise used by the writer. 13 P. R. 1881. Cr. The words "charged with the preparation" in s. 218, Penal Code, are not restricted to the narrow meaning of enjoined by a special provision of law. 27 C. 144. A village Munsif, trying a case of theft is not bound to prepare a calender. Therefore a village Munsif, who submits a false calender of a case of theft tried by him is not guilty of an offence under s. 218. 1 Weir 197. Where a police inspector had been charged with framing an incorrect record in that he entered in his diary that certain cartmen told him that "they were not beaten by dacoit" while in fact they told him that "they were beaten by dacoits," this of itself is not sufficient to sustain a conviction under s. 218 I. P. Code. 1911 M. W. N. 34 12=Cr. L. J. 155=11 Ind. Cas. 799. It is doubtful whether it is unnecessary under this section to prove an intention to screen any particular person. 23 Bom. L. R. 823=63 Ind. Cas. 145=22 Cr. L. J. 609. For a conviction under this section the actual guilt or otherwise of the alleged offender is immaterial. It is sufficient that the commission of a cognizable offence has been brought to the notice of the accused officially and in order to screen the offenders he prepared the record in a manner which he knew to be incorrect. 7 Lah. L. J. 331=26 Cr. L. J. 832=86 Ind. Cas. 661. Sub-Inspector of Police making incorrect report with intent to cause injury to complainant is guilty under s. 218 A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 153.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

219. Whoever, being a public servant, corruptly or maliciously makes or pronounces, in any stage of a judicial proceeding, any report, order, verdict, or decision, which he knows to be contrary to law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Where a village Munsif maliciously and knowingly passed a decree which was contrary to law, held that he is guilty of an offence under s. 219 I. P. Code consisting in the malicious pronouncement of a decision. 15 A. L. J. 106. Malice in common acceptance means ill-will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally; done without just cause or excuse. Bromage v. Prosser 4 B. C. 247, 255; see also 15 A. L. J. 106. But no malice can be inferred where a man has been unlawfully confined. 9 B. H. C. 346.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

220. Whoever, being in any office which gives him legal authority to commit persons for trial or to confinement, or to keep persons in confinement, corruptly or maliciously commits any person for trial or confinement, or keeps any person in confinement in the exercise of that authority, knowing that, in so doing, he is acting contrary to law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Scope.—Where an arrest is legal, there can be no guilty knowledge "superadded to an illegal act" such as is necessary to establish against an accused to justify a conviction under this section. It is only when there has been an excess by the police officer of his legal powers of arrest that it becomes necessary to consider whether he has acted corruptly or maliciously and with the knowledge that he was "acting contrary to law." 10 B. 506. To justify a conviction under this section, there must be a guilty knowledge superadded to an illegal act. 9 B. H. C. R. 346; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 222; 5 Bom. L. R. 597.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

221. Whoever, being a public servant, legally bound as such public servant to apprehend or to keep in confinement any person charged with or liable to be apprehended for an offence, intentionally omits to apprehend such person, or intentionally suffers such person to escape, or intentionally aids such person in escaping, or attempting to escape, from such confinement, shall be punished as follows, that is to say—with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, with or without fine, if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, was charged with, or liable to be apprehended for, an offence punishable with death; or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, with or without fine, if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, was charged with, or liable to be apprehended for, an offence punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years; or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, with or without fine, if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, was charged with, or liable to be apprehended for, an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term less than ten years.

Notes.—A village Chowkidar is not legally bound, as a public servant, to apprehend a person accused of having committed murder, if the murder was not committed within his village or if the person accused was not a proclaimed offender, or if the homicide was not committed in his presence. 3 A. 60. An offence falling under the Police Act and also under the Penal Code should be punished under the latter enactment. 1 P. R. 1874 Cr. The duties of a Chowkidar as a private citizen ought not to be confounded with his duties as a public servant. Where the legal obligation of the Chowkidar to arrest or detain has not been established, there is no deviation from his statutory duty within the purview of section 221; and the Chowkidar cannot be penalized for intentionally suffering a pilferer to escape from his detention. A. I. R. 1929 A. 935=31 Cr. L. J. 12=1930 A. L. J. 242=120 Ind. Cas. 205.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session. If punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment for ten years, triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class; if with imprisonment for less than 10 years, triable by Presidency Magistrate, or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows:—

That you, on or about the day of at being a public servant to wit as being such public servant legally bound to apprehend (or keep in confinement) one X. Y. charged with the offence of (or liable to be apprehended for an offence etc.) did intentionally omit to apprehend such person (or intentionally suffered such person to escape, or intentionally aided such person in escaping or attempting to escape from such confinement); and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 221 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance (or cognizance of the Court of Session.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

222. Whoever, being a public servant, legally bound as such public servant to apprehend, or to keep in confinement,

Intentional omission to apprehend on the part of public servant bound to apprehend person under sentence or lawfully committed.

any person under sentence of a Court of Justice for any offence, "or lawfully committed to custody," intentionally omits to apprehend such person, or intentionally suffers such person to escape, or intentionally aids such person in escaping, or attempting to escape from such confinement, shall be punished as follows, that is to say:—

with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to fourteen years, with or without fine, if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, is under sentence of death; or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, with or without fine, if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, is subject by a sentence of a Court of Justice, or by virtue of a commutation of such sentence, to transportation for life or penal servitude for life, or to transportation or penal servitude or imprisonment for a term of ten years or upwards; or

with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine or with both if the person in confinement, or who ought to have been apprehended, is subject, by a sentence of a Court of Justice, to imprisonment for a term not extending to ten years, or if the person was lawfully committed to custody.

Notes.—The fact that the acts proved do not amount to an attempt to escape but constitute only a preparation to escape does not exculpate the accused because the offence of which he has been charged and convicted is the offence of intentionally aiding the prisoners in attempting to escape. It is necessary to see what is meant by "intentionally aiding." The meaning of the phrase can be learnt from s. 107, Expl. (2) where it is explained that whoever either prior to or at the time of the commission of an act does anything in order to facilitate the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act. It cannot be gainsaid that when the accused does acts done in order to facilitate the attempt of the prisoners to escape and that he does thereby facilitate an attempt to escape he can be properly convicted under s. 222 and it makes no difference that the attempt was in fact frustrated by other circumstances. 19 Ind. Cas. 762=33 Cr. L. J. 1103=A, I. R. 1929 Lah. 631=1929 Cr. C. 190.

Amendment.—The words within quotations have been inserted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act 27 of 1873 s. 8.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session; if under sentence of imprisonment for less than 10 years or lawfully committed to custody then triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st class and the offence is bailable.

223. Whoever, being a public servant legally bound as such public servant to keep in confinement any person charged with or convicted of any offence, "or lawfully committed to custody," negligently suffer such person to escape from confinement, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Amendment.—The words within quotations have been inserted by the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act. 27 of 1870 s. 8.

Application.—Before a man can be convicted under this section, of having negligently suffered a prisoner to escape, it must be shown, not only that he was guilty of negligence, but that the escape was at least the natural and probable consequence of his negligence. 7 A. L. J. 907 Cr. Certain police men were conveying a dangerous prisoner in a camel cart, having handcuffed him doubly and having tied a rope round his waist. The prisoner was allowed to get down in order to answer the call of nature, whereupon he gave a false alarm crying "snake" and broke away from the constables. Held, that the constables on the facts were not guilty of an offence under s. 223 I. P. Code. 15 A. L. J. 883=19 Cr. L. J. 78=43 Ind. Cas. 110. To constitute the offence it must be shown that escape was a natural and probable consequence of the negligence. 20 Cr. L. J. 359=11 P. Confinement.—The word "confinement" should not be restricted to confinement within circumscribed limits. Ind ss. 220, 225 I. P. C. the legislature appears to have used the words "custody" and "confinement" as co-extensive. 2 P. R. 1891 Cr. (F. B.); 32 P. R. 1890, Cr. Where neither the original arrest nor the subsequent custody of a Chowkidar from whose custody a prisoner escaped, was lawful, the Chowkidar could not properly be convicted of an offence under this section. 29 A. 377=A. W. N. 1907, 94=5 Cr. L. J. 277. Where the accused were charged under this section, it was shown that they marched the prisoner by night. There was no evidence that they had reason to expect that any attempt would be made at rescuing the prisoner. Held, that an offence under this section was not made out. 6 M. L. T. 247=3 Ind. Cas. 460=10 Cr. L. J. 293. A village vitti is not a public servant, within s. 223, legally bound to keep in confinement any person charged with or convicted of committing any offence. 1 Weir. 197. Where the accused police officer absented himself from the police station on the night during which the person in the police station havalat escaped, it cannot be said that he negligently suffered the person to escape from confinement, in which he was legally bound to keep him. 6 P. L. R. 1900 Cr. A jail warder can be convicted under this section for negligently allowing prisoner to escape. 11 P. R. Cr. 1919=50 Ind. Cas. 830=20 Cr. L. J. 350.

Procedure.—Not cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of first or second class.

224. Whoever, intentionally offers any resistance or illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of himself for any offence with which he is charged or of which he has been convicted or escapes, or attempts to escape, from any custody in which he is lawfully detained for any such offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Explanation.—The punishment in this section is in addition to the punishment for which the person to be apprehended or detained in custody was liable for the offence with which he was charged, or of which he was convicted.

Scope.—Manual detention is not essential to constitute an arrest. The mere evasion of an arrest will not amount to resistance or illegal obstruction to the arrest. 1 Weir 205. To sustain a charge under s. 224 or s. 225 the arrest or detention should be legal. A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 384=18 M. L. W. 818=25 Cr. L. J. 792=81 Ind. Cas. 312; see also 138 Ind. Cas. 844=33 Cr. L. Even when the escape is effected by the consent or neglect of the person that kept the prisoner in custody, e. g., when the person having the custody of the accused went to sleep, the accused is no less guilty, as neither such illegal consent nor neglect absolves him from the duty of submitting to the judgment of the law. 31 M. 271. In order to constitute an offence under this section something more is required than an evasion of arrest or a mere assertion by the person sought to be arrested that would not like to be arrested or that a fight would be the result of such arrest. 20 Cr. L. J. 84=48 Ind. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Persidency Magistrate or Magistrate of 1st or 2nd class.

226. Whoever, having been lawfully transported, returns from such transportation, the term of such transportation not having expired, and his punishment not having been remitted, shall be punished with transportation for life, and shall also be liable to fine, and to be imprisoned with rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years before he is so transported.

Notes.—Vide 23 A. L. J. 189 ; 4 M. H. C. 152.

Procedure.—Not-cognizable—Warrant—Not-Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of were sentenced to transportation by the Court of Session of (or by the High Court of) for a term of and that on the day of at you did return from such transportation, the term of such transportation not having expired, and your punishment not having been remitted, and that you thereby committed, an offence punishable under section 226 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

227. Whoever, having accepted any conditional remission of punishment knowingly violates any condition on which such remission was granted, shall be punished with the punishment to which he was originally sentenced if he has already suffered no part of that punishment, and if he has suffered any part of that punishment, then with so much of that punishment as he has not already suffered.

Scope.—In a case under this section, it is necessary to prove the following : (1) that the accused person had been convicted and sentenced ; (2) that the accused person was granted a remission of punishment ; (3) the conditions on which the remission was granted ; (4) the fact that the accused is the person convicted, sentenced and granted remission ; (5) the fact that the accused has committed a breach of the condition of the remission. The first three requisites must be proved by documentary evidence such as a certified copy of the judgment, a certified copy of the order granting remission and a copy of the bond. The last two conditions may, however, be proved by oral evidence. Where the trying Magistrate allowed all the requirements to be proved by oral evidence but the accused had admitted all the facts, held, that it would be hyper-critical to interfere on the ground that documentary evidence had not been let in though properly speaking the accused should not be questioned at all until proper evidence of the fact was on record. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 278. There is nothing in s. 227 of the Penal Code or Burma Act III of 1928 to empower any Magistrate to pass a sentence in excess of that which he is empowered under the Criminal Procedure Code to pass. 228. Whoever intentionally offers any insult, or causes any interruption to any public servant, while such public servant is sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Charge.—1 (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at intentionally offered insult (or caused interruption) to wit to a public servant to wit while he was sitting in a stage of judicial proceeding to wit and you thereby committed an offence punishable under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

229. Whoever, by personation or otherwise shall intentionally cause Personation of juror of or knowingly suffer himself to be returned, assessor. empanelled, or, sworn as a jurymen or assessor in any case in which he knows that he is not entitled by law to be so returned, empanelled, or sworn, or, knowing himself to have been so returned, empanelled or sworn contrary to law, shall voluntarily serve on such jury or as such assessor, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—C was a farm-bailiff or manager, and resided at the farm. A summons to his employer to serve as a jurymen at the central criminal Court was delivered at the farm. C received it, and according to the evidence, was told by his employer, who was over sixty years of age, to go to the Court and get him excused from attendance. C went to the Court answered to the employer's name, and was sworn as a juror to try a case in the first Court. C was now indicted, the first Court charging that he personated a jurymen and the second Court charging him with taking false oath as a juror. Held, that it was not necessary in support of the indictment to prove that the defendant had any corrupt motive, or to prove that he had anything to gain by his conduct. It was no answer to the indictment to say that he did know that he was doing wrong. The words in the first Court "with intent to deceive" were ratified by proving that he did in fact commit the act the necessary consequence of which was to deceive the Court, and it was not necessary for the prosecution to prove that he had any specific intention to deceive other than that which was involved as the necessary consequence of the act which he did in going into the jury-box and taking the oath in the name of another man. It was a common law misdemeanour for any person to do that which the defendant did both as to the first and second Courts of the indictment and that without proof that he had any corrupt motive in his mind. R. v. Clark, 82 J. P. 295=26 Cox. 138.

CHAPTER XII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO COIN AND GOVERNMENT STAMPS.

230. Coin is metal used for the time being as money, and stamped and issued by the authority of some State or Sovereign power in order to be so used.

“Coin” defined. Queen’s coin is metal stamped and issued by the authority of the Queen, or by the authority of the Government of India or of the Government of any Presidency, or of any Government in the Queen’s dominions, in order to be used as money; and metal which has been so stamped and issued shall continue to be the Queen’s coin for the purposes of this chapter notwithstanding that it may have ceased to be used as money.

Illustrations.

- (a) Cowries are not coin.
- (b) Lumps of unstamped copper, though used as money, are not coin.
- (c) Medals are not coin, in as much as they are not intended to be used as money.
- (d) The coin denominated as the Company’s rupee is the Queen’s coin.
- (e) The ‘Farukhabad’ rupee, which was formerly used as money under the authority of the Government of India, is Queen’s coin, although it is not longer so used.

Legislative changes.—The first paragraph has been substituted by Act 19 of 1872 and the second paragraph by Act 6 of 1896. Illustration (e) has been added by Act 6 of 1896.

Scope of the chapter.—The offences comprised in this chapter, though very different in character, all agree in this, that the intention of the offender is to produce, or to pass off upon another, something which he professes to be what it really is not. Chapter XII of the Code deals with two sorts of money, viz, coin and the Queen’s coin, as defined by s. 230. and different degrees of penalties are in general applied to the same offence, when committed as regards the last sort.—Mayne’s Criminal Law s. 590.

Coin.—A gold mohor of the reign of Shahjahan cannot be deemed to be coin within the meaning of the section. 29 A. 141; see also A. W. N. 1882 100.

Queen’s coin.—Murshidabad rupees of the 19th year of Shah Alam formerly used with the sanction of the Government of British India for the time being as money are “Queen’s coins”.—1. P. R. 1903 Cr.=47 P. L. R. 1903; 21 A. 62=2 A. L. J. 498; A. W. N. 1903, 115. A coin may, still, be deemed to be a Queen’s coin even though it has ceased to be used as money, and it is used as an ornament by soldering a ring to it. A. I. R. 1926 All. 321=48A. 603=24 A. L. J. 842=27 Cr. L. J. 426=93 Ind. Cas. 154.

231. Whoever counterfeits, or knowingly performs any part of the process of counterfeiting coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A person commits this offence, who, intending to practise deception, or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised, causes a genuine coin to appear like a different coin.

Notes.—The offence of counterfeiting, or knowingly performing any part of the process of counterfeiting coin is punishable by ss. 231 and 232. The meaning of the word "counterfeit" has been explained by section 28. The offence consists in causing anything to resemble coined money for the purpose of deception. There are or may be many steps in the process of counterfeiting, during some of which the false money is not in a fit state to be issued as coin, and does not bear any resemblance to coin. But the punishment provided by this section applies equally whether the act of counterfeiting is complete or unfinished. To prove the offence of counterfeiting it is not necessary to shew that the accused person was detected in the act. But presumptive evidence, as in other cases, will be sufficient, as that false coin was found in his possession, and that there were coining tools discovered in his house, etc. In support of a charge of performing any part of the process of counterfeiting, it will not be sufficient merely to show that steps have been taken towards counterfeiting as by providing materials, tools, etc., but some stage of the process itself must be proved to have been commenced. The knowledge that the process is for the purpose of counterfeiting coin, and not for an innocent purpose may be shown by such presumptive evidence as is referred to above.—Morgan and Macpherson. The word "counterfeit" as used in this code, is defined by s. 28 to involve an intention, by means of that resemblance, to practise deception, or a knowledge that it is likely that deception will thereby be practised, and such an intention, or knowledge, will always be inferred from the mere fact of counterfeiting, unless under circumstances which conclusively negativate it. Such circumstances must be so rare that it is unnecessary to imagine instances. Mayne's Criminal Law s. 590. In order to constitute an offence under this section counterfeit coin need not be made with the primary intention of its being passed as genuine. It is sufficient if the resemblance be so close that it is capable of being passed as a genuine coin. 30 A. 93; 4 P. L. J. 525. To counterfeit a coin of the Emperor Akbar's time is no offence. 11 B. H. C. R. 172. But the coin need not be a current coin. 1 Weir 221; see also 5 N. W. P. 187. Copper coins issued from the mints of the Nawab of Loharu with a certain stamp impressed upon them, the stamp not resembling any legal coin, were held not to be counterfeit coins, as it was generally believed that Nawab had authority to establish the mints and issue the copper sent to him by merchants as coins. 33 P. R. 1870 Cr. The thing charged to be counterfeit coin must have some such resemblance to a piece of the genuine coin as to show that it was intended to resemble and pass for it, though the imitation may be imperfect or the process incomplete. 1 Weir, 219.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you , on or about the day of at , counterfeited (or knowingly performed a part of the process of the counterfeiting coin) a and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 231 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said court on the said charge.

232. Whoever counterfeits, or knowingly performs any part of the process of counterfeiting, the Queen's coin, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—When the coin counterfeited is the Queen's coin, that is coin issued by the Indian Government, English coin, or the coin of a British Colony, or of any other part of the British Dominions the punishment of the offence is made heavier than when the coin is of any other description.—Morgan and Macpherson. To remove the ring from a coin used to form a part of necklace and to work up the face of the coin where the ring was is no offence. 33 A. 420. To constitute the offence described in this section there must be, an intention that the coins made, will be used as Queen's coins or a knowledge that they are likely to be used as such. A deception practised for show merely, and not for wrongful loss or gain, is not an offence under the Indian Penal Code. 26 P. R. 1868 Cr. In an offence under this section direct proof of fabrication is not necessary. All that is required is a guilty knowledge of the spuriousness of the coin at the time of receiving possession of such coin, or the absence of such guilty knowledge at first. Such guilty knowledge may be proved either directly or indirectly from surrounding circumstances. 23 W. R. Cr. 4. Charges of possessing instruments for counterfeiting and of counterfeiting are not two offences as the possession of such implements and materials is part and parcel of the transaction of counterfeiting coin. Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

233. Whoever makes or mends, or performs any part of the process of making or mending, or buys, sells, or disposes of, any die or instrument, for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for the purpose of counterfeiting coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—When the instrument is a die, by which the metal is marked so as to resemble a coin and the act of counterfeiting is completed, or any other instrument appearing by a mark on the face of it to be fit for coining, there can be little doubt of the knowledge of the guilty purpose for which it is intended. But supposing the instrument to be one which is used in other trades, as the essence of the offence is the guilty knowledge of the purpose for which it is intended, the prosecutor should prove that the act of making or mending, etc., was done with such knowledge.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of , at , did make (or mend or perform any part of the process of making or mending to wit , or buy or sell, or dispose of) a certain die (or instrument) for the purpose of being used (or knowing or having reason to believe that it was intended to be used) for counterfeiting coin, to wit , and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 233 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance (or cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court.)

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

234. Whoever makes or mends, or performs any part of the process of making or mending, or buys, sells, or disposes of, any die or instrument, for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for the purpose of counterfeiting the Queen's coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The offence relates to the Queen's coin and is therefore more severely punished.—Morgan and Macpherson. This section corresponds to s. 24, of State, 24 & 25 Vict. C. 99. A guilty intention to use the dies is not necessary. R. v. Harvey, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 284. Where a die calculated to make shillings is made by an innocent agent the party procuring him to make such die is the principal. R. v. Bannen, 2 Mood. 309.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

235. Whoever is in possession of any instrument or material, for the purpose of using the same for counterfeiting coin, or knowing or having reason to believe that the same is intended to be used for that purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine ; and if the coin to be counterfeited is the Queen's coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—For a conviction under this section it is not only necessary that the accused should be in possession of the instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin but it should also be proved that the possession was within the accused's knowledge. 16 Cr. L. J. 264. When the offence consists in the possession of moulds, the prosecution is bound to adduce evidence to show that the moulds are capable of producing counterfeit coin. 1 Weir, 219. The possession contemplated is not possession which has never been voluntary. 6 Bom. L. R. 817. In order to convict a person under this section, instruments for counterfeiting coin must be in the exclusive possession of the accused. 7 P. L. R. 1904=4 Cr. L. J. 40. In order to constitute offences under this section, it is not necessary to prove that the accused intended that the spurious coin should go into circulation and be used as money. It is sufficient that there should be intention to practise deception by means of the imitation. 4 P. R. 1899 Cr. Where a person, who is passing counterfeit Queen's coin was, on being chased, found in possession of instruments or metals used for counterfeiting coin, held, that he should be convicted under s. 235, and not under s. 240, as the latter section did not apply to the actual coins. 10 P. R. 1892 Cr. Where there are moulds apparently capable of turning out the counterfeit coins there can hardly be any doubt that the moulds were used for preparing the counterfeit coin. 4 Pat. L. J. 525. Where the accused was convicted of and sentenced for an offence under s. 232 I. P. Code that is to say, for counterfeiting coin and on a second count for having in his possession implements and materials for the purpose of using the same for counterfeiting King's coin under s. 235 I. P. Code, held, that the possession of such implements and materials being part and parcel of the transaction of counterfeiting coin the sentence for the second offence was illegal. 5 Lah. L. J. 272=71 Ind. Cas. 700=24 Cr. L. J. 236. The mere possession of instruments and materials capable of counterfeiting coins is no offence. The possession of such instruments must be shown to have been with the intention of counterfeiting coins. Such intention is essential to sustain a charge under s. 235 I. P. Code. The mere possession of dies incapable of striking a complete coin does not necessarily lead to the inference that the accused intended to manufacture coins. 5 Lah. 392=1925 Lah. 22=84 Ind. Cas. 247. When the articles are found in the possession of the members of the joint family, the managing member is presumed to be in possession. A. I. R. 1919 Pat. 220=4 Pat. L. J. 525=20 Cr. L. J. 439=51 Ind. Cas. 263; see also A. I. R. 1933 Pat. 272=14 P. L. T. 256=1933 Cr. C. 738. An accused cannot be convicted when the articles are found in a room where the accused and another man with his wife lives. A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 39. A lenient sentence should not be passed for an offence under s. 235 of the Penal Code. 28 Cr. L. J. 305=100 Ind. Cas. 529=A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 22. Men possessing instruments for counterfeiting coin, should not be separately punished for possessing various parts of such instruments. A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 51.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class if the offence affect Queen's coin in that case triable, only by Court of Session.

236. Whoever, being within British India, abets the counterfeiting of coin out of British India, shall be punished in the same manner as if he abetted the counterfeiting of such coin within British India.

Notes.—Of the several modes of abetment, abetment by aid seems most likely to occur in this case. Any person in India, whether a subject or a foreigner, supplying instruments or materials to persons elsewhere for the purpose of counterfeiting any coin is punishable. Whether the coin is Queen's coin, or is a coin, which though current in some parts of India (as the Spanish Dollar) is not a coin coming under the description of Queen's coin, or is a foreign coin not current in India the abetment of the counterfeiting it is punishable under this section.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

237. Whoever imports into British India, or exports therefrom, any counterfeit coin, knowing or having reason to believe that the same is counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first Class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at , imported into (or exported from British India, certain pieces of coin, knowing (or having reason to believe) that the same were counterfeit, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said court on the said charge.

238. Whoever imports into British India, or exports therefrom, any counterfeit coin which he knows or has reason to believe, to be a counterfeit of the Queen's coin, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The offence in this and the proceeding section consists in an import or export, whether by sea or by land, of any coin known by the importer, etc., or which he has reason to believe, to be counterfeit. The same evidence which would show that an importer had reason for such a belief would, it seems, also prove a guilty knowledge on his part—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

239. Whoever, having any counterfeit coin, which at the time when he became possessed of it, he knew to be counterfeit, fraudulently, or with intent that fraud may be committed, delivers the same to any person, or attempts to induce any person to receive it, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The offence for which punishment is provided by this section is not the offence committed by the coiner. 3 N. W. P. 150.

The Code distinguishes between two different classes of utterers. A utterer by profession, who is the agent employed by the coiner to bring counterfeit coin into circulation, is guilty of a very high offence. Such an utterer stands to the coiner in a relation not very different from that in which a habitual receiver of stolen goods stands to a thief. He makes coining a far less perilous and far more lucrative pursuit than it would otherwise be. He passes his life in the systematic violation of the law, and in the systematic practice of fraud in one of its most pernicious forms. He is one of the most mischievous, and is likely to be one of the most depraved of criminals. But a casual utterer, an utterer who is not an agent for bringing counterfeit coin into circulation, but who having heedlessly received a bad rupee in the course of business, takes advantage of the heedlessness of the next person with whom he deals to pay that bad rupee away, is an offender of a very different class. He is undoubtedly guilty of a dishonest act, but of one of the most venial of dishonest acts. It is an act which proceeds not from greediness for unlawful gain but from a wish to avoid, by unlawful means it is true, what to a poor man may be a severe loss. It is an act which has no tendency to facilitate or encourage the operations of the coiner. It is an occasional act ; an act which does not imply that the person who commits it is a person of lawless habits. This section is directed against the professional dealers in false coin. Their receipt of the false coin knowing at the time they received it that it was counterfeit, is made the test of their being such dealers. The offence contemplated in this section appears to be a delivery or attempt to deliver by such a dealer to some person whether an accomplice or not,—the intention being that that person, or some other, should be defrauded—Morgan and Macpherson. The offence for which punishment is provided by this section is not the offence committed by the coiner. The words "which at the time when he became possessed of it knew to be counterfeit" point to a person who possesses or often receives counterfeit coin. It is against such a person that the section is directed. 3 N. W. P. 150. Under this section previous attempts to dispose of counterfeit coins is relevant. 8 B 223; see also 8 C. W. N. 717. An accused found in possession of coins, counterfeit of Indore and Bhopal coins, was held to be rightly convicted under section 239, Penal Code, the coin being used as money in the Hoshangabad District. Colm. Dig. Cr. 25 of 1875. An accused, who in imitation of obsolete coins "not now used as money" supplied the public with ornaments found to suit the prevailing fashion using good silver and gold for the purpose, and who carried on an apparently honest business cannot be convicted under s. 239, Penal Code. Colm. Dig. Cr. 39 of 1875. Where the accused, gold smiths, being in possession of counterfeit pagodas, delivered them to the complainants as security for the due performance of a contract, held, that it was not necessary, for the purpose of constituting an offence under section 239, that the pagodas should be current coin. 1 Weir 221.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

240. Whoever, having any counterfeit coin which is a counterfeit of the Queen's coin, and which, at the time when he became possessed of it, he knew to be a counterfeit of the Queen's coin, fraudulently or with intent that fraud may be committed, delivers the same to any person, or attempts to induce any person to receive it, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—A heavier punishment is here given because the offence relates to Queen's coins—Morgan and Macpherson. Knowledge on the part of the accused, that the coin was counterfeit, when they first came to possess it, is an element of the offence as defined in this section. 1 Weir, 222; 31 P. L. R. 235=31 Cr. L. J. 736=124 Ind. Cas. 688 offences punishable under ss. 239 and 240 are separate and distinct offences and double convictions and consecutive sentences are proper. 146 Ind. Cas. 7=A. I. R. 1933 Pesh. 99. Joint trial of three persons charged under ss. 240, 243, and 240/243 109 respectively is illegal. 146 Ind. Cas. 261=1933 Cr. C. 348=A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 228.

An actual coiner cannot be punished under this section. 10 P. R. 1892.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

241. Whoever delivers to any other person as genuine, or attempts to induce any other person to receive as genuine, any counterfeit coin which he knows to be counterfeit, but which he did not know to be counterfeit at the time when he took it into his possession, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine to an amount which may extend to ten times the value of the coin counterfeited, or with both.

Illustration.

A, a coiner delivers counterfeit Company's rupees to his accomplice B, for the purpose of uttering them. B sells the rupees to C, another utterer, who buys them knowing them to be counterfeit. C pays away the rupees for goods to D, who receives them, not knowing them to be counterfeit. D, after receiving the rupees, discovers that they are counterfeit, and pays them away as if they were good. Here D is punishable only under this section, but B and C are punishable under section 239 or 240, as the case may be.

Knowledge.—To constitute an offence under this section, there must be evidence that the accused knew the coins to be counterfeit. 5 C. P. L. R. 5.

The gist of an offence under this section is that a person should deliver to another person as genuine, or attempt to induce another person to receive as genuine, any counterfeit coin which he knows to be counterfeit but which he did not know to be counterfeit at the time when he took it into his possession. 4 N. W. P. 62; see also 12 Cr. L. J. 79.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate etc.) hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of , at delivered to A B (or attempted to induce A B to receive) as genuine which is a counterfeit coin and which knew to be counterfeit although you did not know it to be counterfeit when you took it into your possession, and thereby you have committed an offence punishable under s. 241 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

242. Whoever, fraudulently or with intent that fraud may be committed, is in possession of counterfeit coin, having known at the time when he became possessed thereof that such coin was counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Scope.—The mere possession of counterfeit coin is an offence under ss. 242 and 243, even though no attempt is made to pass it off, provided it can be shown that it was kept for a fraudulent purpose, and was originally obtained with a guilty knowledge. The mere fact of a single base coin being found in a party's possession would not, without further evidence be sufficient to create a presumption that he knew it to be counterfeit when he obtained it and intended to make a fraudulent use of it. But where a considerable number of base coins is found in any man's possession, the presumption of guilt would be sufficient to make a conviction lawful, unless the possession could in some manner be explained or accounted for.—Mayne's Criminal law, 3rd Edition pp. 811=812.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

243. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent that fraud may be committed, is in possession of counterfeit coin, which is a counterfeit of the Queen's coin having known at the time when he became possessed of it that it was counterfeit, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The offence in this and the preceding section, is the possession of counterfeit coin (with intent to defraud) by a person who from his knowledge at the time when he became possessed of it, may be presumed to be a professional utterer. These sections are not intended to apply to the case of a possession by another person who can show that, although he received coin knowing it to be counterfeit, the receipt was for no guilty purpose,—as if he shows that it was for the purpose of testing the coin, or of destroying it, or for safe custody until required to be produced in a Court of Justice etc.—Morgan and Macpherson. Before a conviction can be had under this section, the prosecution must prove that the accused knew that the coin was counterfeit at the time he became possessed of it. The evidence of course, may be direct or presumptive. 12 Cr. L. J. 79=9 Ind. Cas. 449; 44 C. 477 (F. B.) Where there is nothing to show that a person charged under s. 243 of the Penal Code was in possession of counterfeit coins fraudulently or with intent that fraud may be committed, or that he knew when he became possessed of them, that they are counterfeit, the requisition of s. 243 are not fulfilled. 69 P. L. R. 1902=7 P. R. 1902 Cr. ; see also 44 C. 477=21 C. W. N. 33=28 C. L. J. 400; 6 Bom. L. R. 887=1 Cr. L. J. 960. Where pieces of silver of size of rupee and some counterfeit rupees of same year are found concealed in a room in accused's possession, the presumption is of guilt of offence under s. 243. 143 Ind. Cas. 152=9 O. W. N. 1198=1933 Cr. C. 113=34 Cr. L. J. 545=A. I. R. 1933 Oudh. 85.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

244. Whoever, being employed in any mint lawfully established in British India, does any act, or omits what he is legally bound to do, with the intention of causing any coin issued from that mint to be of a different weight or composition from the weight or composition fixed by law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The law has fixed the weight and composition of various coins and has declared in what case they shall be a legal tender. The object of this section is to secure the purity of the coinage and its correct conformity to the legal standard against the act or omission of persons employed in mints. The proof must be that the person is employed in a Government mint, and that the act or omission which is the subject of the charge was intended to cause the coin there made or issued to vary from the fixed standard. It is not part of the definition, and therefore it will be no necessary part of the proof, that any wrongful gain should accrue to the person charged, or that loss should be caused to the Government or the public.—Morgan and Macpherson. An accused person legally arrested must submit to be tried and dealt with according to law. If he gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, he commits the offence of escaping from lawful custody under s. 244 I. P. Code. It would be an offence to escape from lawful custody before the trial, just as it would be an offence to escape from lawful custody after conviction. Thus it would be an offence to escape after a person has been lawfully arrested on a charge of having committed an offence, though he may not be subsequently convicted of such offence. The words "for any such offence" in s. 244 I. P. Code mean for any offence with which a person is charged or of which he has been convicted. The word "charged" in that section is used in the popular sense as implying inculpation of an alleged offence as distinguished from a charge formulated after trial. 28 Bom. L. R. 168=100 Ind. Cas. 988=28 Cr. L. J. 380=A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 96.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

245. Whoever, without lawful authority, takes out of any mint, lawfully established in British India, any coining tool or instrument, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Suppose the instrument to be one used in an ordinary trade; the taking may be for an innocent use in such trade. The substance of this offence consists in taking a coining tool for the purpose of using it to make counterfeit coin. If the instrument appears on its face to be intended for the purpose of making coin and it is taken without lawful authority the inference is strong that the taker means to use it improperly.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session

Charge.—I (Name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of , at without lawful authority, took out of the mint of which is lawfully established in British India a certain coining tool (or instrument), to wit ; and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 245 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said court on the said charge.

246. Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly performs on any coin any operation which diminishes the weight or alters the composition of that coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Fraudulently or dishonestly diminishing weight or altering composition of coin.

Explanation.—A person who scoops out part of the coin, and puts anything else into the cavity, alters the composition of that coin.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

247. Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly performs on any of the Queen's coin any operation which diminishes the weight or alters the composition of that coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The coin made lighter, or its composition altered, 'fraudulently' or 'dishonestly'. The act of debasing, or lightening the weight, if not shown by direct evidence, may be proved by circumstances,—as by showing that the accused person had in his possession debased coin or filed coin. The intention to use it for a fraudulent purpose may be inferred from his possession of it, if the coin be found on his person. A more severe punishment is awarded when the offence concerns Queen's coin—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

248. Whoever, performs on any coin any operation which alters the appearance of that coin, with the intention that the said coin shall pass as a coin of a different description shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

249. Whoever performs on any of the Queen's coin any operation which alters the appearance of that coin, with the intention that the said coin shall pass as a coin of a different description, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The operation, whether of gilding, or silvering, or washing, etc., must, it seems, be of such a kind, and so far completed, that the coin which is subject to it, is actually altered in appearance. The evidence must show such an alteration, coupled with an intention that the altered coin shall pass as a coin of a different description. It will be observed that the words "fraudulently" and "dishonestly" are not used. The offence is therefore complete though no fraudulent purpose can be proved. And it does not seem necessary to show that there is in fact a description of coin at all resembling or corresponding to the altered coin. The act of altering may be proved by evidence that coin so gilded, etc., was found in the prisoner's house or had been procured there, and that the wash or necessary materials were discovered in his possession.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not—bailable—Not—Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

250. Whoever, having coin in his possession with respect to which the offence defined in section 246 or 248 has been committed, and having known at the time when he became possessed of such coin that such offence had been committed with respect to it, fraudulently, or with intent that fraud may be committed, delivers such coin to any other person or attempts to induce to any other person to receive the same shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—This section is intended to punish persons who are traders in debased or altered coin.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

251 Whoever having coin in his possession with respect to which the offence defined in section 247 or 249 has been committed, and having known at the time when he became possessed of such coin that such offence had been committed with respect to it, fraudulently or with intent that fraud may be committed, delivers such coin to any other person or attempts, to induce any other person to receive the same, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment.—The section does not require that a sentence of fine as well as of imprisonment should be awarded. The former sentence is optional. 1 Weir, 223.

Notes.—If an accused person clips and cuts away a coin and makes up the deficient weight by solder with the intention of subsequently delivering it to a bank, he is certainly guilty of fraudulently defacing a coin even though on a previous occasion they had been used as a wearing ornament. 48 A. 603=27 Cr. L. J. 426=1926 All. 321.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

252. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent that fraud may be committed, is in possession of coin with respect to which the offence defined in either of the sections, 246 or 248 has been committed, having known at the time of becoming possessed thereof that such offence had been committed with respect to such coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-Compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

253. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent that fraud may be committed, is in possession of coin with respect to which the offence defined in either of the sections 247 or 249 has been committed, having known at the time of becoming possessed thereof that such offence had been committed with respect to such coin, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to five years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—The mere possession of debased or altered coin by the professional dealer in such coin is hereby made punishable, although not dealing with it by delivering to others, etc, can be shown. The intention that the coin shall be used for the purpose of defrauding others is part of the definition. Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

254. Whoever delivers to any other person as genuine, or as a coin of a different description from what it is, or attempts to induce any person to receive as genuine, or as a different coin from what it is, any coin in respect of which he knows that any such operation as that mentioned in sections 246, 247, 248, or 249, has been performed, but in respect of which he did not, at the time when he took it into his possession, knows that such operation had been performed, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years or with fine to an amount which may extend to ten times the value of the coin for which the altered coin is passed, or attempted to be passed.

Notes.—The person punished is he who, not being a dealer in debased or altered coin, but having such coin in his possession, passes it off, or attempts to pass it off to others. By Act III of 1906, coins of certain denominations are made legal tenders provided they have not been diminished below a certain weight. It will be observed that the Code does not make the circulation by innocent holders of coin which has been debased or reduced below its proper weight an offence, when those holders are unaware that it has been so debased or reduced. It is an offence to pass such coin only when the person passing it knows that it has been diminished or altered by one of the operations which previous sections have made punishable.—Morgan and Macpherson.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Sessions, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

The remaining sections of this chapter provide for the punishment of offences relating to certain Government stamps. The stamps protected by these provisions seem to have little in common with coin, except that both may be said to be stamped and issued by the authority of Government. These stamps are in truth nothing more than impressions upon paper, parchment, or any material used for writing, made by Government or its officers, for the purpose of revenue, or in payment for service rendered. To avoid ambiguity for the use the word "stamp" it should be observed that it is used throughout the following sections to designate, not the instrument by which a particular impression is made, nor the paper or other material upon which it is made, but the impression itself—the mark set upon the paper or other material. The Government stamps to which those sections relate, being stamps from which the Government derives a revenue, or which are issued for revenue purposes are quite distinct from stamps used by Government for other purposes, as stamps affixed to or impressed on property, denoting that it belongs to the Government.—Morgan and Macpherson.

255. Whoever counterfeits, or knowingly performs any part of the process of counterfeiting, any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, shall be punished with transportation for life or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A person commits this offence who counterfeits by causing a genuine stamp of one denomination to appear like a genuine stamp of a different denomination.

Performs any part of the process.—The impression and not the die is meant. It seems that some part of this impression must be, if not completed, yet sufficiently complete to shew the intention.—Morgan and Macpherson. The passing off of an one anna stamp as one rupee stamp, is not counterfeiting an one rupee stamp. 2 W. R. 65. The expression "forged stamp" in section 13 of the English Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891, includes a forged stamp which bears a cancellation mark. R. v. Lowden, (1919) 1 K. B. 144=83 L. J. K. B. 114. In an offence under this section, "an exact resemblance or facsimilies is not required to constitute the crime of forgery; for if there be a sufficient resemblance to shew that a false making was intended and that the false stamp is so made as to have an aptitude to deceive, that is sufficient." R. v. Collicott, 2 Leach. 1044=4 Taunnt. 300.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable—by Court of Session.

Charge.—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) do hereby charge you (name of the accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at counterfeited (or knowingly performed any part of the process of counterfeiting, to wit.) a certain stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, to wit and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 255 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court).

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

256. Whoever has in his possession any instrument or material for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for the purpose of counterfeiting any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Notes.—Here the punishment is directed to the offence of attempting or preparing to counterfeit. The possession of an instrument by which the counterfeit stamp impression is made, with a criminal intention, or even the possession of any material with the like intent is punished. Morgan and Macpherson.

Instrument.—It may denote a die or similar instrument, the mere possession of which, if not satisfactorily accounted for, may prove an intention to use it for the purpose of counterfeiting—Ibid. "The proprietor of a newspaper which circulated amongst stamp collectors had in his possession a die, which he had ordered to be made for him abroad. From this die representations of a current Cape of Good Hope postage stamp could be produced. The only purpose for which he had ordered, or had in his possession, the die, was for making upon the pages of an illustrated stamp catalogue, or newspaper, illustrations in black and white, and not in colours, of the stamp in question; such catalogues were intended for sale only to stamp collectors and others as part of the newspaper. Upon a special case the Court held that the possession of the die for making a false stamp known to be such to its possessor, was, however innocent the use that he intended to make of it, a possession without lawful excuse within section 7 (c) of the Post Office Protection Act 1884" Russ Cr. p. 1716 Citing, Dickens v. Gill, (1896) 2 Q. B. 310.

Material for etc.—May include the paper on which (or some one) of the ingredients (in a more or less forward state of preparation) whereby the impression is made. The possession of such materials can of course be punishable under this clause only where the criminal purpose is established to the satisfaction of the Court—Morgan and Macpherson.

257. Whoever makes; or performs any part of the process of making, or buys, or sells, or disposes of, any instrument for the purpose of being used, or knowing or having reason to believe that it is intended to be used, for the purpose of counterfeiting any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session.

258. Whoever sells, or offers for sale, any stamp which he knows or has reason to believe to be a counterfeit of any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of session.

259. Whoever has in his possession any stamp which he knows to be a counterfeit of any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, intending to use, or dispose of the same as a genuine stamp, or in order that it may be used as a genuine stamp, shall be punished, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Not-bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

260. Whoever uses as genuine any stamp, knowing it to be a counterfeit of any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Notes.—Alteration of used stamps so as to resemble genuine unused stamps amounts to counterfeiting within section 28 of the Indian Penal Code and the stamp-vendor who does so is guilty of an offence under s. 200 I. P. Code. 60 Ind. Cas. 785=22 Cr. L. J. 289.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

261. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent to cause loss to the Government, removes or effaces from any substance bearing any stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, any writing or document for which such stamp has been used, or removes from any writing or document, a stamp which has been used for such writing or document in order that such stamp may be used for a different writing or document, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

262. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent to cause loss to the Government, uses for any purpose a stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, which he knows to have been before used, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Gist of the offence.—It is incumbent on the prosecution, where, the person is charged under this section, to bring home to him, not only that he used the stamp with the knowledge that it had been before used, but also that he used it fraudulently or with intent to cause loss to the Government. The intent to defraud or to cause such loss cannot be assumed. A. W. N. 1881, 56; Rat. Un. Cr. C. 145. The provisions of s. 37 of Act XIV of 1866, enacts that postage stamps shall be considered as stamps issued by the Government for the purpose of revenue within the meaning of the Penal Code. Hence, though an accused may have been ignorant of the law, he must have known that using a stamp twice was defrauding the Government and may therefore, be rightly convicted under this section. 5 C. P. L. R. Cr. 43.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class.

263. Whoever fraudulently, or with intent to cause loss to Government, erases or removes from a stamp issued by Government for the purpose of revenue, any mark, put or impressed upon such stamp for the purpose of denoting that the same has been used or knowingly has in his possession, or sells or disposes of, any such stamp from which such mark has been erased or removed, or sells or disposes of any such stamp which he knows to have been used, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

Prohibition of fictitious stamps.

263A. (1) Whoever—

(a) makes, knowingly utters, deals in, or sells any fictitious stamp, or knowingly uses for any postal purpose any fictitious stamp, or
 (b) has in his possession, without lawful excuse, any fictitious stamp, or
 (c) makes, or, without lawful excuse, has in his possession any die, plate, instrument, or materials for making any fictitious stamp, shall be punished with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

(2) Any such stamp, die, plate, instrument or materials in the possession of any person for making any fictitious stamp, may be seized, and shall be forfeited.

(3) In this section "fictitious stamp" means any stamp falsely purporting to be issued by Government for the purpose of denoting a rate of postage, or any facsimile or imitation or representation, whether on paper or otherwise, of any stamp issued by Government for that purpose.

(4) In this section and also in section 255 to 263 (both inclusive), the word "Government," when used in connection with, or in reference to, any stamp issued for the purpose of denoting a rate of postage, shall, notwithstanding anything in section 17, be deemed to include the person or persons authorized by law to administer executive government in any part of India, and also in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or in any foreign country.

Legislative changes.—Section 263A has been added by Act III of 1895 s. 2.

Procedure.—Cognizable—Warrant—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

264. Whoever fraudulently uses any instrument for weighing which he Fraudulent use of false instrument for weighing.

knows to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Scope of the chapter.—The offences punishable by this chapter are not defined with reference to any precise standard of weight or measure established by law. A false weight or measure here signifies that—taking the law or the ordinary usage of the place, or the common understanding of the parties to have fixed on a certain known instrument of weight or measure, with reference to which two persons deal together—the false dealer by deceit substitutes another weight or measure, in order to defraud. The intention to defraud, or that the false weight or measure shall be used by other persons in order to defraud, is an essential part of the offence. The balance or scales, weights, etc, used may be and are probably often of the rudest construction. When their defects are visible to a purchaser, and there is no attempt to conceal them, there can be no reason for imputing an intention to defraud. On the other hand, the use of a false balance artfully contrived to elude detection, carries with it a strong presumption that it is used in order to defraud.—Morgan and Macpherson. The section relating to weights make no mention of standard weights. In every place there are well known customary weights and if any resident of the place or other person, knowing that a weight is less than the customary weight which it purports to be, uses the weight dishonestly he commits a fraud and may be punished under this chapter. L. B. R. (1893-1900) 354. Intention is an essential part of the offence. 18 W. R. Cr. 7.

Procedure.—Non-cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class and is triable summarily.

Charge—I (name and office of Magistrate, etc.) hereby charge you (name of accused) as follows :—

That you on or about the day of at fraudulently used a certain instrument for weighing, to wit knowing the same to be false at the time of using it, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 264 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.

And I hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge.

Intent.—Where the accused was charged under this section, with fraudulently using a false weight, the weight being a five seer weight and being one tola or one rupee short held, that the weight in question could not be regarded as a false weight in the sense of this section.—A. W. N. 1883, 224.

265. Whoever fraudulently uses any false weight or false measure of length or capacity, or fraudulently uses any weight or any measure of length or capacity, as a different weight or measure from what it is, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine or with both.

Notes.—Where no standard is prescribed, it is clear that no presumption of fraud can arise, and a conviction under this section cannot be sustained. U. B. R. 1908. 3rd Qr. Penal Code 17=9 Cr. L. J. 415. A conviction under this section cannot be maintained where there is no complaint by a purchaser. 38 P. W. R. 1908 Cr.=9 Cr. L. J. 4. No offence committed where the weights have been used openly and ignorantly. 1 Weir, 233. Where an accused person, a butter, milk seller sells butter, milk by means of an unstamped measure, a conviction under this section is not maintainable unless the evidence discloses fraud or falsity of the measure. 1 Weir, 223. To ascertain whether a measure is false or not, the only proper test to apply is that of measure, and the same article must be measured in each case and proof should be adduced that this has been done. The weight of the grain that a measure is found to hold is no evidence of its capacity as compared with that of another measure, unless the very same grain is used. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 989. Selling liquor in a glass which is not of prescribed measure is not an offence under this section. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 386. Seller must take proper care to see that the weights are free from defect. 1 Weir, 265. It is the duty of the prosecution, in the case of a charge under s. 265 of the Penal Code to have some evidence to prove that the accused knew the measure to be incorrect when he got it or that, before he used it, he tampered with it; if there is no evidence on these points, the Court should not presume fraudulent intention on the part of the accused so as to convict them under this section. 116 Ind. Cas. 671=30 Cr. L. J. 692=A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 239=1929 Cr. C. 263.

Procedure.—Not-Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class and is triable summarily.

266. Whoever is in possession of any instrument for weighing, or of any weight, or of any measure of length or capacity, which he knows to be false, and intending that the same may be fraudulently used, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Fraudulent Intention.—A fraudulent charge should be charged and proved. 1 B. H. C. Cr. 181. As in the case of a false coin, a weighty circumstance of suspicion is by the section made part of the definition of an offence. It is the intention that the false instrument shall be used to defraud, that is material. The proof of such intention must as in other cases, be made out to the satisfaction of the Court. The mere possession of the false instrument, if such possession cannot be satisfactorily explained and accounted for, is sufficient ground for presuming an intention to use it fraudulently.—Morgan and Macpherson. A person who represents himself, as using a measure of a particular standard, is bound to see that the measure he uses is correct according to that standard. 1 Weir, 225. To support a conviction under this section, it is not enough to prove the mere possession of scales or their use, with a string not accurately tied at the centre of the beam, but which can be sifted at any time and may some times have been accurately tied. It is necessary to prove that the accused knew the scales to be false and intended to use them fraudulently. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 514=Cr. Rg. 36. of 1890. A necessary ingredient of an offence under this section is fraudulent intent. 15 A. L. J. 897=40A. 84=19 Cr. L. J. 145=43 Ind. Cas. 433. So where both purchaser and seller are aware of the actual measure used there can be no question of fraudulent intent. Ibid. Under this section it must be proved that the accused knew the measure to be false and he intended to use it fraudulently. 11 Mys. L. J. 291.

Procedure.—Non-Cognizable—Summons—Bailable—Not-compoundable—
Triable by Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first or second class and is triable summarily.

267. Whoever makes, sells or disposes of any instruments for weighing, or Making, or selling false any weight, or any measure of length or capacity, weight or measure. which he knows to be false, in order that the same may be used as true, or knowing that the same is likely to be used as true, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF OFFENCES AFFECTING THE PUBLIC HEALTH, SAFETY, CONVENIENCE, DECENCY, AND MORALS.

268. A person is guilty of a public nuisance, who does any act, or is guilty Public nuisance. of an illegal omission, which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger, or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right.

A common nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage.

Encroachment on street.—An encroachment by a private person building over a part of a public street is a "public nuisance" within the meaning of this section. 7 M. L. J. 95; but see 1 Weir, 252. Vitiating the atmosphere so as to make it noxious to health is an offence under this section. 1 Weir, 242. Where a person obstructs the whole width of high way the public has a right to pass over, he can be convicted of an offence under section 268 punishable under s. 290 of the Penal Code. 1 Weir, 232.

An obstruction to a tidal navigable river by placing a bamboo dam across the river for the purpose of fishing, although leaving a narrow opening for the passage of boats, but kept closed otherwise, is a public nuisance under section 268 of the Code. 14 C 656.

An act or omission causing injury which affects only the owners of one property, but not a number of persons will not amount to a public nuisance. 1 Weir, 29.

The making of boras, or enclosures, on shamilat land comprised in the goora of the village is not punishable under section 268, without proof that such boras are a public nuisance. In order to constitute a public nuisance, the particular way in which the obstruction has been caused must be definitely proved. 8 P. R. 1896 Cr.

Where the lambardars who were used to make sanitary arrangements on the occasion of the holding of a fair at a certain village, were found to have omitted to make the arrangement on a certain year, held, that they could not be convicted of an offence under s. 268 I. P. Code. 11 P. R. 1875 Cr.

Where the use of premises gives rise to "public nuisance" it is, generally the occupier for the time being who is liable for it, and not the absent proprietor. 46 C. 515.

If any portion however small, of a public street is encroached upon the inevitable result must be to cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use the highway, for the public is entitled to use every such of road that has been dedicated to the public. Hence the person who makes the encroachment is liable. 6 Lah. 203=86 Ind. Cas. 1006=26 Cr. L. J. 942=26 P. L. R. 127=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 414. Allowing a prickly pear to spread on to a road used by the public is a public nuisance within the meaning of s. 268. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1235=55 M. L. J. 715=28 L. W. 621. A public officer's right to prosecute as a member of the public is not taken away because he did not profess to complain as an ordinary person but as a public officer. Ibid. Slaughtering of cattle in a village in a particular area surrounded by walls is not necessarily a public nuisance. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 252=30 Cr. L. J. 660=116 Ind. Cas. 705. Obstruction of a natural channel resulting in inundation of large areas in several villages is a public nuisance. A. I. R. 1927 Oudh. 122=4 O. W. N. 75=28 Cr. L. J. 203=99 Ind. Cas. 939. Unless there is public nuisance Hindus have unrestricted right of worship in temples. A. I. R. 193 All. 674=53 A. 836=1931 A. L. J. 624=137 Ind. Cas. 587. Annoyance caused to religious ideas by innocent acts of others is not nuisance. Ibid.

Scope.—“To constitute a public nuisance there must be some act or illegal omission, injurious, dangerous, or annoying, not merely to an individual or a small number of persons, but to the public at large or to some class of the public,—such as the neighbouring community, or those who dwell or occupy property near the place. There are many things, which may be nuisances and are offences when done in populous places, although they are either innocent or not deemed deserving of punishment when done in a retired locality. Suppose a house in the country is used for the purpose of carrying on a dangerous trade, or one which renders the air unwholesome or disagreeable to the senses ;—or suppose a private way leading to a house is obstructed or made dangerous.—the injury or annoyance, if it affects only the residents of two or three other houses, will not necessarily make this a public nuisance.

“It is not easy to say how many persons must suffer, or be in danger of suffering, to make a nuisance public or common. But it seems the thing done, though the general public need not be actually injured by it, must be of a nature to produce injury, annoyance, etc. to all and must do so in fact to all who are in the particular locality or otherwise within the influence of the act. He who indecently exposes his person to a single individual, though it be in a public place, yet not within public view, is not punishable for a nuisance. But if the exposure were to several, or if many could have seen it, being public, if they had looked, the offence here defined would be committed. The nuisance may be caused by doing a thing which is injurious or annoying, or by neglecting to do that which the public health or safety requires to be done, for example, by keeping a house, etc. in a filthy state, neglecting ordinary precautions, during repairs, etc. In the latter case the omission must be “illegal.” See also 21 A. L. J. 772.

“The following are instances of public nuisances : obstructions of highways, navigable rivers, and the like injuries to such ways and places ; neglect or refusal by those whose duty it is so to do, to keep them in repair ; the carrying on, in populous localities or near a high way, of trades or occupations injurious to health or comfort, making great noises to the disturbance, to the neighbourhood ; keeping large quantities of gun powder in populous places to the danger of the public safety ; and other acts of a similar tendency.”

“The latter clause of the definition seems to comprehend such nuisances as obstruction to public roads navigable rivers, etc. In such nuisances it does not seem to be essential to show actual injury or annoyance etc., to persons who use the road. It is sufficient if the obstruction is calculated to injure all who may choose and have a right to use the way. And the person causing the obstruction or other nuisance, cannot excuse it by showing that, in other respects, and on the whole, his act has worked some advantage or improvement,—as that he has opened a better way, or has improved the navigation of a river etc. But in considering whether an act or omission which causes injury etc., in a slight degree, or in some extreme cases only, and as an uncertain and rare consequence, amounts to a public nuisance, the general exceptions contained in section 95 must be remembered.

“The general punishment provided for committing public nuisance is not applicable to acts which are otherwise expressly made punishable. This chapter contains special provisions, for the punishment of many acts as those above mentioned and to those thus specifically dealt with, the section 290 is inapplicable—"Morgan and Macpherson. A prosecution under s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code is not illegal on the ground that the proceedings have not been previously taken under Ch. XX of the Criminal Procedure Code. Rat. Un. Cr. C. 23. 269. Whoever unlawfully or negligently does any act which is, and which he knows or has reason to believe to be, likely to spread the infection of any disease dangerous to life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Comment.—To support a conviction under this section, it must be established not merely that the act committed by the accused person was prejudicial to health but that it was likely to spread the infection of some particular disease dangerous to life, and that the accused person knew or had reason to believe it to be likely to spread that disease. 7 C. P. L. R. Cr. 5. Soaking paddy in dirty water is not an offence under this section. 1 Weir. 227.
